PRESBYTERIAN HIST. SOC. OF CALIFORNIA

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

VERY heartily we wish all our kind readers a Happy New Year, seeking such an interest in their prayers, as they have in ours. The first month of the New Year will be largely a season of prayer. Gatherings for the purpose of waiting upon God have been arranged in various parts of the land, notably in connection with the great impending mission of the Free Churches, and also in response to the call of the Evangelical Alliance. Many accepted the invitation of the central Y.M.C.A. to devote the first day of the New Century to prayer, and the occasion was marked by deep solemnity and stirring of heart. Rev. F. B. Meyer, at the opening meeting, spoke helpful words on the rightful order in such gatherings, being—first worship, and then confession, followed by intercession. Particulars of some forthcoming assemblies for prayer will be found on page 22.

It would have been a happy thing had the New Century opened amidst pacific conditions. The outlook is very gloomy in several directions. The Transvaal War seems to have entered upon a new phase, and it is distinctly disquieting to learn that more troops have to be sent out to the Front. Nor does the Chinese tangle become any simpler. In spite of these things, however, we must maintain our courage and our hope. The Christian heart firmly believes that God is Master of all destinies; consequently, out of all this confusion order will yet emerge. None the less do we believe that by recent events He has been teaching the people that they are but men, and very helpless men too. But has the greater part of the Empire learned the lesson? We fear not, judging from the tone which prevails in our midst. One thing is certain, the Church must betake herself seriously to the work of intercession at the present juncture. The meetings of the Evangelical Alliance next week ought to be record meetings.

On page 17 we give the first paper of a series on Foundation Truths of the Gospel. As we remarked in a recent issue, the reading and thinking of the present day is superficial, and the teaching which people receive is in many places shallow and erroneous. We propose, therefore, to present truth in its positive aspects and vital relations. Dr. J. Guinness Rogers makes a bold stand for Gospel verity, and those who will follow him may be expected to show equal loyalty to Divine revelation.

We hope in future issues to give papers by Canon R. B. Girdlestone, Dr. Handley Moule, Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, Dr. Monro Gibson, Revs. F. B. Meyer, G. Campbell Morgan, and other leaders of religious thought. The subjects treated of will be such as God, the Fall, Sin, Redemption, Conversion, Faith, Regeneration, Justification, Sanctification, Growth, Scripture, &c. These articles will form an important body of Evangelical truth, and we hope that our readers will give us their kind and earnest help in extending their usefulness, first by prayer of the fervent sort that leads to effort, and then by commending THE CHRISTIAN to friends who are not at present readers of it.

Once more we remind our friends that communications for any of the correspondents whose names appear in our columns, may be addressed to our care. Donations in aid of the various branches of work which we bring before our readers, may also be sent on their behalf to our publishers, Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

It is a pleasure to report continued interest in our TWO-VERSION BIBLE scheme. The following letter, from a reader in a country town, will speak for itself:

> How can I be other than delighted with the handsome copy of the Holy Bible which you have sent in recognition of my efforts in securing twelve new subscribers for THE CHRISTIAN for one year? Apart from the advantage of combining the two versions in one, the book is quite a treat to handle. Please accept my thanks for the same.
> I may say that the friend who helped me to secure the required number will soon send along his claim; he only needs two or three more subscriptions to complete his dozen. Then, if we can find another who wishes to accept your offer, we mean to set him to work, aiding him as we may be able to find the required number.
> With best wishes, and praying that through this effort many may be won to a liking for better reading than has been their wont,—Yours, &c.

This is an encouraging letter; and we should be glad to hear of others proceeding in the same way—thus promoting the influence of our paper, and qualifying for the honorary acquisition of this most compact and useful edition of the Sacred Scriptures.

In connection with the great Mission which commences this month, it may be useful to recall the words of the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon concerning visitation:—

> I wonder whether we practise a personal observation of our hearers! London needs, not only house-to-house visitation, but room-to-room visitation. By personal intercourse alone can certain persons be reached. If I had a number of bottles before me, and were to play upon them with a fire engine, how much of the water would be lost! If I want to make sure of filling them, I must take them up one by one and carefully pour the liquid into them.

These homely and wise words will bear much pondering. If London is to be evangelized, it will never do to trust chiefly to advertising. The very best form of visitation is that in which persons seek to influence those with whom they have constant contact. The earliest disciples came to Jesus in this way (see John I.). We need more than bands of visitors. Every single Christian man and woman in London ought, in this Mission, definitely and persistently to seek those whom they know are out of Christ. Each of us has influence with some unconverted persons; let us use it to the utmost in the coming campaign. London cannot be touched, even lightly, unless the whole Church is at work in this matter.

We much regret to hear, from two or three separate sources, that certain musical people, members of choirs in churches where the Simultaneous Mission is to be held, are holding aloof from the Mission choirs on the openly avowed ground that "Sankey's hymns" are "beneath them." They have been used to more elaborate music, and they cannot descend to popular pieces. Such people sing for their own glory, and not to win souls. The Church will never be able to depend upon her workers until they are all consecrated persons. A ministerial correspondent tells us that a short time ago, when a vain choir-master criticized certain simple Gospel hymns as being "too common" for his trained choir, the minister replied:

> When you can compose hymns and tunes which bring men to Christ, and which a hundred millions of people are glad to sing, it will be time enough for you to turn critic.

It is interesting to find from Mr. E. W. Lowrey's paper in one of the current monthlies upon "The Creeds of Russia," that the hymn-book used by the Stundists—the largest Non-conformist body in that country, and one which is rapidly extending in almost every direction—is based largely upon the "Sacred Songs and Solos," by Mr. Ira D. Sankey. Some of these hymns, which have been so strikingly blessed in the tongue in which they were first written, and in others into which they have been translated, doubtless will now reach many a weary heart in that great land where there has been so much bitter persecution of such as gather together to worship Christ in simplicity and in truth.

A daily contemporary gives an account of the performance of the "Messiah" by a working people's choir of one hundred at the Excelsior Hall, in the East End of London, a few Saturday nights ago, which may, perhaps, be useful in pointing temperance reformers to one way in which the evil temptations of the gin shop may be combated. The writer, after commending the members of the choir, who, "after their hard day's work is over, attend practices and rehearsals," adds:

> If lovers of music in the West End could only see for themselves the packed audiences, mostly young men and women, that on Saturday night forsook the public-house and the streets, and sat listening to the magnificent music of the "Messiah," their purse-strings would surely slacken more readily in support of an enterprise that is doing so much to counteract the evils of the overcrowded and poverty-benumbed East. If the people are to be kept, for a while at least, from the drinking shops and evil surroundings, there must be something else provided in place of those meretricious attractions.

The Sun evening newspaper, after its week of special editing, has assumed its old aspect. The editor considers that, taken altogether, Dr. Parker's experiment was a success. In a frank and outspoken, yet sympathetic article, he goes on to say:

> Why is there not a daily religious newspaper in England? If Christianity is a fact, and not a cant, it ought to be a gold mine. Consider the vast number of professing Christians in this country. The actual membership of the English Free Churches would have to be counted by hundreds of thousands, I suppose. There, if these people are sincere and loyal, is a constituency ready made. The Churches are practically out of the daily newspapers.

We will not comment upon this at present save to say that it offers food for reflection, and we are glad to have the case thus set before us by an outsider. But the editor, in justifying the policy of the ordinary newspaper, remarks:

> The doings of the racecourse, to my mind, are as much news as the doings of the Stock Exchange and the street, Parliament and County Council.

It is just here that not only Christians, but all true patriots are compelled to make their stand. We are simply astonished that any educated man, who is in the position of an observer and a leader of thought, can class the doings of the racecourse with the affairs of Parliament and of the County Council.

We must speak with unmistakable plainness about this matter. Will any honourable man pretend that the racecourse is any sort of help to the moral life of this country? We are told that it encourages love of animals and keeps up a noble breed of fast runners. To say that the majority of the frequenters of the racecourse view the thing in this light is undiluted hypocrisy. For most men who patronize the turf the sole interest of the business lies in the gambling which is indissolubly bound up with it. It is this fact, so patent to all, that places the modern newspaper in a grave position, when it lays itself out to cater for the racing fraternity. For the daily paper is not content with merely recording the running of a race, it has its "Finals," its "Predictions," and its "Tips" before the race day, all of which are directly associated with betting. And since betting has become such a national curse—admittedly so by all grave authorities—the newspaper makes itself the auxiliary of a habit damaging to our national interests in the highest degree. Editors profess to lead their public in politics and in municipal life; where then is their courage when it comes to one of our great national cancers? The truth is—and this is the first and last word of the entire matter—betting news pays, and for money many men will sell both soul and country.

Lord Charles Beresford's article in the current North American Review seems to have created a considerable sensation, not only in the United States, but also upon the Continent, several foreign newspapers having dublished a résumé of it received by wire. Yet the accusations which the writer brings against the English and American nations are not new on this side of the Atlantic by any means, for preachers and journalists have for long cried out against that debased greed of gold which, in so many directions, is undermining our national life. Whether Lord Charles Beresford is right in looking to the democracy for the regeneration of the State, and for the salvation of the Anglo-Saxon race, is another matter, for unfortunately the masses, what with intemperance and gambling and other vices, themselves need elevation. We must look above the region of politics for help.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe has called attention to the need for, and the advantage of, practical organization in regard to mission work, and has stated that when twenty-four years ago he first entered a London parish, there was not in it a single missionary collecting box or an organized collector, whereas St. Paul's, Onslow Square, now contributed nearly £5,000 a year to foreign missions. Four of his curates and seventeen of his laymen have gone out to foreign work, three of them to martyrdom. The beginning was but a small collection upon one Sunday in the year, and the noble result was due entirely to organization and devotion. Such an example as this, with its encouragements and blessings, is indeed worthy of wide adoption.

For the third time within a brief period St. Paul's Cathedral has witnessed a farce which is nothing short of a scandal. The Prayer Book invites any person, who has a proper objection to offer to the ordination of a "deacon" or "priest," to make it at the time of the ordination; then, to quote from "the form and manner of the ordering of priests"—

If any great crime or impediment be objected, the Bishop shall surcease from ordaining that person until such time as the party accused shall be found clear.

Yet, when it is shown that two or three of the candidates for ordination belong to secret societies, and have been associated with illegal practices condemned by the bishops, no notice is taken—the Bishop suavely acknowledges the receipt of the objection, and proceeds immediately to ordain the parties referred to, though knowing them to be pledged to continue the sinister work of Romanizing the Church.

Much light is thrown upon social problems of the present day in Mr. Thomas Holmes' recently published singularly valuable volume of Pictures and Problems from the London Police Courts. There is much in the book to cause one to question the healthiness of much of our national progress, but there is more than sufficient to show that during the past half century we have indeed "made for righteousness." The mere fact that each London Police Court now has its missionary, and that there are over a hundred others at work in Courts throughout England and Wales, in itself points to a great development of Christian work. It is a branch of labour that has been largely and widely blessed in every direction. The great change which has been made in the prison has been accompanied by an improved treatment of the prisoner, but we have not yet reached a stage at which we can afford to rest, for if Christian philanthropy has done much to save the criminal, there is yet a huge work of sympathy and love before it in the name and for the sake of Christ.

It appears from the annual report of the Board School Free Dinner Fund, that during the last twelve months the committee provided dinners for no fewer than 130,287 half-starved children who are compelled to attend school. The figures are startling, revealing as they do the existence of a vast substratum of suffering underlying that poverty which is so painfully evident in all our large cities. It is, of course, open to question how far the State should go in the relief of those hungry little ones, but it is palpable that without the aid given by the charitable, whose contributions keep the Dinner Fund going, the enforced attendance would simply be cruelty under another name. Food first and education afterwards would appear to be the common sense order.

The recent return made to the Home Office by the Metropolitan Police Department shows that as regards offences of drunkenness in the year ending with October last, women were the principal offenders, nearly 800 more women than men having been charged. Over 100 of these were old offenders, who had been brought up ten times. It is not difficult to form an idea of the cost of this degradation to the community, especially when it is remembered that another sum of £20,000 is to be expended by the London County Council in providing further accommodation for eighty female inebriates at the Farmfield Reformatory. These national evils are, however, apparently of no moment in the eyes of the Government, as compared with the vested interests of the brewers and publicans.

In pleading for more humane treatment of the deserving poor in our workhouses, and at the hands of our Boards of Guardians, it goes without saying that there is plenty of room for a method of dealing with the professional tramp which shall take the burden of his support from the mistaken charitable, and from the community at large. It is, therefore, interesting to find that, in Germany and Switzerland alike, the tramp by choice is being compelled to maintain himself or starve; and that, in the latter country, the experiment is so successful that the authorities are able to report that a very large percentage of the "good for nothings" is being "won back to sobriety and honesty," by the measures employed. A recent paper on the subject in the Fortnightly Review certainly deserves the careful study of those who are interested in the question of the relief of the poor.

Reports from the Armenian provinces come in slowly, and nearly always with difficulty, owing to the system of espionage which prevails amongst Turkish officials. By way of Vienna another ghastly tale reaches this country of murder and outrage upon native Christians. One wretched fanatic boasts of having slain, with his own hands, 200 Christians. The account furnished by the Vienna correspondent of a London daily seems too dreadful to be true. We read of men crucified on trees, stakes being driven through their hands and feet; women outraged and mutilated, and children torn to pieces under the eyes of their parents. Others were dismembered, limb by limb, in the most fiendish manner; others again had "slices taken from their flesh, as steak is cut from an ox," before they were flung into the river. And so on.

The Servian Consul at Mitrovitza declares that 1,100 people have been murdered and 400 women outraged and placed in harems. And, it is added, "The Turkish authorities have shown utter indifference to the massacres." Well may the correspondent head his despatch, "Europe's Shame." Before this state of things we are helpless. Our treaties are obsolete documents. Turkey knows that Europe is too much occupied with other business to pay attention to their devil's game, and so hell is let loose.

Whatever may have to be set down to the debit side of Britain in her treatment of subject races during the nineteenth century, the historian of the twentieth will be obliged to speak of her services in giving Egypt a fresh lease of life and liberty as a large asset on the other side. To say that that unfortunate country has been rescued from political extinction by the work of British soldiers and statesmen, is but the barest truth.

The New York Outlook has a very interesting series of articles by Mr. Booker Washington, one of the most intelligent and high-minded coloured men in the States, entitled, "Up from Slavery." Among them is a striking account of his efforts to promote a racial friendship between Negroes and Red Indians. He set up his college at Hampton, with a group of Indians, seventy-five in number, he being the only person of another race in the place. Usually the Indian considers himself the superior of the white man, and so he doubly despises the Negro, who has submitted to a slavery to which he has never succumbed. After some careful experiments, however, a very cordial goodwill was established between teacher and pupils, and Mr. Washington sums up his experience in the following words:—

I was determined to succeed. It was not long before I had the complete confidence of the Indians, and not only this, but I think I am safe in saying that I had their love and respect. I found that they were much like any other human beings; that they responded to kind treatment, and resented ill-treatment. They were continually planning to do something that would add to my happiness and comfort.

Truly God has made of one blood all nations of men, and the way to the human heart is the way of service and goodwill

The New Century.

LAST week we presented our readers with a review of the century out of which we have just emerged, and which has been one of progress, socially and religiously, in so many ways. We naturally turn away from the past this week, and gaze "with eyes expectant" on the untrodden path of time and experience which opens before the race of men. It is well at such crises to "stand still" for awhile, that we may "go forward" more courageously and circumspectly.

In many ways we stand on a high vantage ground as compared with the beginning of the nineteenth century, but our privileges entail fresh responsibilities, and present new problems. A glance at these will be useful as a corrective and a tonic, while our ears are filled with mutual congratulations.

Truly it has been a wonderful century. Taking a survey of the lowest ranges of progress—those dealing with material things—we find that in the attainment of that sovereignty over nature to which man was destined from the beginning (Gen. i. 28) he has made swifter strides than during all the millenniums of his previous history. We have tapped many rich mines during these decades, but none so rich as the artesian well of physical force which has been released from the equilibrium of nature, and used like a stream to turn our engines, speed our ships, drive our dynamos, print our books and newspapers, convey our messages, and carry even our voice over hundreds of miles of distance. What with improved methods of water-power, steam, electricity, compressed air and other motor-forces, we can now skim the earth's surface, burrow beneath it, and almost fly over it,

WITHOUT MUSCULAR EFFORT OF ANY KIND.

These discoveries have not only multiplied the effective working energy of the human race, but have had a profound influence on human society. The facilities of travel have brought the ends of the earth together. The populations of the world have grown mobile, changeable, restless; not one man in four lives in the town in which he was born; humanity is pouring into the cities, and gyrating round their centres like a vast whirlpool.

Human relations are thus changing from the "static" to the "kinetic" form. Neighbours cease to know or care for each other; rich and poor have lost the old personal touch. There is thus a new set of social perils to meet, including those of overcrowding, poverty, immorality, and irreligion, that are a perpetual source of perplexity. The communal problems of our cities are indeed alarming; the remedies for which are only beginning to shape themselves.

We have had a century, not only of machinery and multitudes, but also of millionaires. Never have there been so many rich men, and never have they been so rich. It is an age nominally of the democracy, but really of the plutocracy; the common people are largely controlled, and they are in danger of being oppressed, by a few fabulously rich folk. And never have there been so many poor; 900,000 people in London alone are living below the "margin of poverty," i.e., belong to families with less than £1 1s. a week for income; and many of these are in a state of permanent abject want. These wide extremes are bridged, however, by an immense middle class that is enjoying a sufficiency of the needful things of life and comfort, and therein lies one of the social hopes of the future. The secret of making wealth has been mastered in the nineteenth century. The secret of its just and wise distribution is reserved for the twentieth to discover and overcome. This opens out to view the only machinery that can effectively deal with these social and economic questions. It is clear that civilization does not in itself supply adequate safeguards for its own well-being. Enlightenment and education may coexist with heartless selfishness and utter disregard for the well-being of others. Knowledge may be power, but it is not necessarily virtue. Some of the worst men come from the most cultured classes. And, therefore, we need another power, and a higher one, to lead the peoples into the way of life—viz., the development of

A CHRISTIAN SOCIAL CONSCIENCE.

A clear beginning was made in the old century in this direction. The sudden emergence of what was contemptuously called the Nonconformist Conscience is nothing less than the awakening of a part of the community to responsibilities affecting the whole. Much keen criticism and pungent satire have been expended on the methods in which those who manifested this new spirit attempted the gigantic task of social reform. Probably some mistakes were made, and a zeal beyond discretion was occasionally manifested. It is certain, however, that nothing short of the application to social questions of the principles already acknowledged as incumbent in the individual life will meet the problems teeming around us. Purity in the people's amusements; honourable dealing in commercial transactions; the same standard of justice and the same equality of treatment in regard to employés in the management of a joint-stock company as in an old-fashioned private business; the reduction of the temptations to drink and of the facilities for gambling; the election of men on our public bodies, local, municipal, and parliamentary, who shall be above suspicion of private ends in the management of public affairs—these are a few of the ways in which the social conscience needs quickening and renewing.

Here is a noble task for the Christian Church in the new century. It is true that the first business of the Church of Christ is to bring individuals to Him that they may be saved. To neglect this task would be fatal; it is primary and fundamental. But more and more are men social beings; as social beings they must be religiously dealt with. A young convert is in perpetual peril of falling back through the influence of a godless environment; let the whole social environment be purified, and his religion has a better chance to survive and conquer. We are being told on many hands, that under certain conditions of social degradation it is impossible for men to be truly religious. This, of course, is not true; but it contains enough truth to make it a crime against the Gospel itself to permit these conditions to continue. How are we to teach the millionaire the stewardship of wealth, except through religion? How bring home to the company-director the vague but far-reaching duties of his office, except by making him a good man? How are we to pervade Parliament with noble standards of legislation, and high political ideals, except by sending to it men who are soundly Christian at heart? The core and marrow of all religion is in the individual life, but its scope and function embrace the whole social environment.

The nineteeth century saw a splendid proclamation of the Gospel to individual men all over the world; it will be the task of the twentieth to continue this unflinchingly, and to care for their physical and moral well-being. The kingdom of Heaven is both "within" and "among" us.

A New Year Programme

(FROM AN ANCIENT MODEL).

BY REV. JAMES MURSELL.

"In the first year . . . in the first month." (2 Chron. xxix. 3.)

EVERY new beginning has the blessedness of hope about it, and, that hope may never die out of our hearts, God is always giving us new beginnings, fresh starts. Every morning is a clean page in the book of life: every week opens a fresh chapter in the story written there; and each new year begins a new volume.

But what shall we say when the New Year marks the beginning of another century? This is a new beginning that is not likely to occur to any living man again. Surely we should seek to make the most of it. How can we do so?

We might do worse than take a leaf from Hezekiah's book, and deal with ourselves at the beginning of the twentieth century as he dealt with the Temple at the beginning of his reign.

First of all, he reopened the Temple of the Lord, which had been closed. We are the temples of the Holy Spirit, but sometimes, like Ahaz, we close the place that should be holy, against the Holy One. Not wantonly, perhaps, as he did, but none the less really, we shut God out of our lives. We neglect prayer; we do not seek his guidance in the daily choices of life; our liking, not his blessed will, insensibly becomes once more our own rule of life; the old shrines of pleasure and of worldliness exercise their former fascination for us, and, without actually saying, "These be thy gods," we close our lives against the presence of our God. Hezekiah, "in the first year of his reign, in the first month, opened the doors of the house of the Lord."

can we make than that? Only let us do it at the very beginning of the first month of the first year of the new century—our whole lives flung wide open that the King of Glory may come in and rule us with the despotism which is perfect freedom.

The next thing Hezekiah did was to cleanse the open Temple. "Carry forth the filth out of the sanctuary." What a striking conjunction of ideas—filth in a sanctuary! I am afraid that it is commoner than we suppose. Closed houses grow dreadfully dusty; and lives from which the cleansing and sanctifying Spirit is excluded are soon filled with all manner of envious thoughts and covetous desires and unloving judgments. This is filth in the sanctuary of a Christian life. But when Christ is sanctified in us as Lord, a great change takes place. His entrance means a clean sweep of everything unholy. If we open the door for Him to enter, it is never long before He opens it again for the filth to be cast out. Let us begin the New Year with an act of spiritual cleansing. Let us square up everything concerning which our God and Saviour has a controversy with us. We must be clean who bear the vessels of the Lord. That was how Hezekiah began. "They brought forth all the uncleanness that they found in the Temple of the Lord."

Then Hezekiah offered sacrifices and whole burnt offerings. The sacrifices were sin offerings. They point us to the Cross of Christ, on which his soul was made an offering for sin. The burnt offering points to the Cross on which we are crucified with Christ. One speaks of his sacrifice for us, the other of the sacrifice He asks that we should make for his dear sake. The order of the ancient ritual is thus repeated in the spiritual sacrifices of the Christian life. If I think of consecration by itself—out of relation to Christ's sacrifice for me—I shrink from it. I say I cannot give up everything; but I am not asked to think of it in that way. I am asked to think of Jesus. God takes me by the hand and leads me to Calvary, where the Son of his love made a perfect sacrifice for sins, and for my sins. What can I do under such circumstances? I can only hasten away to the altar of burnt offering and fling myself upon it, crying, "Bind the sacrifice with cords to the horns of the altar." I can keep nothing back from such a Saviour.

That was precisely what happened to the burnt offering. There were no reserves. Nothing was kept back. Moreover, the sacrifice was burnt. The burning of a thing is the end of it. It sinks into the flames and disappears. So we are called to be burnt offerings, yet living sacrifices. Self comes to an end in the altar flames of Calvary. The love of Christ burns the world out with the swift ease of fire. We live on the altar; we die daily, so we live eternally; nevertheless, no longer we, but Christ liveth in us.

How glorious to begin the New Year and the New Century with a complete surrender to our Great High Priest and our Immortal King. "A happy New Year," we say. "When the burnt sacrifice began, then the song of the Lord began also." Is not that happiness? No song so blithe as that which carols from an utterly surrendered life; no joy so deep and true and lasting as the joy of being wholly and only Christ's. Will you not make experiment of it "in the first year and the first month," and on the first day of the month? What better programme could you have for New Year's Day, and every day that follows it until the last?

"Go Forward."

"Go forward" be your watchword in the War on which you've entered,
To faint or falter in the fight can only failure mean;
With such a Leader at your head, in whom your faith is centred,
'Twere base disloyalty to shirk the dangers that are seen.

"Go forward!" For your Captain in his holy Word commands it,
The soldiers of the King are bound his orders to obey;
The noble cause of righteousness and holiness demands it;
Success must crown your efforts, for his cause the world shall sway.

"Go forward" to the rescue of the helpless bankrupt debtors,
Now held in hopeless bondage as sin and Satan's slaves;
His blood has paid the ransom price, his power can break their fetters,
He died for their redemption, He lives their souls to save.

"Go forward" though the world deride and ridicule your action,
Though Satan and his host conspire your progress to impede;
For greater is your Leader than all the hellish
faction,
And daily strength is promised to supply your daily need.

"Go forward" in the conflict, in the cause
you've undertaken;
With prayer, and faith, and courage the battle half is won.
Be steadfast, true, and loyal, you shall never be forsaken;
The day is fast approaching to receive his glad "Well done!"

A. Walters.

Be Yourselves.

A NEW YEAR MESSAGE TO YOUNG MEN.

By Rev. GORDON B. WATT, Kilmarnock.

If you are wise, there are three things you must never attempt:—

1. Never attempt to be another.

That is imitation which in most cases will fail, and the failure will sadden and dishearten you.

2. Never attempt to do what is manifestly beyond your powers.

That is folly, conceit, the pride that always goes before a fall. Be content to do what your powers, your circumstances, make plain is possible. Get to understand what you can do, and do it.

3. Never attempt to go where God is not calling you, or refuse to go where He does call you.

That is presumption, that must lead to great spiritual and moral disaster. Do not go on what you call God's work if you are not certain that the Holy Spirit has said of you—"Separate Me this man for the work whereunto I have called him;" but when the call comes, let nothing hold you back.

Be yourselves on every occasion. Be true to your own individual bent. Use your special gift; and in everything that you put your hand and mind to do your best. Do not look at others, and say, "If I had these talents, or were in other circumstances, I would do so much more." God may not mean you to have these talents, or to be in those circumstances. Cultivate and use those you have. Give God the best in the circumstances in which He in his wisdom has placed you. You are not responsible for what you do not possess, but for what you have, and for using it to best advantage Godwards and earthwards.

Many are tempted to allow the talent or talents they undoubtedly have, and which might be exercised to great profit, to lie fallow because they have not those that in another shine out with brilliancy, forgetting that these talents have acquired their brilliancy through diligent exercise.

> Jesus bids us shine, with a clear, pure light, . . .
> You in your small corner, and I in mine.

Brilliant intellects are rare. The burden and heat of workaday life is borne by average men; and the work of God must be done by such. The man who will leave an indelible mark on the world's life may not fill the firmament of his village, or city, or church life with flashes of glory that make others say, "He is a perfect genius!" but he can traverse his life-path and do his God-given work in such a way as to make the world write over his tomb when he has gone a nobler epitaph—"The Hand that made him was Divine." And the man who moves in his God-appointed circle in loving surrender to Divine power, and in glad obedience to Divine laws will not go, even in this world, without his reward.

So this is a message to three kinds of persons:—

1. To the over-humble, who say, "I have no talents. I don't see that I can do anything;" and who in very truth usually do nothing—except perhaps to grumble. "What talents have I?" asked a desponding lady. "Well," was the answer, "at all events you have two—leisure and God's Word—time and truth. Let these be well used, and your crown will be bright.

2. To the over-sensitive, who say, "I have tried and failed." The people who have tried and not failed have yet to be born. The names that shall endure longer than sun and moon had conspicuous failures in their life-histories. Moses, David, Solomon, Peter, John, Paul, were great failures at various points of their characters. Do not let the devil dishearten you. Let failure call you to ever-increasing courage, and to strengthened determination that, God helping you, you will do what He calls you to do.

3. To the over-proud, who must be always first, and who are not content to fill any place. If a self-depreciating Christian, who has no spiritual muscle and backbone, is useless in God's work, a self-appreciating Christian, one who never can forget himself, is even worse. He who is for ever jealous of his rights, who, if he cannot be king, will not be the king's servant, may prove as great a failure as any.

WHAT DOES THE MESSAGE MEAN?

(1) There must be consecrated individualism. (2) You must be constantly on duty. (3) There must be the conscious dependence on the Holy Spirit.

Be yourselves. Yes, but only your true selves as you are in living union with the Holy Ghost. He will never make you another. He will never take the talents of some other one, and use these through your mind, tongue, and body; but He will take your lives, that are holy things, as they come from the hands of the great God Himself, and He will turn out vessels that for beauty and finish and usefulness will outshine the fairest creation of man.

In—

A NEW CENTURY HOMILY.

No two letters of our alphabet spell a more suggestive word. Shall we spend a few moments of the New Year in considering it? It is impossible to indicate all its allusions, a large volume would not contain them, but each reader with curious interest will involuntarily add his quota, varying as widely as his circumstances and cast of thought.

The excitement outside the town hall as the names of the successful candidates in a county or borough election quiver on the straining ears of the crowd; on the quay as the eagerly watched-for steamer touches the home land; on the railway platform as the train brings sorely-missed friends back once more—all hinges on the pivot of this one word. From the time when conscious life begins, and the child is clasped in the arms of its mother with speechless joy for its birth into the world, until the day when conscious existence on earth is over and requiescat in pace is sighed over its remains, this word more than any other, is associated with its history, and surely it may serve to point some moral for us who to-day are awed into solemnity by our recent entrance into a new century. Those to whom these landmarks of time are full of significance, long for a heartening word as they face an event which can only occur once in their mortal existence, the passing of a milestone unique—with rare exceptions—to all. To such I would offer two mottoes, enshrining this tiny word—"In Christ," "Christ in you."

There is in human nature a strong gravitation towards the "chief seats" in life; anything that promises enjoyment or privilege needs no advertisement to ensure patronage; nay, the eager question is continually propounded, "Who will show us any good?"—but the strange twist in our moral nature is nowhere so evident as in concerning the thing that good is. The ruins of the broken cisterns, that men have so laboriously and disappointingly hewn out for themselves, strew the whole course of life's road, and yet the weight of human influence still goes to swell the number of these fruitless toilers. It is surely time for those who have found free access to the Fountain of living waters, and there slaked their thirst, to speak boldly and definitely of the only true Source of satisfaction; and may it not be compressed into the two words, "In Christ"?

Metaphors crowd upon us wherewith to illustrate this position of privilege, but we will select only one, the Englishman's castle—his home. The world is full of wayfarers who know nothing, alas! in its true sense, of this loveliest and most expressive of words; but it holds, too, many favoured ones who are made brave and strong to bear the buffeting and disappointments and coldness outside by anticipation of the comfort and provision and companionship of home at eventide. We have seen the tired business man coming home, his step growing more elastic as he nears his gate, his face brightening at sight of the outrushing bairns; and the sound of the closing door, as it is eagerly latched by impatient young hands when they have dragged father in, is vocal with the refrain of "Home, Sweet Home."

And we speak that we do know when we take this type of earth to image the true home of the soul in Christ. The year just ended, how full it has been of "fightings without," with all sorts and conditions of foes, ay, and of "fightings within" as well! our own hearts furnishing the scene of the direst conflicts. Without, sorrows, bereavements, crosses; within, murmurings, doubts, fears, disheartenments; but all hushed into a great calm when we have heard the sweet voice of the Comforter, saying, "Return unto thy rest;" and, like the weary dove, we have come to the window of the true ark, and a Greater than Noah has put forth his gracious hand, and "pulled us in." To some of us this experience has been so real that it would be easy and delectable to dwell upon it, but for lack of space. We can only say that as the storm outside and our eagerness for its shelter, so the peltings of life's rain in the past year have had a similar effect.

But after all this is but the outer court of privileges. In the earthly home, with all its sweetness and light, there may be many a sorrow and heartache. Affection has no bolt strong enough to exclude sickness, or ignorance, or poverty. So we gladly open our doors to the bringers of supplies, the skilful doctor, or lawyer, or teacher, or wealthy friend. And thus we, who have entered the Christian life with all its privileges—who are "in Christ"—need something more. We need, in a fuller sense than we have perhaps yet experienced, to have "Christ in us." He has been "formed in us;" but our weak faith and perverse neglect of the conditions of spiritual hygiene have hindered his grand purpose of the life more abundant. If He is to "dwell in our hearts by faith," we must to all the processes by which every avenue of our soul shall be opened to his presence. And then what a difference! For the sinfulness and infirmity of our nature, a great Physician; for its perplexity, a Counsellor; and for all its sorrow, a Balm. Into our poor rayless lives the Light of the world would come, and then it will no longer seem hopeless to "let our light shine." When, in his first recorded sermon, the Lord Jesus Christ set this high standard for his disciples, it was that his Father in heaven might be glorified in his children. Earthly parents of culture and position are humiliated if their children are ignorant and unmannerly, and our Father has had much discredit and disappointment, because of the selfishness, and unlikeness to Him, of those who profess and call themselves Christians. But "let the Master in," and give Him full sway, and then see if there will not follow a rapid improvement, both in manners and in morals—a change from the inefficiency of mere sentiment to the potency of principle. And a church thus vitalized, made up of Christians bright with the outshining of Christ's courtesy, and tact, and self-sacrifice, would speedily regenerate the face of society.

May I close with a most earnest and affectionate greeting to my many friends amongst the readers of THE CHRISTIAN? M. C. F.

The Angel of Hope.

Days are like flowers that quickly fade,
And where no fruit is seen,
Our hearts are sad as we turn the spade
And think what might have been.

But we turn our back on the year that's dead,
And lo, on the mountain height,
The Angel of Hope with banner red
Holds out a garment white.

And he gives to each a crown of gold,
To be set with gems of praise,
And our hearts are glad with joy untold,
As we follow the Lord always.

A Mountain Message.

HAST thou seen the Alpen glow,
Gilding those tall crests of snow,
Shining from God's throne above,
Witness of his wondrous love.
Herald of the glory bright
That shall gild our home in Light?

Every eye with steadfast gaze
Rests on those enchanting rays.
Earthbound thoughts are hushed and stilled,
And each earnest spirit thrilled
With new inspiration given,
Through those opened gates of Heaven.

So may Christ's bright rays Divine
On our hearts and spirits shine,
That we, pure as Alpine snow,
May with love and ardour glow,
Witnessing from hour to hour
To Christ's wisdom, love and power!

May that soul-inspiring view
Point to glories ever new,
Where from our Redeemer's face
Rays of beauty, joy, and grace
Thrill our souls for evermore
While we serve Him and adore!

"Rest in the Lord" (Ps. xxxvii. 7).

R EST in the Lord: yes, I will rest in Thee,
E ach day will rest in thy deep sympathy;

A New Year's Thought.

WATCHMAN, what of the night?
The year has past, its moments flown,
The retrospect is thine alone,
Have tares or wheat thy pathway strown?
The Master looked for fruitful days,
For words of love, and songs of praise,
Say, has He thus beheld thy ways?

Watchman, what of the day?
The coming year, with golden light,
Is dawning on thine eager sight;
Dispelling with its beams the night.
And how wilt thou its moments spend?
To whom thy choicest talents lend?
Ah, whither shall thy footsteps tend?
The Master gave Himself for thee,
That thou in life's glad way might be,
And hear his accents, "Follow Me."
Then follow Him from day to day,
In service sweet, and songful lay,
Until all time shall pass away.

An Abiding Promise.

"I will never leave thee nor forsake thee" (Heb. xiii. 5).

IN thy love, O blessed Saviour,
Thou hast hidden from mine eyes
What the future has to bring me,
All that yet before me lies;
All the joys and all the sorrows,
Dangers countless as the sand,
What thy wisdom shall appoint me,
What thy love for me has plann'd.

In the past thy hand hath led me,
Guided and controll'd my way,
Never hast Thou failed to give me
Strength sufficient for the day.
Only when I failed to trust Thee,
When I on my strength relied,
Did the way seem hard and dreary,
Was the promised grace denied.

So, dear Saviour, looking forward,
I will on thy promise rest,
Take whate'er thy love appoints me,
Knowing that thy plan is best.
Every day afresh I'll yield me
To thy wise, unerring choice,
Rest in knowing Thou art with me,
In thy presence I rejoice.

The Simultaneous Mission.

WRITING to us as president of the Metropolitan Free Church Federation, Rev. F. B. Meyer says:—"In the quiet of Christmas my heart turns with great anxiety towards the approaching Mission. We have completed our arrangements, so far as we can, but how little it all amounts to! The trains are laid, but how useless without the Divine current! The wood is placed in order, but oh for the Heaven-sent fire! I feel impelled to ask all Christian people, of whatever name, to unite constantly during the next three weeks, in continued and earnest prayer, that God may come, and not keep silent and call the earth.

The holding of a large number of meetings, and the dissemination of the invitation of the Gospel to vast multitudes, will be good! but is not quite all that I am longing for. I have had a vision of the life of the Metropolis being sensibly affected by the consciousness of the nearness of God. That the very atmosphere should be weighted with the sense of eternity; that men should be convicted of sin, as they go about their ordinary duties; that workmen should lay down their tools, because of their soul-anguish; that women should be arrested amid their household duties, as by a Divine hand; this would be an indisputable proof of the might and glory of the Spirit of Pentecost. To have our places of worship filled by anxious crowds, attracted not by advertisements, nor by the names of the missioners, but by a hunger that refuses to be satisfied with anything less than Christ, this would send a thrill of hope throughout the entire Church of Christ on earth. Would that we might have to prolong the mission indefinitely, that the reaper might overtake the sower, and that all the boats, which have gone forth to fish, might be filled to the water's edge!

Let us specially gather, from all parts, for united prayer, at the Queen's Hall, from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m., on Monday, January 21.

Mr. Meyer also writes: "Rev. J. Landel Jones has had a great burden laid on him about the necessity of more prayer for this coming mission. He has spoken briefly, with great effect, at several conferences over which I have presided in London. It seems now, as if he could render good service in addressing larger audiences. I would suggest that where Free Church councils are holding sessions for united prayer, it would be well worth while defraying Mr. Jones' travelling expenses to secure his presence. His address is 1, Craigerne Road, Blackheath, S.E.

The Coming of Christ.

THE following definite truths—why the coming of Christ the second time should occasion happy hopes—may be helpful to young students of prophecy, perhaps to others.

He will appear, apart from sin, to them that wait for Him, unto salvation, i.e., unto the fulness of that which we have already in measure.

At present, if we die, we shall be absent from the body and at home with the Lord, at rest for a little time; and to depart, and to be with Christ, will already be very far better than to abide in the flesh, though the latter may be needful for others. But when the Lord Jesus comes again, He will fashion anew the body of our humiliation, and it will be conformed to the body of his glory, intrinsically incorruptible, and immortal.

Also—and is it not important so to view the coming blessings?—they will be of a collective character; not, as when we die, individual only. He will present the Church to Himself. It will be a time of union and of re-union. Above all, Christ Himself is coming to be glorified in his saints, and to be marvelled at in all them that believe.

His Church will greatly rejoice and aid in the future blessings to the Jew, and to mankind generally, when the kingdom is set in order on the earth. But our own special place will be in an allotted portion in "My Father's" house, in the sphere prepared by the Lord for us. This will be common to all Christ's flock; but those who have overcome, as indicated in Revelation ii. and iii., will also receive according to the individual promise to the victorious.

Other Lands.

Letters from Spain.—1.

A VISIT TO FIGUERAS.

IT is always pleasant to exchange a weeping sky for a sunny land, especially if in that land there is a hospitable welcome. We left London on Friday morning, December 7, and on Saturday evening found ourselves in the congenial atmosphere of the Evangelistic Mission at Figueras. A flood of light streamed into our room, when on Sunday morning we prepared to accompany Pastor Don Luis Lopez Rodriguez and Miss Kerr, one of his lady-helpers, to a village in the proximity of the town. The priest of Vilabertrand, to which the tartana takes us, had years ago cursed the pastor's horse, threatening to excommunicate any person who would dare to give it shelter or food. This did not prevent the proprietor from starting a school in the village, which, notwithstanding multiplied oppositions on the part of the Romish Church, continues to be well attended. The Sunday-school service was bright and breezy. From the quick replies of the children, and their hearty singing, one could easily see that they were life and soul in it.

On our way home we met men and women, and other tartanas returning from the market at Figueras. There are no free week-day afternoons for the working people in Spain, and as to the trading class, it can be free only on the Sunday afternoon. The programme for the day is as follows: An early Mass, then shopping or selling, a walk or a nap in the afternoon, and ball, theatre, or some other amusement in the evening. In passing, we notice a group of men playing cards in the front of a house, and are informed that the curse of this country is not drink, but gambling. Otherwise the Catalonians have a great deal of stamina, and many features in common with the Scotch. They are hard working, sober, active, reliable, and independent. The women, poor as they are, are never seen with a rent in their garments, which they mend up with patches of all shapes and colours, so that one wonders sometimes what the dress may originally have been.

In the afternoon we attend a meeting similar to that in the morning, only much larger, at the Mission Hall, Figueras. Many adults are present. A large gathering assembles at the evening service. As in the times of Jesus and the apostles, it is the poor that listen most willingly to the Gospel and obey its commands. For the rich and well-to-do an open confession of Christ means severed connections, hatred, loss of position and influence—a sacrifice that is not easily borne. Consequently, though Señor and Madame Rodriguez enjoy the respect and good-will of all liberal-minded people in the province of Gerona, and have won many a personal friend for themselves, they count no open converts among the well-to-do classes. Their own medical adviser, for some time doctor at the Medical Mission, retired from the post, yielding to the entreaties of his wife, who mourned the loss of friends and practice on account of his connection with the Protestant cause.

Pastor Rodriguez—with the help of his wife and a staff of twenty-two workers (including two doctors) and four students who are being trained for the mission—works the whole of the province of Gerona as far as he is able. Nine meetings are held every week in the various villages. Where, as in the city of Gerona, no permission is granted for public services, meetings are arranged in private rooms. Four itinerary evangelists are constantly occupied in spreading the Gospel by booklets and tracts, from village to village and house to house, to the annoyance and alarm of the priests, who ask the children such questions as "Why are the Protestants worse than the devil?" The poor little ones do not know. "Because," says the priest, "we can drive away the devil with the sign of the cross, but not the Protestants."

Most enjoyable were our excursions to various places where the meetings take place. At Llansà, a quaint fisher village, the resort of the workers during the hot months, we were introduced at the inn to a dear old granny, ninety years of age, who said to Madame Rodriguez, "Doña Emilia, I have come to the time when Jesus is my only consolation." She was at first much opposed to the Protestants, but little by little became a fast friend. One night, after the pastor had retired to bed, the door opened. Somebody was feeling the way to his bed. "Who is that?" he asked. "Only I," replied old grannie. "I want to tell you that we are going to kill our pig to-morrow. Won't you stay?" The killing of the pig is a great event among the Spanish peasantry, to which only intimate friends and those they wish to honour are invited. The invitation was politely declined. A few hours later another noise aroused him out of his sleep. Grannie again. "What is the matter?" "As you cannot stay with us, I thought we would send you some sausages to Figueras." "Well, thank you, but you might have told me that to-morrow instead of disturbing me now, especially as I have to be up at four o'clock." At three the same intruder once more. Don Luis began to feel impatient. "For pity's sake, let me have a little sleep." "I come to tell you," said his visitor, "that I should like to become a member of your church." Instantly the pastor was as fresh as a lark. "Do you know what this means?" "Oh yes!" she knew well, but did not wish that anybody in the village should know of it. To this the pastor refused to agree. "Be on the Lord's side in broad daylight, and not like Nicodemus in the dark of the night. 'He that confesseth Me before men, him will I also confess before my Father who is in heaven.'" The old lady had the courage of an open confession and has remained faithful ever since.

Wherever we went, the people flocked to hear the preaching. Hard-working, tired out men and women stood patiently for a whole hour, finding no room to sit down. At San Pedro Pescador, the vicarage is opposite the meeting-room. The former priest used to sit on the balcony and listen to the Gospel, he even told his parishioners that he had no objection to their attending the Protestant meetings; the teaching there was good, and he did not think Mass necessary to salvation. Fervent prayers were offered on his behalf, and hope of his conversion cherished; but one day he disappeared, nobody knowing to this day how or where; and another priest took his place—a bitter enemy of the Gospel.

The son of the first convert here (Marguerita, a true Christian) married a Roman Catholic girl. Shortly after his marriage his sleep became disturbed by a strange whistling at night, and on opening his eyes he saw fantastic figures on the wall of the room. His wife endeavoured to convince him that this was a sure sign that he was under the power of Satan. The young man, too ignorant to explain all this to himself, began to feel uneasy. Pastor Rodriguez, however, soon found out that the priest, who used to visit the wife in the absence of her husband, had ingeniously contrived the whistling, and was the author of the phosphoric trick. The pastor's interference at once caused both annoyances to cease.

At La Escala, another picturesque village, we were told by the friendly innkeeper that a painter employed on some renovations in the church was recommended by the priest to take lodgings at the inn, but to keep himself aloof from the bad men who sometimes frequented the place. Naturally enough the man was curious to know who they were. When therefore Don Alexander, the pastor's brother, appeared, mixing freely with those present, the landlord pointed him out to the painter as one of the bad sort, according to the priest. "This a bad man!" was the astonished reply. "Why, I have been watching him all the evening, and he did not swear once, nor gamble. I am sure what the priest said cannot be true." W. M.

Missionaries in China.

DAYS OF REFRESHING.

THAT the children of God in China have been passing "through the waters," that many have been called to die, while others (native and foreign) are still "filling up that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ," is now of world-wide interest and sympathy.

There is one only just laid to rest (Mrs. Glover), others hanging between life and death, while many through life will bear in their (perhaps weak) bodies "the brand marks of the Lord Jesus." We who have been preserved from danger are filled with gratitude to God for the upholding strength that has sustained, and doth still sustain us, in answer to the prayers of his people.

We have now been seeking God every morning in the Union Church since September 10, soon after Mr. M. Beauchamp arrived from the West. These meetings have been very representative; and there were manifested such a oneness and unity of the Spirit, and such a breaking down of barriers as might be expected at such a time. We see by THE CHRISTIAN (September 20) that you are longing for a revival at home. Oh, that it may be so! Would to God a mighty wave might break us down, and melt us together: such a power as would reach out to heathen lands, and bury for ever the shame and reproach of Christianity amongst them.

One week was given to a convention for the deepening of spiritual life. Mr. Barclay Buxton was over from Japan for two weeks, and the Lord was present to cleanse, restore, and renew his people. In fact there are some of us just now more concerned about our own spiritual state before God than to get back to work.

Jesus has won his triumphs in the hearts of many, and we would rather have had this time with God in Shanghai than all the gold of the universe. Our experiences in China have loosened us from ties of earth, and we are now free to go forward WITH GOD. If these martyrdoms, this awful havoc and suffering, will not move men's hearts, what will? Many of us feel now God must have his own way with us at all costs. Anything rather than being left a dry stick in the vineyard of the Lord, anything rather than to profane God's holy name among the heathen (Ez. xxxvi. 20-21) by unloving words or deeds.

Cease not to cry to God to prepare our hearts and "make bare his holy arm" in our midst. This place is teeming with souls, and the Europeans are so given over to godlessness as to be almost unreachable. Out-and-out English, French, German, Japanese, and Portuguese tracts would be invaluable, for the nations never were so crowded into this place as now. Christian activities are going forward; never were there so many lightbearers.

JANIE G. A. BLANDFORD.

Shanghai, November 1, 1900.

MISREPRESENTATION OF CHRISTENDOM.

In a letter to Zion's Herald, of Boston (Peking, October 22, 1900), Bishop Moore calls earnest attention to the state of affairs created through the presence in China of the European armies. "The great Christian nations of the world," he says, "are being represented in China by robbing, raping, looting soldiery. This is part of China's punishment; but what will she think of Christianity? Of course, our soldiers are the best behaved, but there are desperate characters in every army."

Costa Rica.—Rev. Stephen Witt, of the Jamaica and Central America Baptist Mission, writes from Port Limon, Costa Rica: "The work in Costa Rica goes steadily forward. There is much to contend with. Drinking, gambling, and immorality abound. Home life there is none in Port Limon, rooms about 10ft or 12ft square being the only habitations for two, three, or four men. There is no hall or any place to which they can go but the drink shops, which are the festering sores of the town. I want to build a room which will be always open, where good literature can be provided, and which can be made a means of counteracting temptation; £100 would build and furnish such a room."

The McAll Mission.

THE work in France has been going forward with encouragement this year; the Great Exhibition was an occasion for preaching the Gospel to many coming from all parts of the city of Paris, who had never had the opportunity, probably, of hearing it before; and the great distribution of Gospels and tracts made from the hall taken at the Porte Rapp, as well as by the different societies and by others, was a powerful means of making known the truth of the Lord Jesus.

We have had many signs of blessing given us, both in Paris and in the provinces. The work of Gospel Temperance has made progress, and the opening of a temperance resthurant in the Faubourg St. Antoine, immediately opposite to the lately-formed Université Populaire, has proved a great success.

The work of the Mission Boat, now on the Marne, has been as formerly most hopeful, the people coming out eagerly to the meetings and thus giving the opportunity of taking the Gospel to villages and hamlets entirely without any such teaching. The distribution of Gospels and tracts among these populations has also been steadily carried on. We hope that the second boat will soon be ready, and will begin its work on the rivers and canals hitherto unvisited by us.

A few weeks ago we received the gift of 10,000 copies of the newly-issued French "marked" Testament. This has come as a great boon to us, and the Testaments have been received with great delight by workers in France. We have already scattered more than half of the 10,000 (given by an unknown friend in America), and we know that they are being greatly blessed. A letter to hand this morning from Mr. Charles D. Terrell, working at La Rochelle, says: "One of the most interesting branches of our work has opened up through our taking a house for five weeks this summer just outside La Rochelle. Finding ourselves surrounded by farmhouses dotted about here and there, we began visiting them with tracts and Gospels, and were most agreeably surprised to find ourselves exceedingly well received everywhere. Just then, and most opportunely in every way, came the gift of the 'marked' New Testaments from an American friend, and these have been, indeed, a god-send to our work. I took a number of them round, leaving one at each cottage and farm, and promising to call again and find out if they were appreciated. The results have been most encouraging. In four of the houses they tell me that they are reading some verses or a chapter regularly each night before going to bed. A young man to whom I gave one carried it always in his pocket, and whenever he had a few minutes off work at the factory used to pull it out and read it. He has now gone off for his three years' military service, but he wrote me the other day that he was still reading his Testament. Quite accidentally, or perhaps I should say rather by the Lord's arranging it for me, I met another young man last Sunday evening at La Pallice, who proved to be the bosom friend of the young man mentioned above. He said that since his friend had left him for his military service, he had so missed the reading they had together, and would I give him a book too. The above are people who have never seen the Testament before."

The needs of the country are great—greater than ever, we may say, and we once again commend the work here to the Lord's people, that they may share with us in the joy of carrying the Gospel message where it is unknown, and not rejected. W. SOLTAU.

Rue Godot-de-Mauroy, Paris.

Rome.—Miss A. Lawrie, deaconess, secretary of the Unione Cristiana delle Giovanette, 107, Via Sistina, Rome, writes:—"Our Y.W.C.A. and Home are now fairly established, and the name is on the walls of the house. We are being blessed, and the need of English workers is great. Two young ladies have come out from England at their own expense, but we require two other, whole-hearted. Knowledge of the language is not indispensable."

The late Mr. W. T. Paton.

THE "W. T. Paton Memorial" at Manmad, India, was opened on October 11. The buildings, which are most suitable for the work, for which they are designated, of the Zenana Bible and Medical Missions, consist of a Mission House, and a block of houses for widows. An orphanage will shortly be added with accommodation for 150 girls, who will be sheltered and cared for. Rev. F. G. Macartney writes: "At 4 p.m. we had a bright service of dedication, conducted by Rev. W. A. Roberts, C.M.S., the Society's hon. sec. in Bombay. In solemn prayer the house was dedicated to the service of God, and the blessing of the Holy Trinity invoked upon the workers and their work in this new undertaking. Rev. W. A. Roberts then gave a short address. The memorial aspect of the service was kept in view, and we are sure that the many friends of the late W. T. Paton will rejoice with us in India that an institution worthy of such a name is now quietly, but effectively, carrying on its Christ-like work in this needy district."

Speaking of the orphans at present in the Home, Mr. Macartney adds, "To those who had seen these famine waifs when they were brought in from Ahmedabad three months ago, the change that had been wrought seemed marvellous."

The buildings have cost £1,400, and there is still a debt of £550 remaining on them.

"Daily Light" and Daily Need.

IN a letter from Shanghai, dated Oct. 31, Dr. Lillie Saville, one of the London Missionary Society's workers in Peking, writes:—

Others besides myself who are readers of "Daily Light" have, I know, been frequently struck by the remarkable way in which the selection of texts for the day have so often fitted in to one's needs. Has it not seemed many times that that page was just for me for to-day?

During the siege of the Legations in Peking this summer, we noticed the same coincidence. Lights were not allowed at night for fear of confusing the sentries; we used to strike a match or light a candle behind a box where its light would not shine out, and read our "Daily Light" together before going to bed.

I think you would like to look up some of the dates:—June 9, evening. Decided to abandon mission property and take refuge in the British Legation—"The triumphing of the wicked is short."

June 14, morning. After a night in which we watched fires all over the city—missions being destroyed—and knew that massacre of native Christians was going on—"As the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ."

June 19, evening. At 4 p.m., ultimatum had been received from Chinese Government that all foreigners must leave the city under Chinese escort—"Gold tried in the fire."

June 20, evening. At 4 p.m., Chinese had opened fire upon us. A professor in university, lately a missionary, been killed. The war had begun—"Thou compassest my path and my lying down."

August 14, morning. A night of severe firing on all sides. At midnight a distant sound of cannon announced the approach of the relief force—"The joy of the Lord is your strength."

August 14, evening. The Allied Troops entered Peking in the afternoon—"He hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure."

There were many other instances of personal and private interest. The above would appeal to everyone.

Many of us, too, read the Psalms with very different interest, especially those from Psa. lii. One missionary committee telegraphed home to their Board Psa. cxxiv. 7 as their message of deliverance after the arrival of the troops.

Port Said.—The latest development in connection with the Sailors' Rest is that a small steam launch has been secured, which enables Mr. Locke to visit more frequently the ships lying at a distance, and best of all to gather the sailors for services, and take them back again to their ships. In the goodness of God this has been purchased on terms allowing one year for the completion of payment. The evening Bible readings, with prayer and hymns, bear a "home circle" character, and are much enjoyed by many of the men.

Jewish Girls in Austrian Convents.

MRS. OEGERET (widow of the well-known Jewish missionary) sends us the following statement of facts, which have come within her own knowledge:

One afternoon last December, a young girl between thirteen and fourteen years of age, belonging to a well-to-do Jewish family in Cracow, went out with a Christian servant, and did not return. The father at once applied to the proper authorities, and his daughter was traced to a convent. The official who was sent to claim her, was informed by the lady superior that their intention was, if possible, to detain the child till the completion of her fourteenth year, which would allow of her being baptized legally. No interview was allowed, the nuns always saying that the girl wished no meeting—whereas the father maintained that she was heard crying and begging to be taken to her parent.

The case was taken to official after official, till access was obtained to the Emperor in person. The nuns kept sending the girl from convent to convent to frustrate the inquiries of the police, and have till now been successful. It is currently reported that one day while the matter was under discussion at the Polish Club, Vienna, the Minister for (not Governor of) Galicia practically pronounced the pursuit hopeless by declaring that "at the gates of the convent all worldly power ceases." Our correspondent says this is no isolated case, but that readers of the Neue Freie Presse are familiar with the regularly recurring cry of indignation when Jewish girls are found to have disappeared in similar fashion. The Clerical organs invariably announce that they have fled from their friends; but the Anti-Clerical journals as consistently maintain that they are only kept by force.

AFTER two previous gatherings, it is believed, that by the meetings of this year, the Convention at Malta has been established as an annual institution. It was well and carefully organized, and joined in heartily by people of widely different thought. The meetings on the first day were fairly well attended, addresses being given by a naval officer, a naval chaplain, and a ship's carpenter. A large number of soldiers were present, one of whom, we trust, was truly converted. On the second day, being favoured by the weather, and also in answer to many prayers, the numbers were much larger, and a spirit of intense earnestness characterized the meetings, the last of which was specially evangelistic. We felt that the Holy Spirit was striving with many, and were greatly cheered when several decided for Christ. The subject, "The way of salvation, and how to walk in it," was well handled by the different speakers, and we feel sure that it will be far-reaching in its results, beyond anything we can see.

The singing was bright and cheery, and our hearts were gladdened at the sight of so many saldiers and sailors drawn together for such a purpose. H. L.

Hungering for the Word.

MY appeal on behalf of the Paulicians of Southern Hungary, who desire to have the New Testament in the tongue in which they were born, published in your issue of November 22, called forth generous response. Contributions were sent to me, to Dr. Baedeker, and to the office of the National Bible Society of Scotland, in Edinburgh. From a reader of THE CHRISTIAN in Bath I received £1, which I cannot acknowledge otherwise than through your columns. Friends in Prague, of the Free Reformed Church, have undertaken to bear the entire expense of translating and printing one Gospel. They will probably choose the Gospel of Mark, the Gospel of Matthew being already in the press. This is equivalent to a contribution of £19. Of the whole sum required—about £231—we want now only about £47. It will cheer the hearts of the dear people, who are truly hungering for the Word, to hear that the work goes forward.

Rudolf Quai, 8, Budapest. ANDREW MOODY.

Rev. and Hon. William Talbot Rice, M.A.,

RECTOR OF ST. PETER-LE-BAILEY, OXFORD.

REV. AND HON. WILLIAM TALBOT RICE, M.A., Rector of St. Peter-le-Bailey, Oxford, is a son of a late excellent Evangelical clergyman, who, before he succeeded to the family title and became Lord Dynevor, was familiarly known and beloved as "Rice of Fairford." Lord Dynevor did much good spiritual work, and was particularly zealous in the cause of foreign missions, being an association secretary of the C.M.S. This warm interest for "the regions beyond" is a special feature in the work of the present rector of St. Peter-le-Bailey, and the cause of foreign missions in Oxford owes much to his untiring efforts, especially in connection with the late Missionary Loan Exhibition, the influence of which, it may safely be said, will never pass away.

Educated at Eton, Mr. Rice in due time proceeded from that famous school to Christ Church, Oxford, where, in 1884, he graduated with honours in the Theological School. He then proceeded to Wycliffe Hall, where, he says, he "learnt very much from Canon Girdlestone," who was at that time the principal. Mr. Rice was ordained in 1885, being thus equipped with the very best education his country could give him. But, better than all, he was the happy possessor of a spiritual heritage, and from very early years manifested that love for souls and zeal in Christ's service which had characterized his father, and which now stamps Mr. Rice, not only as a pastor, but as an evangelist.

In his early days, when a boy at Eton, he began to work by giving away tracts during the holidays. At Oxford, in his undergraduate days, he had a district in Headington Quarry, and also helped in lodging-house work. During the summer vacations, in company with Mr. Arrowsmith, he assisted in the Children's Special Service Mission, and it was at these services, on the sand and elsewhere, that he learnt to speak in the open-air, so prominent a feature in his subsequent labours.

He began his regular ministry with Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, at Portman Chapel, and under him he had ample scope for work. With open-air services every Sunday evening, summer and winter, his experience at Oxford stood him in good stead, and his love for young men showed itself in a Young Men's Society which he started.

Early marked out for promotion, he was appointed in 1888 to the important parish of All Saints', Plumstead. The parish was already in good working order, being well organized, and the congregation excellent. Mr. Rice made admirable use of the material at his disposal to extend the work so well begun. A Young Men's Missionary Society was followed by a Youths' Institute; then missionary meetings for children and adults; then a Gleaners' Union, with some 126 members; and yet again a Young Women's Christian Association. One special feature of his work at Plumstead was a Sunday evening meeting for boys, which might well be imitated by others. He had an average attendance of between seventy and a hundred. Such a meeting helped to solve the problem of keeping hold of the older lads.

Following the example set by their vicar at Eton, the young men of the parish also formed a tract society, and many thousands of useful leaflets were distributed on Sunday mornings and at the open-air services. Bank holidays were spent on Woolwich Common, and the meetings were greatly blessed.

Mr. Rice has never allowed himself to be ruled by conventional methods, and while at Plumstead he adopted the custom of making the whole of the sittings in his church free at the evening service on the four Sundays in Lent. The result was most encouraging; the services were crowded every Sunday, and many came who had seldom set foot within the church before. While in London, Mr. Rice identified himself very closely with the work of Dr. Barnardo, being a member of his committee, and often pleading on the platform for the waifs and strays. He was also a member of the Council of the Protestant Churchmen's Alliance, and of the Correspondence and Clerical sub-committee of the Church Missionary Society. The following quotation from his annual report of the work in Plumstead in 1892 will reveal the secret of Mr. Rice's success and the principles which govern his life and ministry. "The work," he says, "is God's, and yours and mine. Let everyone help to share the responsibility of it. Every member of Christ has his or her work to perform; none should idly say 'there is nothing I can do.' Let every worker work prayerfully and faithfully in the power of the Holy Ghost, carrying the 'precious seed' of the Word of God. Hold fast to the truth, authority, and power of the Word of God; to the substitution of Christ for sinners on the Cross, and to the Cross as the way of death to the self-life; and to the present indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the soul of the humble, faithful believer." These words form the key-note of a ministry which is marked by evangelistic fervour, but which seeks at the same time to lead the people into a life "more abundant."

It has been said that the worker who is able to set others to work does the greatest amount of good in the world; and among such the then Vicar of All Saints', Plumstead, was princeps, if not facile princeps.

Mr. Rice accepted the living of St. Peter-le-Bailey, Oxford, in 1893, succeeding the now Bishop of Liverpool, and for the last seven years he has been foremost in the good work carried on in the city. It is not easy to give a correct and adequate sketch of his labours in this University centre. His super-abundant energy finds numerous outlets. He has erected very fine new schools, thus meeting a long-standing educational need in his parish; and he has greatly promoted Evangelical work in the city by building a Hall in memory of the martyred Oxford missionary, Bishop Hannington. This is a centre both for parochial meetings and for the gatherings of undergraduates, among whom Mr. Rice is doing such excellent work. It is here the daily prayer meetings are held during term, also the weekly missionary gatherings for undergraduates, and the Sunday Evening Greek Testament Class, conducted by the Principal of Wycliffe Hall.

Mr. Rice is the moving spirit in the Oxford Pastorate, which has for its object direct spiritual work among undergraduates. There are at present three clergymen working with Mr. Rice in this way, and it is impossible to gauge the good done by their visits and social intercourse with the men. By his genial manner, strong personality, and, above all, deep spirituality, Mr. Rice is specially fitted for this work.

With so much to occupy his time, both in the parish and University, it will naturally be thought that Mr. Rice will have little or no time for outside effort. Not so, however. He proves the truth of the saying that the busy men have the most leisure. He occasionally takes parochial missions, is a frequent speaker at the sister University of Cambridge and on the platform at Holiness Conventions. This year he has been president of the local branch of the Y.M.C.A., and the secretary reports a year of much progress.

His sympathies, too, are broad, and by his attendance at a gathering of the Salvation Army some time ago, and at the United Mission held by the Nonconformists in the City, Mr. Rice has helped to exemplify that love and unity which ought to characterize all who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity and in truth. Mr. Rice was recently offered the living of St. John's, Bournemouth, in succession to Mr. Selwyn, but he has decided to stay in Oxford. Judging by the influence he exercises in the city, and by the results of his work, he has been guided aright. May he be long spared to minister in the Church of Christ!

A "G. H. C. Macgregor" Memorial.—The late Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor was vice-president of the Young Christians' Missionary Union, and the council of that body has decided to form, as a permanent memorial of his labours, a missionary library, for circulating missionary literature among young people of all denominations. Revs. J. W. Ewing, Thos. Spurgeon, F. B. Meyer, and J. Tolefree Parr, seek help in raising a needed sum of £50, "in confidence that the many thousands to whom Mr. Macgregor's words were blessed, will readily subscribe 1,000 shillings to commemorate his name and work."

Imperial Protestant Federation.—Much of the rapid progress of Romish teaching in the Church of England during recent years, has undoubtedly been due to the lack of union between the various societies labouring for the defence of Reformation principles against the attacks of sacerdotal error. The Imperial Protestant Federation is devoting its efforts to remedying this condition of affairs, and its labours have been singularly successful. Twenty-seven evangelical societies and churches have joined the Federation, and while retaining their independence and individuality, are working in friendly co-operation in this concerted campaign to stem the tide of Romish and Ritualistic aggression. The work of the organization is in danger of being crippled through the lack of funds at the present time. The secretary is Mr. E. H. Garbett, 3, Palmer Street, Queen Anne's Gate, London, S.W.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.

THE VALUE OF A CREED.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

HOW has the Gospel been affected by the change of a century which has, certainly in its last half, been more restless, and indeed revolutionary, than any similar period during the Christian era? The loyal servant of Christ will feel that no more interesting problem could be propounded, but it is one that is not to be carelessly treated and summarily dismissed. Looked at broadly, indeed, the answer may be satisfactory enough. Take it, first, in relation to the conflict with unbelief. One of the most striking facts in the story of the time is the success with which Christianity has withstood the determined attacks of unbelief, and not only maintained, but distinctly improved its position.

There are some disquieting appearances which prevent the full extent and significance of this remarkable result of the controversies of the age from being appreciated, and to some of these I will refer afterwards. But of the fact it seems to me there can be no reasonable doubt. Again and again, in the course of the period, has unbelief raised a premature cry of victory; but after the fury and excitement of the onslaught has ceased, and the smoke of the battle has cleared away, it has been evident that the defences of the Gospel remained untouched.

I saw it stated recently that some of the leading champions of unbelief fully anticipated that the end of the century would see the end of Christianity also, at least as a living force in the world; and that the historian of rationalism would be able to complete his work by a volume recording its final triumph. The facts are in very marked contrast with these sanguine anticipations. Science has, no doubt, widely extended its empire, but it has not been at the expense of the Gospel. Our views of the universe have been modified in many respects, and the provinces of theology and science are more distinctly defined; but, as each successive discovery of the intellect has come to be examined, it has been seen that it has in no way affected the real disease of human nature, or the efficacy of that remedy which the Gospel provides. Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, and other redoubtable champions were successively hailed by the enemies of Christian truth, and, I fear I must add, feared by anxious friends, as predestined victors in the strife. But their strength has been shattered against the impregnable fortress which they have assailed.

It is true that many ideas which were at one time supposed to be essential points in the Christian system, have either been abandoned or so far modified that their character has been materially changed, or, at all events, relegated to the position of those "doubtful disputations," about which earnest Christians may agree to differ. But this means only a change in the human interpretation of the Divine message. The foundation of God remains sure. Of course there are still scoffers, and some of them so daring and boastful that they may deceive even the elect, who, in the distress caused by their audacious impiety, may fancy that their lot has been cast in specially evil times. But every age has had men of this type, and if at present there may seem often to be a peculiar insolence or bitterness in their blasphemy, may it not be traced to the growing sense that the power of the Gospel has defied their utmost efforts?

For, beyond the power of mere argument, is the practical evidence of the mighty force of what they would fain regard as a decaying faith. For (and this is the second part of the answer we have to give to the question with which this paper started) the religion of the Cross continues to give marvellous signs of vitality. If the Apostle were alive to-day, he would have no occasion to correct or qualify his old utterance—"I am not ashamed of the Gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." What it was in the cities of the East, in Imperial Rome, in cultured Athens, among the barbarians of Galatia, that it is still in the region of heathendom to-day. A remarkable article in the Cornhill Magazine of December tells us how the anxieties, alarms, and perils of that terrible period of suspense spent in the British Legation at Peking served to bring out in bold relief the marvellous work of God in those converted Chinese, to whose devotion and zeal their European teachers were so largely indebted. The nineteenth has been the greatest missionary century since the first, and the defence of the Gospel has been enormously strengthened by the capacity it has shown for continued aggression.

It is not to be denied, however, that side by side with these encouraging developments there are others which are calculated to cause some anxiety to all who believe that the future of humanity depends on the maintenance of the supremacy of the Gospel. There has been, and still is, a revolt against the tyranny of creeds, which, though it has in it elements of good, may easily be pressed to an extreme which is dangerous to the best interests both of religion and morality. There was a time when there was a tendency to identify the Gospel with some theological system, but that danger has long been past, and the disposition at present rather is to get rid of definite belief altogether. The argument by which this laxity is defended is sufficiently plausible, and easily catches the unwary. The first step is to put creed and conduct in strong antagonism, and to insist on the vanity of the one in the absence of the other.

Nothing can be more easy than to conduct a triumphant argument on these lines. When to this are added sneers of narrowness (every one being held to be narrow who does not agree with the ideas of the critic of creeds, and, in fact, has the audacity to hold fast by his own creed), and lofty assumption of superior intellectuality, it is not surprising that a considerable measure of apparent success is secured. This is Liberalism. Liberalism is the distinction of those who may be classed as advanced thinkers, and the temptation to win this hall-mark at so cheap a price as a sneer at creeds, is one which numbers are unable to resist.

There is another form in which the latitudinarian tendency of the times manifests itself, which possibly is even more seductive; conduct, we are often reminded, is everything. Has not Matthew Arnold told us that it constitutes more than three-fourths of life, and must not the word of a great litterateur be accepted? If, however, this is to be presented as decisive of the relations between creed and conduct, it can only be regarded as one of those half-truths which do more harm than positive falsehoods. It errs on both sides.

There is a sense in which conduct is everything. But, then, it is equally true that creed makes conduct. When saying this, it is of the highest importance to be definite in the use of the word, creed. If it is employed simply to describe a formulary to which a man assents, a syllabus of beliefs which he recites and forgets as soon as he has recited, a mere test which a man accepts as a condition of membership in a particular church, in short, something altogether apart from his own inner self. Nothing can easily be more worthless. It is a mere form, in obedience to which there is no inspiration or power. The natural recoil from abuse of this kind which has produced the present dangerous disposition to make light of all belief, and to insist that, provided a man be sincere, it is of no importance what doctrine he holds. Such an idea would receive no tolerance in any other department of life, and it is strange that it should meet with more ready acceptance in the highest department of all. In politics, for example, there is abundant criticism to-day of Imperialists. But it is based upon the idea that their political belief will affect their action. Surely the same principle must hold good, and in a still stronger degree, in relation to religious beliefs.

The Evangelical Creed, even when reduced to its simplest form, is so solemn that, to assert that it is a matter of no importance whether a man believe or reject its doctrines, the only point of importance being that he should be sincere either in his affirmation or rejection, is fatuous folly. The ultimate judgment as to the consequences either of the one or the other does not belong to us, and we may well rejoice that it is reserved for Him whose name is Love. Human attempts to anticipate it are not only futile, but they have always proved to be stumbling-blocks in the way of sincere inquirers. But in abstaining from them it certainly is not necessary that we should give up the honest endeavour to set forth the solemn claims of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

The common idea with numbers seems to be that religion includes the moral duties incumbent upon men, combined with a certain set of outward acts of worship to God, and of service to humanity in the name of God. It is quite possible, we are told, for men to unite on this wide platform who utterly differ from each other on what are called the metaphysics of theology, under which term are included the distinctive doctrines of the Evangelical system. That is so far true, that there are men who are models of integrity and benevolence, honourable in every relation of life, potent influences on behalf of national righteousness, who, nevertheless, distinctly reject what Evangelicals regard as the cardinal truths of the Gospel. The case of such men is continually pressed on us, and we are asked, what verdict we would pronounce on them. Our answer would be prompt and simple—no verdict at all. But the confession that such judgment is altogether beyond our province does not mean that we regard their attitude to truths which to us are of infinite value, as a matter of no moment; still less that we can consent, by any action on our part, to give the impression that this is the estimate we have formed of them.

It is only necessary to remember what the points at issue are, to feel that we cannot consent, by putting them in any category of things not necessary to salvation, to rob them of their supreme value. If I could once regard the Incarnation, the Atonement, the life of the Spirit of God in the soul of man, the Redemption of man through the sacrifice of Christ, as mere matters of speculation on which men might take opposite views without any essential difference in their spiritual character or state, I should feel that in that very judgment I had pronounced definitely against them. The tremendous significance of these doctrines seems to be forgotten by those who would fain persuade us that it is of slight moment whether a man believes or denies them. If human nature could have been redeemed without a sacrifice so costly as that of the Son of God, I cannot believe that that sacrifice would have been offered. The kind of charity which I am invited to extend to the rejection of this truth would compel me to join in that rejection myself.

Further, it does not need very much consideration to show that the message which is preached by those who believe in the great plan of salvation by Christ, and Christ alone, is so entirely different from anything which can be given by those who reject it, that united action is impossible. Compromise there cannot be, since the two parties do not meet on equal terms. Those to whom the Cross of Christ is a stumbling-block, but who still recognise the wisdom of the Teacher, and the beauty of the Exemplar, may not be troubled, though some of their friends accord Him a reverence which they themselves are unprepared to give, albeit marvelling that their reason should on this point be so dominated by superstition. But the latter cannot reciprocate this kind of sentiment. For them the absence of the preaching of forgiveness through Christ, means the preaching of another Gospel than that which they received, and for them to acquiesce in it would be an act of treason to their Lord.

We are sometimes told that the old doctrines need to be re-stated in the light of modern thought. It may be, but the first and the great point is that in the re-statement we do not conceal or minimize the essential truth. Is there no reason to fear that in some cases there has been a want of absolute fidelity to the old truth, at all events a want of zeal and earnestness in preaching it? We hear of men who are evangelical in their own belief, but not evangelistic in their spirit and their preaching. Yet this is the very kind of teaching that is most needed in this age. There are those who scoff at the very idea of conversion, but that only makes it the more necessary that conversion should be a constant theme of the pulpit. Men seem to have agreed to treat sin as a very small matter—there is all the more reason why they should be reminded that "the wrath of God is revealed against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men." Above all in its unrest, in its eager quest after a happiness which it cannot find, in its pessimism begotten of unbelief, the world needs to hear those sweet melodies of heaven, that "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Croydon Orphan Home for Little Girls.—Sixteen fresh cases have been admitted to this institution during the year; five have been placed in situations, and six have returned to their friends. The principal feature of the year was the acquiring of a new Home, which has been erected in Lebanon Road. The Seaside Home at East Blatchington, Seaford, has a family of twelve or fourteen in residence, with a constant succession of visitors. Friends interested in helpless little ones can obtain particulars as to admission to this Home and other information from the secretary, Miss Smith, Dalkeith, Wellesley Road, Croydon.

Irish Notes.

UP to date, the sum of about £25,000 has come into the hands of the treasurers of the Irish Methodist Twentieth Century Fund, and over £51,000 has been promised.

Probably never before were so many Watch Night services held in Ireland as on Monday evening. The congregations also were very large, and more than usual solemnity was attached to the occasion, it being the last night of the century as well as the last night of the year.

Rev. Wm. Crawford, M.A., Vice-President of the Methodist Conference, has issued an earnest appeal to the ministers, officials, and members of the Irish Methodist Church, to observe the first Sunday in the New Year (January 6) as a special day of thanksgiving to God, and he says "Let a concert of united prayer be instant at the throne of grace, that a baptism of power and love may equip our Church for its work in the era on which we shall be entering."

A very remarkable man, in the person of Mr. Vere Foster, has just died in Belfast. Deceased spent thousands of pounds in trying to improve the handwriting of the children in the National Schools of this country, and for this purpose gave his well-known copy books at half price, and gave also several valuable prizes. He likewise chartered steamers at his own expense to convey many poor people to America and the colonies, and contributed to numerous benevolent objects. He lived in lodgings, sleeping and eating in one room, and literally gave away all he possessed.

Under the auspices of the British College Christian Union, a meeting has been held in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, the Archbishop of Dublin in the chair, when the Archbishop delivered an important address, pointing out how much Irishmen, like Columkill and Columbanus, did for the evangelization of the world in the early days of Christianity. He also dwelt on the importance of the study of the Bible, and said that system in reading, continual and sustained, was the only method of acquiring either an insight into the real meaning of the Word, or a knowledge of its contents. Judged merely by the standard of literature, the Bible, he declared, was alone in the English language, while read in the true spirit of reverence, it was the maker of men.

Scottish Notes.

A CENSUS of all shops open in Aberdeen on the Sabbath of last week was taken by Chief-Constable Wyness. The following are the respective numbers:—Provision shops, 286; ice-cream shops (kept by Italians), 41; other refreshment shops (not kept by Italians), 46; dairy shops, 77; tobacconists, 2; and newsagents, 5. The total number was 457.

With the new year Life and Work and The Church of Scotland Mission Record are amalgamated in The Church of Scotland Magazine and Mission Record.

A disastrous fire, which took place in Largs last week, led to the total destruction of a convalescent home (with accommodation for fifty persons), founded and maintained by Mr. Peter Coats for the benefit of Paisley children.

At the annual meeting of the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland, held last week in Edinburgh, the report showed that while the depository department of the society was being carried on with success, funds were required for colportage, nineteen such agencies having had to be closed, leaving 152. The directors appealed for a special colportage fund of £10,000 to provide it with a working capital, and to clear off its bonds. A number of friends had intimated subscriptions of £1,790 for that object.

We learn from the Daily News that the component parts of the memorial obelisk which is to be erected near Lake Bangweulu, in British Central Africa, where Dr. Livingstone breathed his last, and where his heart lies buried, have now been forwarded to their destination. This memorial, which is of a permanent nature, takes the place of the famous tree, upon which some words rudely carved were cut more than twenty-seven years ago. The monument will be twenty feet in height, and will be surmounted by a cross.

In connection with the municipal conference, held at Glasgow in October, on "Sunday Trading and Sunday Clubs," an adjourned meeting was held last week to consider a Bill which it is proposed to submit to the Government, when the renewed large attendance of representatives from all parts of the country showed the deep interest which is being taken in the subject. Among other points raised was that of street vendors of goods, as distinguished from shopkeepers; and it was agreed to cover all cases by the use of the words, "Sell or otherwise authorize the sale of goods on Sunday without the licence of the local authority."

In an address given last week to the Church of Scotland Office-Bearers' Association, in Dundee, on "The Children's Church," Mr. Thomas P. Buist said it was known that there are about 30,000 children of school age in Dundee. Allowing that the parents of 10,000 of these were Roman Catholics, that 5,000 boys and girls attended children's services, and 5,000 more accompanied their parents to the ordinary church services, there were still about 10,000 who could not be traced as attending any place of worship on the Lord's Day. It was pointed out that there was no alternative between making such provision for them as that provided by the Boys' and Girls' Religious Association, and allowing them to grow up without any moral or religious influence whatever. In the interesting discussion that followed, several members who had attended similar meetings in their boyhood, strongly urged the formation of such services in connection with the respective congregations.

Welsh Notes.

REV. HOPKYN REES, the well-known Chinese missionary, is, as is generally known, a Welshman. During the recent rebellion he lost the whole of his valuable library. It is fitting that his native land should be the first to show its practical sympathy with him. A fund has now been initiated by Rev. Thomas John, of Llanelly, to make good the lost sustained by Mr. Rees.

The Congregationalists have added 2,340 to their membership, which now stands at 145,772. In the Sunday schools there has been an increase of over 3,000 in the number attending them. The total amount collected during the year for all purposes was £151,823.

The Calvinistic Methodists report a total of 156,058 communicants, 2,346 more than the previous year. There has, however, been a decrease of some hundreds in the number of hearers. The sum collected during the year was £294,180. The Foreign Missionary Society is able to speak of marked prosperity in the mission field.

For the last two or three years the Welsh Nonconformists of London have held a preaching festival at the City Temple on St. David's Day. The preachers for the next festival are Rev. Dr. Probert, Principal of the Bala-Bangor Congregational College and chairman of the Welsh Congregational Union, and Rev. Hugh Jones, of Bangor (Wesleyan).

One of the best known of Welsh Calvinistic Methodist missionaries, Rev. Robert Evans, has returned from the Khasia Hills, in India, where he has laboured successfully for over twenty years. Mr. Evans intends severing his connection with the Foreign Missionary Society of the denomination, and remaining in this country, to help forward the cause of the mission with which he has so long been connected.

Acting upon a suggestion from the bishop, a committee has been formed to inaugurate a Million Shilling Fund in the diocese of Llandaff. The proceeds are to be devoted to Church work. A letter is to be sent to every incumbent in the diocese, requesting that an organized effort be made on behalf of the fund. One feature of the fund is that the work is to be confined, as far as possible, to the laity.

The statistics of the three leading Nonconformist bodies in Wales have just been made public. It is satisfactory to note that all three are able to report progress, although it cannot be said to be quite all along the line. The Baptists have an increased membership of over 5,000—their communicants now numbering 106,566. Their Sunday schools have a membership of over 119,000, the increase on last year amounting to 7,680.

In a recent speech, the Bishop of St. Asaph dealt with the increasing power of the liquor trade, and declared that both political parties were afraid of it. His lordship gave his adhesion to the scheme propounded by Earl Grey. This is to incorporate public-house trust companies. These trusts would manage every public-house in the interests of the public, and not for private profit. His lordship further expressed his conviction that it was the only hopeful temperance policy before the country.

Reference has been made in these columns to the comparative indifference which characterizes the attitude of the churches in Wales towards the great Simultaneous Mission of next March. This statement is now borne out by an earnest and forcible leading article in the Goleuad—the organ of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists. Amongst other things the writer points out how low the proportion of Local Free Church Councils is in Wales. He makes an earnest appeal for sympathy with the Mission, and points out that it is not an effort to make a revival, but to get one.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, January 6. Ezekiel iii.

WHATEVER God gives us to do, He fits us to do. If we are sent to people who are hard of forehead and stiff of heart (see R.V.), He makes our face strong against their faces, and our foreheads strong against their foreheads. "Our sufficiency is of God, who hath enabled us." There is no need, therefore, for us to be fearful. The only matter is to receive God's words into our heart, and to go forth with the preface, Thus saith the Lord God. There is nothing which so secures the attention of men as the impressiveness of a direct message from God; only it is necessary that those who use the formula show by their character that they have a right to use it.

The responsibility of representing God to men is a very solemn one, because if we fail in our duty, the blood of souls is required at our hand. What that exactly means, it is difficult to define; but probably in eternity there will be a consciousness of suffering and loss to us, in the measure in which we have neglected those around us. Does not the beginning of the New Century and the great effort being put forth by numbers of Christians in a special Mission, constitute a unique opportunity of cleansing our hands of the blood of others? But we can only do that after experiences like those described in vv. 22-24, 27.

It was necessary to convince the Jews (already carried captive), that there was no hope of an immediate return to their own land, because the Holy City had yet to fall into the hands of its enemies, and become a desolation.

This number of days, standing for 390, and forty years, has given rise to various explanations, none of which are perfectly satisfactory. They may refer to the duration of Israel's sojourn in Canaan and Egypt, and the forty years of wandering in the wilderness. But it is not very material to discover the key. If we knew all the circumstances, it would be easily apparent. It is enough to know that God had a precise reason for the duration of the anguish, through which He ordained his people to pass. Not a moment more or less would have met the case. Let us believe that whatever discipline may lie upon us, is definitely proportioned to the necessity of the case.

In v. 14, the prophet protests against the Divine prescription, and reminds us of Peter's exclamation in Acts x. 14. In Ezekiel's case, God yields to the remonstrance of his servant, and mitigates the severity of his commands. There is comfort in this. It is as though God our Father appreciated the reasons we present to Him, and the arguments we adduce. We are reminded of Abraham's intercession for Sodom, of Moses' for Israel, and the Syrophenician mother's for her child. It is a great thing when we can speak to God freely, always remembering that the obedient soul has vast power with the Lord God. It is as though God yields Himself to our will. Has he not said, "Concerning my sons, and concerning the work of my hands, command ye Me"?

TUESDAY, January 8. Ezekiel v.

The shaving of head and beard was a great humiliation to the Oriental. Could the prophet's action mean that it was a personal humiliation to Jehovah for his people to be scattered to the winds, a third dying with pestilence, a third with the sword, and a third scattered through the world? The penalty of Israel was ever so much heavier, because her opportunities had been so rare. She was set in the midst of nations and countries, but had wickedly rebelled. Her sin was in proportion to her opportunity. Because she had been lifted up to heaven, she was now cast down to hades.

It is almost terrible to be dowered with rich religious privileges. They subject us to much closer discipline from God's hand. The vine suffers pruning more than any other plant, because it is capable of bearing such luscious fruit. The soil which produces the richest harvests is most deeply torn with the ploughshare and harrow. The diamond which will repay the most cutting is exposed longest to the lapidary's wheel.

It becomes us to ask whether we are fulfilling the Divine purpose, whether we are acting as salt and light, or are profaning God's sanctuary with the detestable things, and with abominations: because if we are careless, we shall be inevitably dimished; God's eye will not spare, neither will He have any pity. Is it not a wonder that He has borne with us so long, that He has not cut us off, that He has continued the candlestick in its place, and the star in his right hand? Let us remember and do the first works, lest He come to us quickly, and remove us out of our place, except we repent. The New Century seems to offer a new opportunity for consecration to the highest purposes of our being. Let us arise, and put on our beautiful garments, cleansing ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit.

WEDNESDAY, January 9. Ezekiel vi.

The hills and mountains of Israel had been specially associated with idolatry (compare vv. 3, 4 with 1 Kings xii. 31). On the mountains, therefore, were God's threatenings specially to rest. It is thus that man's sin entails desolation upon the material universe, so that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain by reason of him who hath subjected it. Why is the neighbourhood of the Dead Sea given up to perpetual desolation? Why are the fair fields of South Africa barren? Why, up to within the last few years, were the fertile plains of Egypt, the former granary of the world, denuded of waving crops of corn? In each case the cause must be attributed to human sin. How eagerly may the material universe anticipate the time when it shall be emancipated from the bondage of corruption, when the leprosy of sin shall no longer send its ulcer into the home of man, but when the glorious liberty of the sons of God shall secure freedom and fertility everywhere.

Verse 9 is very pathetic. Those that escaped from Jerusalem would remember God among the nations whither they were carried away captive, and would loathe themselves. If we adopt the rendering of the A.V. in verse 9, it is still more touching. If it be true that God's heart was broken with their wandering, wayward heart, and if his disobedient people were aware of the anguish they had inflicted upon Him, and if these reflections were the cause of their deep contrition—what profound lessons are conveyed to us! If God causes you and me to be carried away captive, to suffer his chastening hand, the one thing that will break us down in deepest sorrow will not be our loneliness and suffering, but the knowledge of how deeply we have grieved Him.

This chapter is magnificent in its imagery. Note, for instance, the repetition of the words, the time is come, the day draweth near (vv. 6, 7, 12); the budding of pride into wickedness (v. 11); the sudden infliction of punishment which would prevent the seller from profiting by his sales, and the buyer rejoicing in his purchase (vv. 12, 13); the repeated blowing of the trumpet, but there is no response (v. 14); death in the city, anguish on the mountains, the casting away of treasure (15, 16, 19); the profanation of the holy place which had been as the ornament of Israel, but which had been defiled by idolatry, and would now be destroyed as an unclean thing; the silence that would fall upon every vision of the prophet, the law of the priest, and the counsel of the elder—there is a succession here of images which evince the highest genius, even apart from the inspiration for the Spirit of the Eternal. Here is a funeral dirge for the fall of Jerusalem comparable to that mighty chapter Rev. xviii., which bewails the judgment of Babylon the Great.

At this juncture in our national life it is our serious duty to inquire whether we have reason to dread any such discipline for our native land! Does not the long pressure of war in Africa, with its expenditure of human life and money, with the growing horror of mutual hatred, indicate that God has a controversy with ourselves which must be faced before there can be any hope of peace? We still fling our troops and treasure into the yawning gulf, but there seems no restraint on the impurity, the drink, the carelessness of God, the dishonesty of trade, the abominations which are permitted in our midst. We must not suppose that God's justice has grown slacker with the generations as they have passed, or that He is any less quick to punish those whose privileges were intended to make them the beacon-light of the world. Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord.

FRIDAY, January 11. Ezekiel viii.

In vision Ezekiel beheld the sins of his people—those who remained still in Jerusalem. Carried through the air, he was brought in the visions of God to the Temple, where an idol faced the door of the inner gate looking north, and just above it shone the emblem of the Glory of the God of Israel. The two could not abide together. One must go, and since idolatry was so deeply rooted in the heart of Israel, it seemed as if there were no alternative but for Jehovah to depart. Then successively the prophet was led, still in vision, to where the elders secretly worshipped the bestial gods of Egypt (7-11), and the women were occupied in the licentious rites of the Syrian god Tammuz, the Bacchus of the Orient. And beyond these were yet greater abominations, where the chief classes of priests were represented by twenty-five of their number, turning their backs on Jehovah to adore the sun. And every worshipper carried before his face a branch of the tree which was held to be sacred to the god he worshipped (17).

How little were these men suspected of participating in such scenes! What a terrible revelation was this! It reminds us of the judgment seat when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed, and where God will bring into judgment every secret thing, whether it be good or bad. Modern science has given us the X-ray, which brings to light the secret defect of bone and joint, but here is a ray which unveils the secrets of the soul. How necessary it is to ask the Holy Ghost to cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by his inspiration, that we may perfectly love God, and magnify his Holy Name!

The ministers of vengeance are not far away when sin has reached such an abominable pass as is described in the previous chapter. Six men come from the way of the higher gate, and stand beside the brazen altar. In the meanwhile, the glory of Israel's God had begun to remove. This was the first stage of the final quitting of the sanctuary. Other stages are noticed in the following chapter. And only in the last chapters have we the record of its return.

In the midst of wrath God remembers mercy. Noah is saved from the flood; Lot from Sodom; and those that sigh and cry for all the abominations have a mark set in their foreheads (4).

Beloved servant of God, thou canst not stem the tide of evil which is sweeping through the streets; thou art not strong enough to work any great deliverance; thy words have no power with God; yet thou sighest often, and criest with bitter tears to the ear of God on account of all the sin which abounds in our midst. But this is enough, and, amid the overflowing scourge, thou shalt be delivered.

The judgment begins at the house of God. The seventy elders fall first, and then the messengers of vengeance go forth into the whole city. If judgment begin with the house of God, what shall be the end of those who obey not the Gospel of Jesus Christ? Let it be noted that the man who had the inkhorn, and whose work it had been to mark the foreheads of the saints, is now as intent on executing the Divine vengeance, and is equally eager to attest the completeness of his obedience. We are reminded that hereafter, when Babylon the Great is destroyed, the servants of God will cry, Amen, Hallelujah! and a voice will come out of the throne, saying, Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God; for true and righteous are his judgments.

A Happy New Year.

THIS is the sixth time I have had the pleasure of wishing my young Bible Searchers a Happy New Year. I now do so six times as heartily as I did at first. In fact, I ought to say six hundred times as much, for I have six hundred times more Bible Searchers now than I had then. Besides these, many hundreds have "come and gone," some having "grown up" (all the better, I trust, for the lessons they learned from our Young People's Page), and others have "gone in to see the King," whose memory is very dear to us.

But this is altogether an exceptional New Year (is it not?), because it also ushers in a new century, the only one any of us will ever see.

When I was a little boy I was very fond of throwing big stones into a pool. Once I got a very big one, which made such a lovely splash; so did I, for I fell in after it, and had a rare old scramble to get out again. That day I went straight home (by the back door), but at other times I used to stand and watch the circles that went rippling across the pond. They were very small at first, but grew bigger and bigger, the large ones seeming to enclose the little ones, till they died away in the distance. I have since thought how much that is like Time, with its seconds, minutes, hours, days, weeks, years; the greater including the less, and the great big century enclosing them all, and all dying away into a vast eternity.

We speak of our birthdays, our Christmases, and our New Years' Days coming back again. They seem to, but they do not really. No day ever returns: it is gone for ever. When a circle is complete, you can do nothing more to improve it. And each day of the year we live is done with, and enclosed by the larger circle beyond it.

But there is another way of looking at life. It is like a long, long road along which we are travelling. Each new year is like a milestone, and we pass ten or twenty or fifty, as the case may be; but we can never go back. Sometimes we would like to stay a little longer by one or another, for the sake of some dear friends or happy memories, but we have to go on.

Do you not see how important it is, therefore, to live each day and year as God would like us to live? As we look back there are so many things we would like to alter. But we cannot do so; we can only ask God's help to live the new ones better.

There is still another way of looking at life. It is like a book, and our days and years are like so many pages. Some of them are, like our copybooks, sadly blotted and smeared; and we think that when we "turn over a new leaf," as we say, it is all that is necessary. But we have found the new leaves get as soiled as the old ones, and each one we turn leaves one less before us. Alas, there have been many people who have turned over them all, until they have come to the end of their book, and have had nothing but a collection of spoiled leaves to bring to God at the last. Oh, let us pray that we may not spend our life like that, but that upon all our pages may be written thoughts, and words, and actions that will give glory to our dear Master; because, by doing so, we shall bring happiness into other people's lives as well as into our own!

As we begin this new year, then, and the new century, let us ask Jesus to pardon us all our past sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness; for, until the past is forgiven and put away, it is useless for us to try to do better in the future. But if we thus come to Him, we shall give Him, and our friends, and ourselves, in the highest sense,

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Uncle Tom.

Hope for the New Century.

By Rev. SAMUEL PEARSON, M.A.

IF the young possess a true hopefulness, they will be leaders of mankind in the new century. On them the burden of responsible service and widening influence will rest. Get the centre of the century right, and the circumference of thought and work will touch heaven itself. The central secret is fellowship with God. Without Him we are confessedly without hope (Eph. ii. 12). Knowledge of God is possible; because God has spoken through inspired men, and has appeared in fulness in Christ, his only Son. The true hope is a kind of enthusiasm which ventures everything on God.

God is known as Ruler. His paramount rule will make all things clear; the all things of the world and of our individual lives. Let the young take heart. He who watches the sparrow tends them also.

God is trusted as the righteous Ruler. His righteousness moves slowly forward like a majestic river. Each soul is invited to launch its frail bark on the bosom of that tide, and partake of its power.

God is loved as Father. The soul reads the Divine Fatherhood in the gift of the only begotten Son. It feels that Fatherhood in the mysterious and magnetic drawing of Divine love; as the prodigal felt the influence of home in the far-off country. All is well to the man who sees God as his Father.

This knowledge of God issues in trust. Hope is a kind of enthusiasm for God, similar to that which is felt by young men when they take up great causes.

The young need salvation; their vision of God makes them feel this need keenly. The Psalmist describes sin as a "horrible pit" (Psa. xl, 2). Out of this Christ has drawn us by his own sufferings and death. Sin is the mire beneath; salvation is the blue sky above.

Then it is that inward happiness is realized, for then it is God is reached through and in Christ. The young begin to be real men in Christ; and the seeds of eternal quietude are thus sown in their natures. Peace cannot be found in circumstances. It can be found alone in Christ; and when this discovery is made, eternal life has begun its endless and glorious processes. He who would be rich, great, noble, immortal, let him hope in God. Our country needs a glorious band of such young stalwarts, so that we may leave the gloom of the past year for ever behind, and enter upon the new and peaceful conquests of the new era. Will the reader enlist in this army of hope?

A Daring Robbery.

[The following touching little incident is told by Sister Lucie, of the West London Mission, which is doing such excellent work among the poor in that part of our great city.]

ONE dreary Saturday afternoon a daring robbery was perpetrated at our Craven Hall. The Lower Hall was full of children, for every Saturday, from 11 to 1 o'clock; the little ones come for drill and games. How the children love the games! And especially any connected with dolls, for few own a doll, and we little realize the delight these little ones have in possessing one for their very own, if only for half-an-hour. The game being played was "Dolly's Bedtime."

There were two or three rows of little mites all carefully holding their dolls in their arms and gently rocking them in time with the music, and from each pair of eyes a true mother's love shone.

"Time up," the Sister says, "put the dolls down and form a circle for prayer." Obediently the little ones resign their dolls, but one just cannot give up dolly.

A last hasty look round, a little manœuvring, the door opens, the door closes, and then silence reigns.

Did I say "silence"? There is a whisper going round the circle, it gets louder and louder until it reaches the Sister's ear.

"Sister, she's sneaked a doll." The Sister quickly runs to the door, and yes, true enough, it is so.

Running, as thief never ran before, is little Mary, hardly more than a baby herself, but managing to keep dolly safely tucked away under her arm. The street in front of Craven Hall is straight and long, and what chance had the little runaway thief to reach her favourite haunts?

Footsteps quickly follow her; she is seized, dolly snatched from her, and both brought back in triumph.

A gentle rebuke from Sister Joyce is all the little culprit can stand, and if the truth be told, all that Sister Joyce can give.

The act itself grieved us, and yet we saw behind it the intense longing there is in the hearts of these little ones for something of their very own to love. This season to us is a time of more love, but to these little ones it is often a time of more unhappiness, caused by more drink.

Will you help us to bring a little love into these lives? Season after season we have sung the old carols in the happiness of our homes, and yet, have we realized the truths they teach?

"He who now shall bless the poor, Shall himself find blessing."

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

NEW QUARTER.—RULES.

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—

(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.

(2) Those received later, in the one following. Answers for the "second list" which reach the office after midday Wednesday are too late. Those from Scotland and Ireland only will be received till Thursday morning.

No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

No papers can be re-examined.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

A Prize Competition is given the last week of March, June, September, and December. To be eligible, every child must have been correct nine times during the preceding twelve weeks.

Those whose 10th or 13th birthdays occur during the quarter may continue the weekly Searcher in the same division, but must enter for the Prize Competition for their actual age. There is no limit of age for weekly competitors; but no one above eighteen years of age can enter for the Quarterly Competition.

All communications must be addressed to "Uncle Tom," the Young People's Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 6.

A FORWARD LOOK (Phil. iii. 12-14).

THE greatest men are the humblest. As the circle of light increases, so does the circumference of darkness. The men who know, know that they do not know. Those that stand on the high peaks to which their brethren have not attained, catch sight of greater peaks beyond them in comparison with which their highest point is but little removed above the plain. Those who have experienced little of the divine life are loud in their protestations of goodness, whilst those whose faces really shine, like Moses, wist it not. Therefore the Apostle cries, "Not that I have already attained, or am already made perfect."

On the way to Damascus, Jesus Christ apprehended Saul of Tarsus, and there was a distinct purpose in his heart at that moment. He apprehended him for a programme of measureless blessing which is unfolded in Acts xxvi. 16-18 and elsewhere. From that moment the apostle pressed on to realize practically that "heavenly vision to which he dare not be disobedient" (v. 19). Whenever the Lord lays his hand upon us, we must not think that it is for our happiness only, but that we may achieve some high purpose which He has at heart, and all life should be a pressing on for this. As men around press on for wealth and fame, we must press up, catching a deeper glimpse of what the Lord has in store for us, and realizing it with more earnest and persistent Christian Endeavour. The Lord does not tell us in the first hour all that He intends, but opens it step by step through his providence, and the intimation of his Spirit. When you start out with Christ from the Cross, where you see the title deeds of your inheritance, you have no idea of the road or the goal. Keep close to Him; as each step is taken in obedient faith, you will enter more perfectly into his programme. Notice that the word apprehend means "to lay hold of." It is the construction in the valley of the pattern shown in the Mount.

There are three ways of pressing on. First, Be always reckoning that you have not attained. Second, Forget the things that are behind. Third, Stretch forward (see R.V.). The second of these is specially interesting. We are to forget past attainment, of course. But, we are also to forget past failure in the sense of brooding perpetually over it. You may be very sorry and truly penitent, but when once your sin is confessed, dare to believe it is put away by Him who is our rear-guard, and who encompasses us behind as well as before. I have derived the greatest possible comfort from Gen. xxxv. 5. The sons of Jacob had done an abominable thing which exposed them to the hatred and vengeance of the people of the land, but there seems to have been a great moral and religious movement amongst them (chap. xxxv. 1-4), after which these words occur: "And they journeyed, and a great terror was on the cities that were around them, and they did not pursue after the sons of Jacob." It was as though God intercepted the pursuit of those who were justly incensed against them, and prevented the natural consequences of their sin. Do not always be looking behind you, as though some bogie were about to leap on your back. Forget mistake and failure. Look up to God to bring good out of evil. Do not linger around the graves of the dead past; let the dead bury its dead, but go thou and preach.

What things are before? Life is before. Opportunities are before. God is before; there is not an inch of ground in all the future from which He is absent. The goal is before, which stands, of course, for the completion of holy character, and the fulfilment of life's ministry. The prize is before, standing for Peace, and Blessedness, and the comfortable satisfaction that you have been well-pleasing. And Christ Jesus is before, who waits to present you faultless before the presence of his glory. We cannot say certainly that death is before, for we cannot tell if we may not be amongst those who shall be alive and remain at the coming of the Saviour. But we do know that there lies before us the extreme moment when we shall exchange worlds. Let us keep these things well in mind, and almost insensibly we shall be attracted towards them.

C.E. NOTES.

Endeavourers all over the country are throwing themselves heartily into the coming Simultaneous Mission.

A Primitive Methodist Society in West Hartlepool has recently held a two-days' sale of work, resulting in the sum of £76. Of this, £55 was to clear off a deficit on the trust fund, and the balance to furnish and re-decorate the school premises.

A large gathering of Christian Endeavourers was presided over by Capt. Wisely, R.E., at the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's headquarters last week. Professor M'Caig, of the Pastors' College, gave a helpful address on "Methods of Bible Study."

A new C.E. booklet, entitled, "Christian Edeavour in the Church of England," by Rev. E. R. Hassé, has just been published. The introduction is by Prof. Handley Moule, who says: "I would cordially commend to my ministerial brethren in the Church of England the adoption, where possible, of the Christian Endeavour system, as a very valuable parochial aid."

There is an "Old People's Committee" in connection with an Exeter Society, who have under their especial care a number of aged poor. The object of the committee is not to provide them with temporal necessities, but to visit them regularly, read and sing to them, and then help to brighten the loneliness of poverty-stricken old age, whilst during Christmas they were provided with some of the necessaries of life, with little dainties in addition.

Sheffield is to have the pleasure of receiving, in May next, the delegates to the National Council of the British Endeavour Societies, and a strong Reception Committee has been formed, with Mr. Alderman Batty Langley, M.P., as president. Local interest is being aroused in the coming event by the publication of a monthly "Convention Messenger," a copy of which is regularly placed in the hands of every Sheffield Endeavourer. The Reception Committee expect to have to provide accommodation for 8,000 visitors, which means that the resources of even a city of 400,000 inhabitants will be severely taxed.

International S.S. Lesson.

January 13, 1901.

THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY (Matt. xxi. 1-17).

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Matt. xxi. 9).

INTRODUCTION.

(6) THIS verse introduces the whole lesson. The disciples had done exactly what their Master had told them to do in the first three verses, and unknowingly they help to fulfil one of the last scenes in the life of the World's Redeemer as prophesied in the Old Testament (Zech. ix. 9).

Key to Blackboard Plan.—"Hosanna"—"save now." "In the Highest"—words used at the birth of Christ (Luke ii. 14.) He cometh—"He," the King (Luke xix. 38).

1. THE PROCESSION.

We see a good deal of processions in these days; and we know they always have some object for their formation, and a central figure or figures to be honoured. So it was here, Jesus Christ Himself started it and He was the central figure. He had not gone far before crowds of people joined Him and followed singing and praising (8, 9). The procession started from Bethphage, a suburb of Jerusalem, situated on the side of the Mount of Olives. Just at this time many pilgrims were assembling for the Passover feast, and they all joined the crowd.

(8) The branches were palm-branches (John xii. 13), used in times of joy (Lev. xxiii. 40; Rev. vii. 9).

2. THE CENTRAL FIGURE OF THE PROCESSION.

(7) The Christ, the Saviour, the Redeemer, the True Lamb for the coming Passover, Jesus, the King (5) (John xii. 16; Luke xix. 38). The ass was a favourite animal with the Jews, they did not use horses for such occasions as this, but it was thought an honour to ride upon an ass, as in this case. There is always music in state processions, here (9) the music is a song, taken up and repeated (15) by the children later on.

3. THE END OF THE PROCESSION.

(12, 13) At the Temple, the principal building in the famous city of Jerusalem, and here Jesus goes in to "his own house" (13) and turns out all that has no right in that sacred place. Again we see Him in his mighty compassion healing the sick (14), and He notices the little children (16) as they chant his praises. (17) He turns for the night to his friends at Bethany and lodges there.

LESSONS WE GATHER.

1. The King.—(5) Thy King cometh. Is He your King? Do you know Him personally? Or do you have to ask the question in (10), "Who is this?" Notice his character (Zech. ix. 9) and compare it with Matt. xi. 28-30, and then decide if you are willing to take his yoke upon you and let Him be King of your life.

2. The Temple (12, 13). He came to the temple and He called it "my house." Look at 1 Cor. iii. 16, vi. 19, and consider if your heart is his temple, and if it is, is there not much in it that He needs to cast out? See Mark xi. 11, "He entered into the temple, looked round and went out;" (15) "He went into the temple and began to cast out;" (27) "He walked in the temple;" (Chap. xii. 35) "He taught in the temple." Taking "the temple" as our hearts, let us examine ourselves by these four texts.

3. The Children (15, 16). Happy little ones singing Messiah's praises. Are we singing his praises and glorifying Him in our lives? Shall we meet Him with joy? Let Him take full possession of your heart, that is the secret of it all.

Mr. H. M. Barnett, of Stamford Hill, has added Cowper to his repertory of biographical lectures. He recently developed the story, with its charm and pathos, at a gathering of workers of the Christian Community, in the Memorial Hall, Bethnal Green, E. Three of Cowper's hymns were sung, and the lecture was followed with deep sympathy and interest.

The Children's National Guild of Courtesy was founded to encourage a spirit of chivalry among children—to stimulate them to be courteous, and to promote habits of neatness and cleanliness, also purity of action and speech. The Guild is well worthy of attention on the part of workers among children. Particulars may be had from Mr. H. E. Norton, 56, Old Bailey, London, E.C.

Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise.—Through circumstances over which Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh had no control, this cause has suffered seriously by a fire which took place at the printers' some few weeks ago. In addition to the partial stoppage of the work, the monetary loss is estimated to be at least £250; and this at a time when special efforts for the distribution of literature are being made by atheists. Friends desiring to help in this time of need may communicate with Mr. Bradlaugh at 70, King's Cross Road, London, W.C.

Children's Protection League.—At a convention of the South-West London Christian Endeavour Societies, recently held at the Northcote Road Baptist Church, Clapham Junction, Rev. Frederick Hastings, founder of the above League, attended and gave a stirring address on the aims and objects of the League. A resolution was adopted approving of the new movement, appealing as it does for a measure to give legal force to the recommendations of the Royal Commission, forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquors to children under sixteen. The League is arranging for the holding of a Metropolitan Conference at Exeter Hall early in February. Lord Peel is President of the League (in conjunction with Lady Henry Somerset and Lady Elizabeth Biddulph).

Evangelistic.

Mr. Wharton at Hillsborough, N. Carolina.

WE have had the great pleasure and blessing of a visit from Mr. Wharton. The Christians seemed to gain so much better ideas of the Father's love than before. One of the girls Mr. Morgan and Mr. Wintle worked so hard with came to be such a bright happy Christian. She was "a mourner" for two days, and found peace at nearly midnight, but she and several with her came back to tell Mr. Wharton. I do wish we could have some one like him come oftener. We do need the help so much. We felt that our friends in England were remembering us and praying for us. B. C. B.

Rev. T. Waugh at Alford.

A gracious revival has been experienced at Alford, Lincs., during a mission conducted by Rev. T. Waugh. Mr. Waugh held a mission in Alford twelve years ago, and many of the converts are now active workers. The services were preceded by a week of prayer and a thorough canvass, and Mr. Waugh found a people expecting a great work of God. The first week the weather was bad, and there were some strong counter attractions, but the audiences grew, and the power deepened, and the last four services were times of harvest. Many people sought Christ while in their pews, and came out to confess themselves the Lord's. Others found peace at home, and several in the missioner's sitting-room, which became an inquiry room. Two of the services were for men only and women only. The good work continues, there being six seekers the Sunday evening after Mr. Waugh's departure.

In Devonshire Villages.

A correspondent writes:—"Services have been conducted at Exminster and Countess Weir, Devonshire, by Mr. John Elliott. The numbers and interest increased, and it was thought well to continue the mission a week longer than had been arranged. The meetings at Countess Weir were held in a farmhouse kitchen, which was fitted up with planks and chairs to accommodate about seventy people. There is no chapel or Gospel hall in the village, but as a result of the mission, meetings are to be held weekly in the kitchen.

"At Exminster the meetings were held in the Gospel Hall, and were attended mostly by friends who are engaged at the lunatic asylum, as nurses and attendants, quite a number of whom are on the Lord's side. Some of them were converted at a former mission of Mr. Elliott's. How many farmers there are who might turn their kitchens into meeting places, at very little expense, for mission services to be held by some of the Lord's servants!"

The Brothers Cotelingam.

The Brothers Cotelingam have been much encouraged in their work in the West of England and elsewhere. They conducted a nine days' mission in the Victoria Hall, Weston-super-Mare. The attendance was large, particularly towards the close of the mission, and there were many cases of professed conversion. More than 120 letters reached the evangelists, testifying to blessing received. The next series of meetings was at Bristol, where gatherings were held in several churches, halls, and parochial rooms. Many spoke of good realized in the meetings. Another place of work has been York, where the Theatre Royal was the scene of crowded meetings, followed by services in church buildings belonging to various denominations.

God has used the evangelists, and they are appreciative of much sympathy shown to them by Christians in Great Britain. For the information of such, they have told their family and personal story in a booklet, fully illustrated and interesting in details. Sir George Williams contributes a cordial preface. (6d. Morgan & Scott.)

Mr. W. R. Lane in Guernsey.

At the first meeting of Mr. W. R. Lane's recent ten days' mission in Guernsey, which took the form of a kind of conference of workers—every Free Church in the town of St. Peter Port was represented by its minister, who extended to Mr. Lane a warm, brotherly welcome. Throughout his mission Mr. Lane had the fullest sympathy of these brethren, and day by day he found them by his side, ready to perform right loyally whatsoever part he assigned them.

All the meetings, with the exception of the two Sabbath morning services, were held in the commodious Methodist New Connexion Church. The attendance, which was good at the beginning of the mission, daily increased, and was really grand at the final gathering.

Three meetings of the series call for particular mention: First, The lecture (illustrated by fifty fine lantern pictures) on "Bunyan and the Pilgrim's Progress," which was listened to with rapt attention by a large audience. It was a happy thought which led Mr. Lane to introduce this ever-new old story into his Gospel work. He draws his hearers along with him, until they feel that Christian's battles are their battles, and Christian's victories their victories. Second, The "Talk with Men" on the afternoon of the second Sunday. Upwards of 400 men were present, and the deepest interest was manifested in the address on "Personal, Domestic, and Social Purity"—a topic in which any but a Christlike man is apt to sin against the proprieties, but which Mr. Lane handled with the effect of producing an impression which can never be effaced from the memory of those who heard it. Third, the lecture, "From the Gamblers' Table to the Mercy-seat," being the story of Mr. Lane's conversion.

Mr. Lane completely gained the ear of the Guernsey populace. If circumstances had allowed him to extend his mission another week, there can be little doubt that the largest public building in the island would have proved too small for the accommodation of the people wishful to hear.

It is impossible, even if it were desirable, to tabulate results; the richest result of Mr. Lane's testimony will appear, and does even now appear, in the awakening of ministers and church members to a more strenuous endeavour to place Christ before unsaved men as the Saviour they need: Christ dying to redeem sinners from condemnation and everlasting ruin; Christ living to succour his people in their travail and temptation and weariness and sorrow.

H. Millican, Presbyterian Minister.

Mr. Julian Neale has concluded a series of Gospel mission services at Peterborough and Whittlesea. God has richly blessed the meetings, and many souls have sought the Lord. The evangelist presented each convert with a "marked" New Testament when leaving.

The Primitive Methodists of Marshchapel have been holding a fortnight's special services, conducted by Mr. J. Westwood, of Cleethorpes. The congregations have been good, the church has been blessed, and several souls have been won for Christ.

J. W. Dunham.

A fourteen days' Gospel Mission has just been brought to a close at Cornbury Road Mission, S.E., whereby many have come to a saving knowledge of the truth. The little work is carried on by a working man (who with his family resides on the premises), and his small body of willing though poor workers. A.G.S.

The Earl of Carrick and Mr. and the Hon. Mrs. Mandeville have held an Evangelistic Mission in the Town Hall, Newry, December 2-18. The attendance has been considerable, and a deep spirit of hearing and interest has been manifested. Christians have been helped, and several cases of conversion and restoration have caused rejoicing.

Mr. Bob Johnson during the last few months has given three Gospel and temperance addresses in connection with the Upper Norwood Total Abstinence Society, of which Rev. John G. Train is president. His Gospel and temperance songs and choruses, accompanied by him on banjo or guitar, have become very popular. On each occasion several pledges were taken. On Boxing Day, when he was in Norwood New Town Mission Church, an overflow meeting for the children was held in the schoolroom. With the help of the visitors, the local public house was emptied, and the barman and his wife were at Mr. Johnson's meeting.

An encouraging series of evangelistic services has just closed at Montrose, conducted by Mr. J. A. Smith, superintendent of the Gordon Mission, Aberdeen. The Gospel has been again proved to be, as of old, "the power of God unto salvation," and the faithful application of it has aroused a deeper interest in the things of God than we have seen for a long time. Night after night, during the second week, anxious souls were dealt with, and went home trusting the Saviour. The last Sunday evening the hall was packed. The Word was with power, the listening intense, and ere the meeting broke up souls had passed out of darkness into light.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on the work of a Bible carriage in Hants and Dorset, conducted by Messrs. S. J. Voysey and A. Phillips.

For an ingathering of souls during an eight days' mission now proceeding at Barnstaple, conducted by Mr. Arthur Payne, late of Wellingborough.

For blessing on a mission at the Stafford Rooms Y.M.C.A., Titchborne Street, W., commencing January 18, by Mr. Albert A. Cater.

For blessing during a fortnight's mission at Hounslow Heath, from January 6, by Mr. B. H. Angel; that many soldiers may be drawn to the meetings.

The Week of Prayer.

THE topics suggested by the Evangelical Alliance for the Week of Prayer are as follows:—Monday, January 7, "The Church Universal;" Tuesday, January 8, "Our Own Land;" Wednesday, January 9, "Other Nations;" Thursday, January 10, "Heathen Lands;" Friday, January 11, "The Mohammedan World;" Saturday, January 12, "The Jews."

Among other special gatherings arranged in connection with the week are:—

Mildmay Conference Hall:—Monday, 7, 11 a.m., Colonel Morton, Rev. H. L. C. de Candole; 7.30 p.m., Colonel Morton, Rev. J. Wilkinson; Tuesday, 8, 11 a.m., Colonel Morton, Rev. D. B. Hankin; 7.30 p.m., Mr. W. H. Seagram, Rev. P. Carmichael; Wednesday, 9, 11 a.m., Colonel Morton, Rev. W. J. Cooke; 7.30 p.m., Colonel Morton, Rev. F. T. Snow; Thursday, 10, 11 a.m., Dr. W. Gauld, Mr. M. Beauchamp; 7.30 p.m., Mr. E. Trotter, Mr. E. P. Field; Friday, 11, 11 a.m., Rev. Dr. J. Gritton, Mr. Edward Glenny; 7.30 p.m., Mr. H. C. Nisbet, Rev. W. St. Clair Tisdall; Saturday, 12, 11 a.m., Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Rev. J. Wilkinson; 7.30 p.m., Colonel Morton, Rev. J. Wilkinson, Dr. Dixon.

Trinity Presbyterian Church, Kensington Park Road (embracing the congregations of Trinity Church and Talbot Tabernacle):—Monday, 7, Pastor Frank H. White; Tuesday, 8, Mr. Robert Anderson; Wednesday, 9, Colonel Oldham; Thursday, 10, Mr. Eugene Stock; Friday, 11, Mr. Edward Glenny; Saturday, 12, Rev. David Baron.

Other gatherings arranged are Exeter Hall, daily at 1 p.m.; Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., daily at noon; Metropolitan Tabernacle, Jan 7, at 7.30. p.m.

Personalia.

Dr. Harry Guinness.—We regret to say that, after making steady progress, Dr. Guinness had a serious relapse on Monday morning. However, during the day he rallied wonderfully. Continued special prayer is asked for his recovery.

Mr. Alexander R. Saunders, of the China Inland Mission, writing from Shanghai, November 14, 1900, says: "My dear wife is now making a good recovery from typhoid fever, no doubt the result of the terrible journey we had from Shansi to Hankow." Mr. and Mrs. Saunders are expected in England as we go to press.

Subsequent to undergoing a third operation for cancer of the jaw, Surgeon-General Partridge writes: "A microscopic examination showed that the disease has not come back. Many who have remembered me in prayer, will join with me in praise. Whether the Lord stops the disease altogether or not, I leave with Him, who does all things well."

Rev. W. A. Essery, hon. secretary of the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society, leaves London, January 4, as a passenger per Orient liner Oruba, on a tour of friendly visitation to the Missions aided by the Society in Egypt, Palestine, and Syria. He expects to reach Cairo on the 17th inst., and that the entire round will occupy over four months. He is the bearer of a fraternal message of encouragement to the Missions from the committee.

Christians and the War.

IN a letter to us on the War in South Africa, Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby emphasises the need for intercession on the part of Christian people. He says: "On the day of intercession (Feb. 11), the need was brought home to me of some scheme of prayer which might enable individuals to remember at the Throne of Grace, on the same day our most striking national needs in connection with the war. Accordingly, in a few days' time, my printers had designed a very striking four-paged pamphlet with a khaki cover, and with the cordial commendation of The Record, the Life of Faith, and THE CHRISTIAN, it was warmly take up. When, however, the successes came as they did, almost immediately, most people seemed to think that the time for prayer was past, and in any case the demand for the leaflet soon ceased. This scheme of prayer is designed for a week, and is practically as much required now as it was on the day it was issued. If, then, Christians care to join in this simple plan of united prayer, I shall be glad to send copies, at little more than the cost of postage." (Address to Livingstone College, Leyton, and enclose a penny stamp for six copies).

Captain HENRY BARING, late of the 17th Lancers, writes, from 5, Clanricarde Gardens, Tunbridge Wells: "In the admirable list of Topics Suggested for the Week of Universal Prayer, January 6 to 13, 1901, published by 'The Evangelical Alliance,' there is no definite petition for a speedy termination of the struggle in South Africa. I am well aware of the advisability of limiting, as far as possible, our prayers to subjects which can be heartily joined in by Christians of 'other nations" in this week of 'Universal Prayer;' but when we gather together to wait upon God, on Tuesday, January 8, respecting 'our own land,' might it not be well, whilst confessing our national sins of pride, vainglory, and an un-Christian spirit towards other nations' (as suggested), to beseech our gracious Father to bring about an early cessation of hostilities in South Africa if it be in accordance with his all-wise purposes? I have the privilege of attending prayer meetings in various parts of 'our own land,' and I have been surprised to find how very rarely our God is now approached on the matter of this protracted war. It was not so a year ago. Are we beginning to think that we can dispense with his aid now that our position yonder is bettered? Perhaps those of God's dear children who take any leading part in the united prayer meetings on Tuesday, January 8, may be led to propose confession of our forgetfulness of God in this matter, and prayer for peace in South Africa."

Notices.

The hymn beginning "A saint! Oh would that I could claim" is by John Marriott, who wrote it about 1815 on hearing the name applied in a scornful manner at a social gathering. It appears in several collections.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—Miss Anna Scantlebury, 24, Main Street, Cadoxton, near Barry, S. Wales; Mr. F. B. Spray, Westleigh, Wellington, Somerset; Mr. W. Bilton, 20, Great Eastern Street, Cambridge; Mr. Arthur Payne, evangelist, 76, Braunton Road, Barnstable; Mr. Alfred Hawkes, Lilian Road, Burnham-on-Crouch, Essex; Mr. Robert Russell, Waldren Street, Sussex; Mr. R. J. Tippett, evangelist, care of Captain Murrish Potheras, Pendeen, R. S. O., Cornwall; Miss Ellen Bilbey, Aston Clinton, Tring, Bucks; Mrs. W. T. Oakley, Milton Keynes, Newport Pagnell; Mr. C. E. Jackson, The Boys' Home, Bradshaw, near Bolton, Lancs. (old Christmas cards).

Dinners for the Sick Poor.—By means of the St. Marylebone Dinner Table and Soup Kitchen, which is held in the Portman Chapel Mission House, hundreds of the poor in the district are supplied with food during the winter months. From November to April last winter over 21,000 persons were thus benefited. Applicants come from many parishes for hot and nourishing meals provided. The treasurer and secretary is Lady Thompson, 35, Wimpole Street, Cavendish Square, W.

Some Special Offers in Books.

THE problem with many grown-ups at this time of year is, what books shall I buy for the children? An answer may be found in the special parcel which Messrs. Morgan & Scott offer for 10s., carriage paid. It contains seven volumes of Rev. E. Payson Hammond's works; a book by A.L.O.E., entitled PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY; a tale by Mrs. Hunter, entitled JOE WITLESS; and the six volumes of "NETTIE'S MISSION" LIBRARY; in all fifteen volumes for 10s., as stated above (or 11s. 9d. if for abroad).

Another special offer, which will appeal to preachers, teachers, and all students of the Scriptures, is the 6s. parcel of Biblical works. This includes a copy of CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE (3s. 6d.); a handbook to the Old and New Testament, entitled THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER (2s. 6d.); THE BIBLE INTERPRETER, an illustrated dictionary of the Scriptures (1s. 6d.); and two other valuable works: SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES (2s. 6d.), by Dr. J. Anderson, and CHRIST LIFTED UP (2s. 6d.), by Rev. R. Gilchrist. These five books, it will be noted, total up to 12s. 6d.; but the publishers offer the parcel, carriage free, for 6s. (or if for abroad, 8s.).

Yet another special offer, which is of special appropriateness at this time, when so many are being turned aside to the errors of Romanism, is the parcel of Protestant books for 9s., carriage paid, including a splendid edition of FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS, with twelve full-page illustrations, and a steel-plate frontispiece. This book alone is published at 10s. 6d. Then there is a copy of THE CATACOMBS AT ROME, by Mr. Benjamin Scott, F.R.A.S.; two of Miss Richardson's books, giving practical experience in Romanism; a small book by General Dunne, dealing with Papal Infallibility; and fifty-four copies of a pamphlet on THE CONFESSIONAL, by Miss Richardson. This latter will be found very useful for distribution. The whole parcel of volumes and pamphlets is offered for 9s., carriage paid (or 11s. 8d. if for abroad).

The publishers, however, make one condition with all these "special offers"—it is that those ordering will undertake to carefully place the copies of THE CHRISTIAN (which will be enclosed in each parcel) with some friends not as yet acquainted with the paper, in the hope that they may be induced to become regular subscribers. All orders for these special parcels of books should be sent, with remittance, to MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C. [ADVT.]

Singing the Gospel.

THE great popularity of SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS is evidenced by the crowds which flocked to hear Mr. Sankey during his recent visit to this country; and during all the years since the book was first introduced, its influence has been continually growing, until to-day it is used in every religious denomination, including the Church of England, and "the music of the Gospel" has by its means been spread far and wide. Full list of prices, with specimens of type, etc., of all Editions of Sacred Songs and Solos, New Hymns and Solos, and The Christian Choir, can be obtained post free from Messrs. Morgan and Scott, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

The latest development is the "Evangelistic Hymn Book" (One Halfpenny), which contains 157 Hymns and Choruses compiled from "Songs and Solos." This book, which can be had for 3s. 5d. per 100, post free, is specially adapted for brief missions, or open-air services. An Evangelist writes, it is "Just what is wanted." [ADVT.]

The Social Work of the Salvation Army.

Some Typical Cases, and their Outcome.

In the dock at the Old Bailey stood C. J., a girl of 17, to be tried for her life for murdering her babe. The Army Officer had interviewed her in prison, found the child's father, secured counsel, and pleaded for her with the Justice on the Bench. At the end of her sentence she stepped into the sheltering care of one of the Army's Rescue Homes, where she is to-day, earning her own living, and converted. Such cases are continually occurring. We received no less than 2,460 Girls into our Rescue Homes last year, the majority of whom are now, by God's grace, doing well.

S. J. has spent forty years out of fifty-seven in jail! The lash and the law had only hardened him. Taught to pick pockets by his father when nine years old, he became the despair of policeman and chaplain. The Police Authorities sent him to the Army's Prison Gate Home, where he found an opportunity to help himself. He earned his first honest shilling with us; has lived a consistent Christian life for years; and has been used to reclaim many of his old "pals." 525 Ex-criminal Men were under our care last year, and many Women ex-prisoners.

She is over seventy, partly blind, alone in the world, and bedridden. The Army's Slum Sisters found her starving, brought her food, cleansed her and her tiny room; and pointed her to Christ. In the court hard by, one of the Army's Slum Nurses tended the sick poor, and carried the Gospel to them. Their repulsive squalor is often as indescribable as their spiritual darkness, but the 100 devoted Slum Officers bring light and joy to thousands of the darkest hovels. Last year 59,718 Slum Families were visited, in 45,103 public-houses Salvation Literature was sold, and the Slum Nurses tended 1,777 Sick People.

Drink and debauchery caused G. M. to break up three homes. His heart-broken wife and children left him, and he disappeared in London's maelstrom. The Army undertook to trace him, and with the sole aid of a photograph the Social Officer discovered him in a low doss-house. Work at the Land Colony revived him; salvation made him. And the outcome? The poor Colonists themselves have clubbed together to furnish a cottage for the reconciled wife, now en route to rejoin him! We found work for 9,476 Destitute Men last year, and gave each the Service of Love with the opportunity of Labour.

At home and abroad, no less than 5,977,890 Cheap Meals were supplied last year, and 3,846,015 were sheltered. 16,676 Men, Women, and Children can be housed, fed, and helped nightly. Yet we are compelled through lack of room to turn away from our doors scores nightly.

Will You please Help this Labour of Love?

Many necessary extensions of the work among men, women, and children, both in London and the Provinces, are at a standstill for lack of funds, and our receipts last year were £7,000 less than in the previous twelve months.

Please address contributions to Mrs. BOOTH, 101, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C., or may be sent to the Office of The Christian. Cheques and Postal Orders should be made payable to WILLIAM BOOTH, and crossed "Bank of England, Law Courts Branch." Annual Reports and Balance Sheets will be sent upon application, and arrangements made for personal inspection of any of the Homes.

About Books.

SOME JANUARY MAGAZINES.

WE are glad to find a permanent record of the recent Glasgow conference on "Sunday Trading" in The Original Secession Magazine.

The Evangelical Alliance Quarterly has some articles of special value, including "Apostolic Preaching," by Dr. David MacEwan, and "Recent Explorations and Discoveries" by Professor A. H. Sayce. (1d. Morgan & Scott.)

The first number of The Missionary Record of the United Free Church of Scotland is a model church organ. Valuable general articles are given, in addition to news from the many fields in which the Church is engaged at home and abroad.

The Reaper enters on its twenty-first year of ministry among Christian workers in Scotland. The notes of mission work at home and abroad are fresh and interesting. Considerable attention is given to notes on Scriptural subjects, for the use of workers. (1d. Marhall Brothers.)

One of the most welcome of monthly magazines is our old friend The Quiver, the new number of which worthily maintains a high reputation. Among other very readable articles is "A Bishop and his Bible," in which Archdeacon Madden gives some interesting reminiscences of the late Bishop Ryle. (6d. Cassell & Co.)

The C.M.S. publications are as rich as ever in missionary contents. The Intelligencer (6d.) opens with a luminous Century sketch by the Editor. The Gleaner (1d.) has an important letter from Bishop Ridley, of British Columbia, and an account of work among the Ainus of Japan. Mercy and Truth (1d.) describes medical work in various parts of the great mission field.

In The Sunday at Home a new story by Amy Le Feuvre is running, entitled "Heather's Mistress." Mr. John Ward writes on "The Mystery of the Scarabs," throwing pleasant light upon Egyptian history and antiquities. Another notable article is by Rev. J. G. Greenhough on "The Men who shall make the New Century." The Leisure Hour begins the year with a profusion of articles, both instructive and recreative, and bears witness to wise and skilful management. There is a wealth of pictorial embellishment. (6d. each. Religious Tract Society.)

The Boy's Own Paper opens the year with a number marked by the features which have obtained so wide a measure of popularity. Stories of adventure are plentiful, and there are several articles of an educational character. The frontispiece is a striking representation, in chromo-lithography, of a sand-storm in Egypt. In The Girl's Own Paper, the Hon. Mrs. Maclagan answers the question, "What is an Ideal?" Another interesting article, fully illustrated, is, "A Girl's Flower Garden, and What She can Do with it." The features that have long characterized this monthly are admirably sustained. (6d. each. Religious Tract Society.)

The variety of wholesome reading for which Good Words has become so widely appreciated, is ably sustained. The Sabbath meditations from St. Paul's Epistles, by Rev. Geo. Jackson, B.A., deal with important themes and vital principles, and cannot fail to inspire earnest and devout study of the Apostle's ministry. The Sunday Magazine gives promise of an interesting and acceptable volume. Among other items, a series of papers on "Noble Women of Our Time" begins most fittingly with Miss Daniell, of Aldershot, whose consecrated life did much to lift the moral tone of the British army out of a very pit. Dr. A. R. MacEwen, of Glasgow, contributes a paper on the union of the Scottish churches, which will give to many a much-needed summing up of the event which took place two months ago. In this historical résumé, however, justice does not seem to be done to the Relief Church, which united with the Secession on equal terms in 1847: while the date of the disruption of the Church of Scotland was May, 1843, not 1842. (6d. each. Isbister & Co.)

The Golden Rule: An Illustrated Magazine for School and Home, makes an attractive volume. (2s. Sunday School Union.) There are bright stories and sketches, with many illustrations.

The fourteenth volume of Miss Mason's Rest and Reaping (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott) will be acceptable to many, providing as it does varied and interesting notices of Christian work and workers in the home and foreign mission fields, notes on prophetic and other Scriptures, with timely articles on domestic, social, and general religious subjects. Features worthy of special notice are the reports of addresses given in the Pillar Hall, and the well-chosen poems with which each number is enriched.

GEORGE MACGREGOR.

AMONG recent "lives" a worthy place must be assigned to George H. C. Macgregor: A Biography. By Rev. Duncan Campbell Macgregor, M.A., Wimbledon. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The subject of the record was widely known in Christian circles; he was highly esteemed as a teacher, and warmly loved as a friend. After his death, in May last, it was hoped that Professor Moule or Rev. F. B. Meyer would undertake the preparation of a memoir, but as they were unable to do so the duty was entrusted to his cousin. The result is a volume which is alike readable and instructive, the singularly attractive narrative being presented in a remarkably lucid style.

The story is essentially one of an unfolding life—in which youth foreshadowed manhood. A son of the manse, and born at Ferintosh, in Ross-shire, George Macgregor anticipated his ministerial vocation while yet a lad. He seems to have passed almost imperceptibly into Christian life, and at the outset of his service in the Gospel to have seen, in part at least, the truths which he was so much used to teach during the most busy years of after life. Passing from Inverness Academy to Edinburgh University, he took his degree before he was twenty years old; and then studied Divinity for four years at New College. While yet a student, he worked as private tutor and assistant minister; and nevertheless he won distinction all along. From that time until he ascended to the heavenly service, he was a man of one controlling ambition, and subordinated everything to his calling as a minister of Jesus Christ. Such was his reputation as we knew him; and such is the helpful impression conveyed by this inspiring book.

There are some deeply interesting chapters regarding Mr. Macgregor's work. After acting for a short time as Hebrew tutor, he was asked to go to Aden to take up the work founded by the lamented Ion Keith Falconer; but on medical examination he was declared unsuited for life in tropical latitudes. He was in spirit ready to go, but he held that God wished him to stay at home. Consistently with his attitude at this critical moment, he was ever afterwards full of sympathy with missionary enterprise, and the larger cause of God's kingdom occupied a warm place in his heart. In 1888 he settled at Aberdeen, where he did excellent work, and in 1894 he came to London, and ministered till his death in Trinity Presbyterian Church, Notting Hill. In the meantime he had been to Keswick, and added its message to Christian people to the evangelistic ministry which he had already exercised with blessing on many hands.

Professor Moule writes a luminous chapter on Keswick and Mr. Macgregor's work there; and Mr. J. E. Mathieson contributes important notes on the London labours of his beloved pastor. For details of the preacher's methods and counsels, we must refer our readers to the book itself. There they will find a word-picture of one who, though a teacher on sanctification, by no means ignored justification doctrine; of one who drew the young around him as well as attracted very powerfully persons of maturer years; of one who knew darkness and sorrow, but yet was remarkably buoyant in the enjoyment of life, and eager in making noble use of its opportunities.

In labours abundant at home, Mr. Macgregor was greatly used in America, both in connection with Mr. Moody's work in the United States and in journeyings with companion "Keswick Brethren." He lived an intense life, but was at ease—"not a surge of worry." His wife tells us that he lived out all he preached. "He never got a cheque, however small, without at once marking down the tenth of it in his charity book to be given away. He never was worried about anything. He just seemed to cast all his cares on his Saviour, and nothing never seemed to ruffle his calm." The testimony of Mr. Mathieson is in complete agreement: "His life was in accord with his preaching, and in that preaching there was a note which sounded with special distinctness and emphasis—the call to a life of holiness."

The book gives us not simply a record of the life, but the secret of its sweetness and light. We trust it will have many readers, and that those who read will learn to follow George Macgregor as he followed Christ.

Mr. Frank T. Bullen, author of "The Cruise of the Cachalot," now gives us With Christ at Sea, a Religious Autobiography. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) Some of his recollections are sad in the extreme, some of them heart-stirring and full of spiritual pathos. The chapters on "Godless Days," and "A Dip into Tartarus," assuredly provoke the suggestion that the title should have been "Without Christ at Sea" (as the author himself allows); but it was in the darkest days that the gracious Providence of God was signally manifested, and when things looked absolutely hopeless that deliverance was wrought by the long-suffering, but ever-faithful Saviour. The narrative is full of life, and is sure of many readers.

Notes & Comments

THE following note from one who qualified for a copy of the TWO-VERSION BIBLE, under the scheme explained on another page, speaks for itself:—

The 20s. Bible has just arrived, and I can say it exceeds my expectations. I hardly know how to express my thanks for the beautiful gift, for such it truly is, the conditions being so simple as to lift it entirely out of the list of anything earned. And I especially thank you for allowing my young friend's name to be put in. Indeed, everything connected with it has been a source of perfect satisfaction, and I can only tender you my sincerest gratitude and thanks.

The chief journals of the country have printed special New Century messages from leading men in all walks of life. Curiously enough, with scarcely an exception, they may all be summed up in two sentences—the glorification of the material discoveries of the Nineteenth Century, and a hesitating forecast as to the future. Recent events, doubtless, largely account for the pessimism which prevails. One thing that surprises us is, that even in the religious summary of the Nineteenth Century, the great Evangelistic movements of the past three decades have no mention. All the summaries make much of the Oxford Revival, as if that were the only religious event of importance. Either the writers have been asleep, while the greatest evangelizing movements of the century have been in progress, or they fail to appreciate the real inner forces of religion.

We are sorrowfully in accord with a modern writer when he charges upon the nation that the prevalence of the materialistic spirit has resulted in "an universal dying down of the high standard of life." He says:—

Our immediate generation has been sinking of late to meaner ideals, to coarser ways of life, to more vulgar types of literature and art, to more open craving after wealth, and a more insolent assertion of the pride of force.

We heartily welcome the new Companies Act which came into operation on New Year's Day. It has appeared none too soon, for company promoting has attained the dimensions of a national scandal. Under the provisions of the new Act much of the misrepresentations and robbery to which we have been so unhappily accustomed will become impossible. We move slowly in all matters of reform, but it is gratifying when measures are passed for the purification of commercial life. But when will our legislators grasp the elementary fact that men's souls and bodies need protection as well as their purses?

A monthly contemporary, which deals almost entirely with the study of the Bible, looks forward hopefully in reference to the opening of the new century. The writer says:—

The discovery of a gospel in science, from which so much was expected, has become a disappointment. There is no other gospel at present in competition with the Gospel of Christ, and, more than that, there is a clearer understanding, we believe, than ever before, that those who name the name of Christ should depart from iniquity.

And he adds:—

Most hopeful of all is the prospect for the study of the Bible. . . . The methods of its interpretation are more fruitful. . . . The Bible is found to yield its richest treasure to minute self-denying research; yet minute research is found to be barren, and even pernicious without the life and light of the Spirit.

The following anecdote about the late Dr. Cave conveys a lesson worthy of attention from ministers and preachers generally. When he was a young man, the Congregational Colleges were all weak on the theological side. One of his deacons remarked to him:

Mr. Cave, you have only two subjects in your preaching, one is Conversion, and that suits the young people; the other is Providence, and that suits the old.

It is one of the solemn responsibilities and great difficulties of the ministry that the same man has to provide so many people with almost the whole of their religious instruction. This is a call to be as comprehensive as possible, and to preach an all-round Gospel, in which doctrine and duty, spiritual appeal and practical application, should have their due place and proportion.

A recent writer has said that if people only would speak of Bible things in Bible words, we should soon get rid of endless superstitions, and tests, and standards, and doxies, and turnstiles, into the Kingdom of God. The strength of the old "field-preachers" largely lay in this, that they were not technical or scientific theologians, but spoke of the things of God in the inspired words of God. They led men to make spiritual difficulties, not subjects of introspection and analysis, but the beginning of prayer. To-day there is a tendency in many pulpits to begin at the wrong end, and to urge the scientific instead of the experimental reading of the Bible—to make critics instead of Christians.

At the close of the year 1900 our national wealth has, it is estimated, reached the sum of £11,806,000,000, an increase of 244 per cent. during the sixty years, the wealth of Scotland having developed over 330 per cent. in the same period. There is, however, another and a darker side to the picture, for recent returns show that over 500 people die in England each year from actual starvation, 100 of the deaths occurring in London alone.

Although last year there was a slight falling off in the number of paupers in the metropolis, no fewer than 103,062 persons were in receipt of Poor Law relief there in December last, the cost being considerably over that (£3,446,182) of the previous year. This awful development of destitution side by side with a huge accumulation of wealth, emphasises the fact that our prosperity is in many directions based upon our shame. If the swelling revenue from the drink traffic could be eliminated from the national balance sheet, what a surcease in poverty would immediately result.

There are few social reforms more pressingly needed than shorter hours for shop-assistants. It is calculated that 500,000 men 250,000 women, and 250,000 shopkeepers are interested in this reform. Many of these work for thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen hours per day, the average time being eighty-four hours per week—thirty hours longer than that of mechanics and artizans. Three hundred London doctors have testified to the serious detriment to health caused by this terrible overwork, which is often done under wretched conditions of light, air, and sanitation. Politicians of all schools have joined to advocate reform, and the House of Commons has unanimously, and more than once, adopted it in principle. And yet it has never become law. A matter so vitally related to the physical, mental and spiritual condition of a most deserving class of young people, must not be allowed to drop. But, unless public opinion honestly and earnestly backs it up, little will be done in face of the opposition directed against it.

Some one has said, "An ideal English home is the flower of the Christian centuries," and it might be added that the bloom on that flower is its religion. Let the religion go, and the beauty of the flower has vanished. There is thus point in the appeal of a correspondent for more care for the culture of home piety in the new century, and for the manifestation of the highest Christian virtues in the household on the part of those who take a leading part in religious work. It is useless to lament the fact that the boys and girls of Christian homes are so slow to make a confession of faith, when they are able to say truthfully that their parents are so busy with outside duties that they have no time to attend to their own households. Nothing is more melancholy than to have to plead guilty to the confession, "Thou hast made me a keeper of vineyards, and mine own vineyard have I not kept."

Appeals for the cessation of hostilities are increasing in number and force. In "A Word to the Followers of Christ in Great Britain," Patsor Theodore Monod says:

Your great nation has long stood before the world as representing, in the main, the religion of the Bible, law and order, light and liberty, peace and enterprise, power, pluck, and fair play. You have now reached (shall we say a turning point? Let us rather say) a trying point, a testing point, in your history. At the present time England has against her the moral sense of mankind. She can press on blindly, like Pharaoh of old, with consequences even more fatal to herself than to the brave people whose nationality she is seeking to destroy. Or she may, winning a noble victory over pride and passion, put an end to the conflict by proposing such terms of peace as can be honourably offered and honourably accepted. Doing this, she would at once come to herself again, and resume her place in the vanguard of civilization.

A recent writer has said somewhat bitterly, that our national acceptance of width of territory as a standard of imperial greatness "reduces the hills of Sinai and Calvary to negligeable quantities." Unfortunately the remark may be taken as a not unfair estimate of the extent of that moral and spiritual degeneration which appears to be permeating so much of our daily life. Unhappily our notable enthusiasms of late have been in the direction of war and bloodshed, and the signs are not numerous of an early return to higher standards. The whole world is a loser by this, for, as a thoughtful student has asked:

What would be the condition of the world now had we as promptly obeyed the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," as we obeyed the call of Queen and country to South Africa?

The cost of the standing armies of Europe is becoming too heavy a burden to be borne, yet the sum is constantly being added to at the cost of the worker and the taxpayer. A few days ago a Paris journal stated that the new war budget for France, meant one pound additional taxation upon every man, woman, and child in that country where the imposts are already excessive. Setting aside altogether the still darker calendar of the loss of human life, and the consequent poverty and misery, it may well be asked how long States will be permitted to wage cruel wars against each other, when all national difficulties might so easily be settled in peaceful arbitration.

The Porte has issued instructions prohibiting the settlement of Jews in Palestine. This must for a while necessarily affect that steady flow towards the Holy Land which has now been going on for some time past, and it must also result in a further development of Zionism. Of late there has been an evident purpose to realize the desire of the Jew to return to Jerusalem, and as of the 10,000,000 of Hebrews in the world one-half are on Russian soil, it is not difficult to foresee that very striking political complications may soon arise from the working of the new instructions. As Dr. Gottheil said a year or two ago, some outlet must be found for these millions of human beings whose only crime seems to be that they have been born Jews. That outlet the religious genius of the Hebrews has declared to be Palestine, and, in fulfilment of prophecy, that outlet will assuredly be opened.

There seems to be no doubt that the stories which have from time to time reached this country concerning the frightful barbarity of certain of the allied troops in China are unhappily too true. Dr. E. J. Dillon, as an eye-witness, describes scenes which are revolting beyond description. Upon the heels of his article comes a despatch from Japan, in which professed pagans rebuke the Russians as Christians for their inhumanities!

These facts help us to understand why the foreigner is hated, and why the Christian name is dragged into the mire. Japanese and Chinese make no distinction between converted and unconverted men, all Europeans alike being regarded by them as Christians. The missionary is often regarded as an ally of the military power. One thing is clear as day: when missionary work is resumed, the heralds of the Cross must never again lean upon or associate themselves with the secular power. They who would bring China to Christ must cease to be English, and become Chinese to the Chinese, in order that they may save some. This is the only Apostolic method of work.

Welcome light is thrown on Chinese problems by a charming biographical sketch just written by Mrs. Howard Taylor (née Geraldine Guinness): One of China's Scholars: The Culture and Conversion of a Confucianist (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott). It is the story of Pastor Hsi, of whom Rev. J. Hudson Taylor says in the preface:

> The self-centred, proud Confucianist was completely transformed through the power of the Gospel, and filled with the love of Christ. Hatred to the foreigner disappeared, and large-hearted philanthropy became the passion of his life.

This volume adds a signal instance to the list of Chinese converts who, through faith, have wrought righteousness, obtained promises, and made full proof of ministry for Christ.

It is interesting to note that the French Government have just published a volume in which Dr. Scheill gives some remarkable Semitic texts recently discovered during the excavations at Susa by M. de Morgan. These texts go back to the very beginning of Elamite civilization, and Professor Sayce, of Oxford, says of the valuable discovery:

> Our whole conception of early Elamite history has been revolutionized, and it turns out that the tenth chapter of Genesis is right after all in making Elam a son of Shem. Once more archæological discovery has confirmed the statement of an Old Testament writer, and this time in a most unexpected manner.

A very interesting account has been published of the discovery, in the innermost chamber of a tomb at Thebes, of the mummy of the Pharaoh of the Exodus, Meneptah, the son of Rameses II. In referring to the event, Professor Sayce alludes to the popular supposition that this Pharaoh was drowned in the Red Sea, a supposition for which there is no Biblical ground, or doubtless the Higher Criticism people would make much of the matter. Meneptah, according to Professor Sayce, lived to a ripe old age. It will be remembered that the mummy of Rameses, the Pharaoh of the Oppression, was discovered some years ago.

France seems awakening to the fearful evil of alcoholism which is so steadily sapping her strength. A week or two ago we referred to the mandate which the French Minister of Education had sent to all the schoolmasters, commanding them to teach the children the principles of temperance. French papers to hand now tell us of a number of Temperance Unions which are busy at work amongst the people. A celebrated Parisian doctor—M. Jacquet—recently delivered a lecture, which has created a great sensation in all quarters. In particular, he attacked the abominable drinking customs prevalent amongst mothers whilst suckling their children, declaring that one reason why there is so much drunkenness is the "wholesale poisoning of infants on the breast." What with depopulation on the one hand and increasing drunkenness on the other, French statesmen and doctors feel it necessary to bestir themselves. We wish them all success. And we want in this country men of position—doctors chief of all—who will say to our mothers and nurses what Dr. Jacquet had the courage to say at Amiens; for therein lies much of the evil which afflicts us.

The Vatican seems thoroughly alarmed at action of the French Government in dealing with the religious orders. The Matin publishes an account of an interview between M. Henri des Houx and the Pope, in which the latter is reported to have said that if France exiles the religious orders, they must find refuge in liberal countries like the United States and England. We certainly do not want them in this country, and we doubt if the United States, with all their eclecticism, will give them hospitality. The Vatican adopts an air of injured innocence, while the present political unrest in France is almost entirely due to the impertinent interference of the Jesuits, and the Assumptionists in particular, with French politics. The existence of a paper like the infamous La Croix, controlled by "religieux," is a menace to any nation. France is acting wisely, for her own best interests, in peremptorily commanding the monks to take their hands off the State machine.

Portuguese Protestantism has won a signal victory. A priest at Carminha, near Oporto, brought a charge against a Protestant gentleman for circulating tracts assailing the religion of the State. A large crowd listened to the depositions, and the defence was in the hands of an eloquent advocate, who, in a stirring speech, denounced the priest's conduct as being worthy of the days of the Inquisition. The Court, after an exhaustive consideration of the subject, gave a verdict of "Not Guilty." This verdict will give fresh heart to a movement which is rapidly permeating certain elements of Portuguese life, and will encourage many who are in secret sympathy with the Protestant faith to become its open adherents.

The proposal has been seriously made in America to establish an order of salaried Sunday school teachers, with a view to make the teaching more efficient and skilful. Professor Pease, of the Bible Normal College, Springfield, has strongly advocated this measure. Professor Sanders, of Yale University, however, suggests a compromise—that there should be a teachers' weekly meeting, addressed by a skilled and well-trained leader, who should be attached to all towns of a certain size, and who should give his whole time and energies to the work. This plan would be in every way more desirable than the original one. Sunday school teaching as it is, undoubtedly needs reformation in regard to its quality and thoroughness, but nothing could compensate for the loss of its voluntary character, which has been one of its noblest features from the beginning, while a great improvement would no doubt take place if the teachers were carefully drilled beforehand by a competent and devoted lecturer. If the occasional lectures of the Sunday School Union were developed into some such plan as this, it would prove an inestimable boon to both teachers and scholars.

Meanwhile a modification of this plan might be more extensively followed out than is now the case, i.e., that the pastor should have a teachers' preparation class once a week. There is far too little connection between many ministers and their Sunday schools, and this method of coming into contact with the workers would be a benefit to both sides. In an article in the American Biblical World for December this necessity of "Biblical Training for Lay Workers" is faced in a straightforward manner, and the writer lays down the principle that the pastor of the church is the right person to give it. Religious doubt often arises from defective instruction in the faith, and much of it might be obviated by careful and intelligent training in Christian doctrine. The writer goes on pertinently to add:

> If there were no other reason, this fact makes it indispensable that the Sunday-school teacher should have training in Bible study. It is unpardonable for the Protestant churches to leave the doctrinal and religious instruction of their future members to untrained men and women who must inevitably propagate misrepresentation of the Scripture and its teaching.

An evangelist's car is one of the fresh developments in American religious enterprise, and is growing a familiar object on trains west of the Mississippi. Usually the railway companies are willing to transport these cars free of charge, and in return for this concession valuable work is done among railway men. They afford a means of distributing pure literature, and the conducting of services on board the long journeys on American lines; as travellers are practically imprisoned for days on board the cars, there is splendid scope for this kind of work. The cars also make occasional halts at out-of-the-way places, where their ministry is of great value. An adaptation of the idea would fulfil a distinct mission in our own land.

Can Nothing More be Done?

DEAR FELLOW-CHRISTIANS,—As a Nation, we feel ashamed of the intemperance of England, and of what is said of us on this matter by foreign nations. As a Christian Church, we grieve over it, for it hinders all Christian work, and paralyzes every effort for good. As Individuals, we lament it, and pray about it, and some amongst us are trying to rescue a few of its victims. But what a drop in the ocean it all is; for, to our dismay, in spite of the increasing number of abstainers in this country, the drink bill grows larger, while drunkenness becomes more and more common and shameless—especially among women and children.

Our prisons, our workhouses, our lunatic asylums, are crowded with the fruits of this evil; in some cases seventy and eighty per cent. of the inmates being the direct result of strong drink. And we ask ourselves, what can be done? What, as a Christian nation, can we do to remedy this terrible evil, this upas tree, which is spreading in our midst? The only answer seems to be, that there must be a more prayerful, a more united effort of all the churches, of all who name the name of Christ, and who believe in his power to deliver and to save, if we would lift our country from of strong drink: a worse slavery truly than that of the negroes, for it chains the soul as well as the body.

It seems to me that until we all, as British Christians, look upon this evil as a thing which is ruining our country, and therefore which concerns everyone who loves his native land, and determine to forego it for "the present distress," nothing permanent can be done to free our country from this awful bondage.

Surely for Christ's sake and our brother's, is sufficient motive power for our self-denial, if such it is; for it is hindering Christian work, it is blocking the entrance of Christ into the heart, in every town and village. This hydra-headed monster of strong drink, stalking through our land, opposes us at every turn. Bishops, clergy, magistrates, doctors, and judges, all unite in condemning and denouncing this evil; and yet, marvellous to relate, there are still thousands of earnest Christian people who see no harm in it; they continue to take it, and are content to do nothing practical to try and check the intemperance around them. They know that it is of manhood from our men, womanhood and motherhood from our women, and innocence from our children. They lament it in words: alas! not in actions—they shut their eyes to its magnitude; and, because they like it, they will not give it up, or deny themselves this luxury, in order to try to rescue some of these perishing inebriates.

They repeat, Sunday by Sunday, "O Lord, arise, help us and deliver us, for thy Name's sake;" they profess to believe that "nothing is too hard for the Lord;" they read the words in God's Book, "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven;" yet they do nothing to save them. Shame on us as a Christian people! We are allowing this most terrible curse (the handmaid of other sins) to continue to wreck our country, and we make no national effort to cure it. Ought this so to be? I know that much is being done by noble men and women among us; but it needs a more combined effort to stem the evil, or surely we, as a nation, shall incur the just anger of God, who says—"If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain; if thou sayest, Behold we knew it not; doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it? and He that keepeth thy soul, doth not He know it? and shall not He render to every man according to his works?" (Prov. xxiv. 11, 12.)

Are we not, as a nation—nay, as a Christian Church—neglecting this duty of seeking to deliver those who are being drawn to death by strong drink — our fellow-townsmen and neighbours, for whom Christ died? Oh, that we would arise from this apathy, and prayerfully consider what can be done to rouse Christians on the subject! What of the 120,000 drunkards in our midst who pass every year into a drunkard's grave, and to a drunkard's eternity? What have we, one by one, done to save them from it? May God Himself lay this on our hearts; and may He help us to consider the subject as the followers of Him, who said, "Let him deny himself, and follow Me." "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it."

Worldliness.—I.

BY REV. F. C. SPURR, LEWISHAM.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 John ii. 15).

THIS is one of the most drastic verses in the Bible. So far as language is concerned it is entirely unambiguous, yet at first it produces within the reader a feeling of amazement, since it seems to be in full contradiction with the central Gospel statement that "God so loved the world." When, however, we remember that the writer who recorded the wonderful word, "God so loved the world" is the same who here bids us not to love the world, and that this writer is, par excellence, the apostle of love, we perceive at once that the world which God loves and the "world" which we are bidden to hate, are two different worlds. The same word is employed to indicate two different things.

The anchorite, untrue to God and to himself, misunderstands the apostolic injunction; and scorning both the world of nature and the world of men, retires from all that is fair, enclosing himself within the petty boundaries of his own poor life. The "world" we are exhorted to hold in contempt is neither the world of nature nor the world of humanity, since God loves them both, and bids us love them too.

It is a little difficult to define in a sentence what is exactly this "world" which remains the object of the Christian's hostility. It is easier to feel it than to focus it. We can however reach the definition by a little detour—thus: The world of mankind may be roughly divided into two great classes: the class that has knowledge of the true God, and the class that lacks this knowledge. Leaving out of reckoning at present those who are unevangelized, and dealing only with those to whom the Gospel has been preached, this class that has knowledge of the true God may again be divided into two classes—those who through Jesus Christ love and obey God, and those who refuse their love and obedience.

The aggregate number of those who, through Christ, love and obey God is called the CHURCH, and the aggregate number of those who deliberately withhold their love and obedience is called the WORLD.

This "world" is both organized and unorganized. Primarily it is a spirit-atmosphere which escapes our vision, and yet which enwraps us with its deadly embrace. "Worldliness" acts upon the human spirit as deadly bacteria act upon the body. No human eye beholds the tiny creatures which impregnate the atmosphere; nevertheless they make their home in impoverished human bodies, and speedily reduce their victims to prostration. And in like manner the worldly spirit which reigns amongst men seizes upon impoverished souls—frequently without their knowing it—and spoils their spiritual life.

Often, however, the "world" has an organization. Men and women possessed of the worldly spirit are naturally attracted to each other—they form societies, in which the laws of their master, the Devil, are supreme. The law of God is openly derided by them, and whenever the occasion presents itself, the "world" delights to come into collision with the Church. At the time of a general election, or when questions of morality, temperance, and religion are concerned, then it is easy enough to see that the "world" possesses a terrible and a tyrannical organization, which it

EMPLOYS AGAINST ALL GOOD THINGS.

Now this "world" is anathematized in unmeasured terms in the Scriptures. Let us first hear what our Divine Lord says of it:—"The world cannot hate you (i.e., the unbelieving brethren), but Me it hateth" (John vii. 7). And He declared that all his disciples must suffer this reproach with Him:—"Because you are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you" (xv. 19). When our Lord was leaving the world, the disciples were sorrowful, but the world rejoiced at his departure (xvi. 20). Jesus judged it without pity, and pronounced sentence upon its Prince (xii. 31). He spake of it as his antagonist, which He must needs "overcome" (xvi. 33). Publicly He reprobated it on account of its scandals and its traps set for souls (Matt. xviii.); and, most awful thing of all, upon the night of the Passion, when his love for men reached its floodtide (John xvii. 9),

HE REFUSED TO PRAY FOR THE WORLD.

Words cannot be clearer in their indication of what the Son of God thought of the "world." His apostles echoed the word of their Divine Master. Paul entreats his brethren "not to be conformed to the world" (Rom. xii. 2). James declares that a man "who will be a friend of the world makes himself the enemy of God" (Jas. iv. 4), and he uses a terrible word, and stigmatizes worldliness as "adultery." John tells us that "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 John ii. 15); and almost the last word in the New Testament presents the terrible picture of the world "lying in the Evil One" (1 John v. 19).

This language is most severe and most startling; it should awaken the careless to serious thought. There can be no two opinions as to what is meant. The "world" is entirely under the ban of the loving God. This is a most important truth for the Christian to learn, especially at this season of the year when worldly attractions seek on every hand to allure him from his allegiance to his Saviour, his Master, and his God.

Piacenza, Italy.—By invitation of Lord Radstock, a small gathering of friends was held in London, on Saturday, January 5, to meet Don Paolo Miraglia Gullotti, of Piacenza (Independent Roman Catholic bishop). Excommunicated five years ago, he still wears the priestly dress, and uses the Roman ritual, explaining as he does so the true import of the Scriptural phraseology used. He believes that his evangelical effort is helped in this way.

Persecution in China.

DEAR SIR,—We are surprised that there is so little published at home about the sufferings and murders of so very many workers for Christ in China at this time. Missionaries in China do not desire that the spirit of retaliation should be excited; but the facts of the case are sad and terrible enough to warrant us in expecting a widespread desire on the part of pastors and people of Christian churches to have days of humiliation and prayer before the Lord, specially interceding for the Church of God in China.

I am enclosing a true record of what one party has passed through, and this is but a sample of many such stories that could be told —only that the sufferers were not so successful in escaping from their enemies, and were called, after all, to violent deaths.

Then multitudes of our dear native brethren and sisters have also been called to suffer. How thankful we are, amid all the sorrow, for the bright and unmistakable evidence given of the power of the Gospel in the lives and victorious deaths of many of these Christians. "Brethren, pray for us."—Yours in Gospel bonds, J. McCarthy.

FLIGHT INTO THE MOUNTAINS.

Mr. and Mrs. Green and their two children, with Miss Jessie Gregg, had been labouring in the China Inland Mission at Huolu, when the news of the massacre of the missionaries in nearly all the stations around them caused them to prepare to flee to the neighbouring mountains. They proceeded on foot at dusk to a temple about two miles away, at the foot of the nearest mountains, but were soon turned out of this temporary abode. After three days they had to go to the fastnesses of the mountains, when they were shown a secret cave about 500 feet up the hillside, in which they lived two days and three nights. The roof and walls were dripping with moisture, and there was only a dry spot of about 4ft. by 5ft., on which the little party had to sleep, rest, cook, eat, &c. Their servants discovered a friendly farmer, whose house lay deeper in the mountains. This man proved one of their few real friends. He took them into his house at nightfall, and, for the month they remained, provided them with food and water. The danger of being discovered and betrayed was so great that they dared not come out by day. Their single-roomed, cave-like hovel had a small shaft for ventilation, and communicated with the kitchen of the farm house by an opening through which they could just crawl, which was then sealed up again.

DISCOVERY BY BOXERS.

On August 9, they heard an armed mob of Boxers in the courtyard having an angry altercation with the farmer. The men threatened to burn down the house and all its inmates if the missionaries were not produced, and handed over to their vengeance to be horribly butchered and tortured. On hearing this threat, Mr. Green crept out of the hiding-place, and whilst in a stooping attitude was shot by an armed Boxer in the back of the head. About thirty buck-shots were embedded in the skin; and he fell down stunned and bleeding profusely from many wounds. The Boxers then roughly dragged forth the ladies and children, and hauled them before the magistrate, who, when he appeared, began to abuse them for not seeking his help and protection in the first instance. As a matter of fact Mr. Green had endeavoured to obtain an interview with the magistrate, who was well known to him from two or three previous meetings, but met with a rude rebuff, and was no more successful on a subsequent attempt. The mandarin ordered them to be conveyed to the Governor at Pao-ting-fu, who would decide their case, and the ultimate disposal of their persons.

In a country cart, without springs, drawn by two little mules, and with a single roll of bedding, possessing only the clothing they stood in, they were driven along for two days and two nights. The Boxers who had first captured them robbed them of everything they possessed, including Mrs. Green's wedding-ring. Those same men now guarded and accompanied them, wearing the garments, and piled some of their weapons on the cart in the space already all too limited for the accommodation of their charges.

IN GAOL AT PAO-TING-FU.

When they arrived at Pao-ting-fu they were kept waiting in the sun. At length the mandarin condescended to see them in the common hall. He at first professed some sympathy with them in their pitiable plight, and said, "Now you have come here we must find means to send you to the coast." They were all lodged in the women's quarter of the lock-up, except Mr. Green, who was taken to the common gaol. Here occurred a delay of one day, during which a boat was being made ready for the journey. On August 14 they were put on a boat to go to Tientsin. The mandarin had promised money for expenses, an escort, and passports. To their surprise, there was no guard when the boat started; the party of men in full yamên dress escorted them to the boat and disappeared.

About three miles farther down the boat was stopped, and eight of the armed Boxers who brought them from their home got on board, accompanied by four local Boxers. When asked for the promised passports, none were forthcoming anywhere. Thus betrayed into the hands of the Boxers, they were conveyed down the river till about one mile beyond Ts'ingyuan, when the boat was suddenly drawn to the bank, and the two chief Boxers addressed them as follows:—

"The Governor at Pao-ting-fu gave us orders to take you down the river a little way, and there and then kill you; but we won't be guilty of that sin, as we see you are all very ill, and almost certainly going to die soon anyway. It is impossible for us to proceed to Tientsin, as, should we attempt to do so, not only you would all be certainly slain, but we should lose our own heads. You must leave the boat at once, and make the best of it for yourselves."

They then left the boat as ordered, and hid themselves in the tall millet reeds. A violent thunderstorm came on in the evening, and cooled the air, but drenched them through and through.

They decided to go to Ts'ingyuan, and at dusk came to a hut near the city, when a youth who came out professed sympathy and invited them into the house. They asked him if he could possibly procure a boat to take them to the coast secretly; and promised a handsome reward when they should reach Tientsin.

A TREACHEROUS FRIEND.

He said he knew a friend in the city who had a boat and went to look for him. He—the betrayer—had just returned and was telling a badly concocted and lying tale, when the door curtain was violently cut down, and the missionaries found themselves again face to face with the Boxers in dense masses and all well-armed.

The Boxers treated them disgracefully, dragged them into the muddy courtyard by the hair, beat them, ladies included, with spears and backs of swords, and kicked them unmercifully. They were then bound and carried to the Boxer headquarters. Mr. Green, still suffering from his wounds, was slung by one arm only, and he still bears the mark of an ulcer made by the friction of the bamboo, where the pressure caused the veins to swell, and produced an inflamed sore. They were thrown down in the pools of water in the temple courtyard. Mrs. Green was suffering from acute dysentery, as well as severe inflammation in one ear, and at Mr. Green's request a brick was given to rest her head upon and keep it out of a deep pool. Miss Jessie Gregg, also very ill, was allowed to have her hands tied up in front of instead of behind her body; but this favour was absolutely refused to Mr. Green. Next day all were unbound, but not allowed to move for any purpose whatsoever, unless accompanied by armed Boxers.

COMPASSION EVEN AMONG BOXERS.

Mrs. Green was unable to take the food supplied, and the Boxers gave some cash (amounting to about a penny daily) to Mr. Green, with which millet soup was bought. After three days Mr. Green was asked if he knew that the Governor had ordered their captors to kill him and those with him, when he replied that he did. He was then told that the order had been renewed, but that the Boxers had decided to spare their lives, treat them well, and send them to Tientsin.

An order having been received from Pao-ting-fu for the sending of the missionaries thither. This awakening of interest was due to communications from the British Consul at Tientsin, threatening punishment if the missionaries were not protected. Mr. Green was allowed to join the ladies and children, and the shots were nearly all extracted by Miss Gregg. A great sorrow now came in the death of the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Green.

On October 14 a French force arrived, and next day an English-speaking interpreter threw a piece of paper to Mr. Green on which was written, "Do not be afraid, you are all safe, as your friends with troops have arrived at Pao-ting-fu." A French captain called, and at once arranged for the removal of the party to the camp, a cart being sent for the ladies, as well as a doctor and ambulance requisites for Mr. Green. Next day a British force arrived; and, after three days of rest and treatment, a start was made to the coast, all arriving at Tientsin on October 27, after more than three months of wanderings and privations.

The Neglected Continent.

FROM South America we receive good tidings. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald J. Young write us from Sao Paolo: "What a crying need there is for the Gospel throughout Brazil. We could put to work a couple of dozen good men right in this city; and we expect to have them too; but they must come from the unconverted masses around us.

You remember how sanguinely we spoke to you about our expectations here. Now we are facing the heathen, and are in the heart of Roman idolatry, and our expectations are more than realized already; five persons already give unmistakable signs of conversion from sin to righteousness, from Satan to God. This is God's day for Brazil; it has never seen such days. Two brothers are with us. Between us we have made over 700 visits this month—some of a minute, some of an hour. We have thoroughly presented some phase of the Gospel where the people would listen. We believe that inside of two years we can see a work established here that will support its own minister and other labourers." These friends spent some days with us a few months ago. Mr. Young is a Canadian, his wife a lady from the U.S.A. We shall give further accounts of them, God willing.

Mr. and Mrs. Fellowes, 354, Calle Herrera, Buenos Ayres, who went out two years ago from Wood Green Gospel Hall, write us "the happiest letter of their lives":—"Praise the Lord! Ten young fellows in my class, one officer of the school, five girls in my wife's, and four in other classes. You cannot conceive the dreadful state of things out here. These young men will have so much temptation to sin. We are starting a Christian Endeavour Society for them and others. I announced last week a meeting for those who wanted to lead a true Christian life. Thirty-five came. This sin-stricken, dreary place has become heaven. I am living in the 103rd Psalm." I am much interested in this young couple. They are living by their own handiwork. I should be glad to enable them to give their whole time to the work.

Mr. Emilio Olsson writes from Adroqué:—"Our work here is going on among native children. At times I am able to do Bible work. I trust friends in England will not forget us, but pray for us." R. C. M.

Letters from Spain.—II.

A VISIT TO BANOLAS.

MONDAY, December 17, was an eventful day for the inhabitants of Bañolas, a little town, picturesquely nestling in the Pyrenees. Little did they think, when listening to the town-crier's announcement of a Lantern Lecture, to be given in the evening at the theatre, that for the first time in their lives they would hear the sound of Gospel truth.

"Be wise as serpents" must be the motto of Protestant missionaries in Spain, burdened for the salvation of souls. Pastor Lopez Rodriguez is contented to slip in by any side-door left ajar, and if all are shut against him he makes an opening for himself. Unwearying patience in waiting and well-doing, as well as familiarity with the laws and customs of the country, enable him to cope with difficulties from which foreigners would naturally shrink.

Bañolas, with its 10,000 inhabitants, is a stronghold of Romanism, almost as important as Gerona, the see of the Bishop. It has three convents and a mission monastery, with seventy preaching monks who are being sent out all over the country to propagate Romish doctrine and practice. There is neither liberty of conscience nor of the press in Spain. Every paper or tract must be submitted to the authorities before it can be distributed on the high-roads.

For years past the ground in and about Gerona has been worked, and the soil prepared by tracts, Gospels, and the securing of subscribers to El Heraldo, and now the time seems to have come to give bold utterance to the written Word.

The excitement prevailing on the eve of that memorable day resembled the expectations of children approaching Christmas. In order to be at Bañolas in time for the evening preparations, we had to leave Figueras by train at 5 a.m. Our company consisted of Pastor and Mme. Lopez Rodriguez, Luis, their son, Don Alexander, their brother, my husband, and myself. At Gerona we were joined by Señor Rufart, the pioneer evangelist. Our journey lay for two hours through lovely, semi-alpine scenery. Judging from the curious scrutinizing looks that were fixed upon us as we descended from our tartana, we were objects of wonder to the people. The children evidently thought us to be theatricals, and showed great disposition to become our suite, as soon as we left the hotel.

"We must be prepared for demonstrations of disapproval," said Mr. Rodriguez, as, after supper we gathered in the sitting-room to ask for blessing upon the first Gospel effort at Bañolas. The theatre, holding about 800 people, was filled, when Don Alexander, coming forward, addressed the assembly in a courteous way, asking for even if what was to be said should not meet with the approval of all.

The lecture began with pictures of the life and death of our Lord, each slide being accompanied by a clear, vivid exposition from the Word of God, and some allusion to the contrary teaching of the Church of Rome. At the close of the first part, the lecturer said that he intended to bring before them what those contending for the faith once delivered to the saints had suffered at the hands of those who professed to be disciples of Christ. If, however, they did not wish for that information he would not continue. ("Yes, yes," and applause.) The pastor then went on to add graphic words to the atrocious scenes which he threw upon the canvas, of men burning at the stake, women rent into pieces, all the satanic practices of a satanic system, closing with a powerful appeal to the conscience and reason of the people. "We have been created to be free men, not slaves of the priests, who beguile the women and make tools of them for their own purposes. Was it not a group of fanatic women who a few years ago, when a colporteur had established himself at Bañolas to sell Gospels and tracts, burned his shop down to the ground, so that the poor man had to flee for his life?"

The last slide represented Spain separated by a gulf from all the other countries, while France, Germany, Uncle Sam, and John Bull, look in wonder at Spain, depicted as a woman with the priest's foot upon her neck. It wrought a great impression upon the people, who thronged to receive some tracts, and to shake hands with the speakers, many expressing their appreciation and hope of seeing them again. This happened within a week. Some who had been present in disguise called on the Pastor to see his work in Figueras, and to ask for another visit to Bañolas.

There are two great political parties in Spain: the Carlists, who are Ultramontanes, and the Republicans and Liberals. The latter, as a rule, are friendly to Protestants. Only ten per cent. of the whole population are represented by the Carlists, but as the power, social position, and wealth, are on the side of this minority, the priests are able to keep in check the attempts at progress and liberty.

The engagement between the Princess of Asturias and the Prince of Bourbon has caused much alarm among the Liberals. The King's health is weak. Should he die, the country would perhaps be plunged into a civil war, in which case it would not be impossible for the Carlists to get the upper hand in the government—the greatest of calamities that could befal Spain.

Rome never changes. The other day we were led down to the Inquisition dungeon of a ruined monastery at Figueras, containing about fifteen niches built under the high altar. The victims were walled in and starved to death. In order to prevent the smell of decay, a kind of flue was arranged inside, which absorbed the moisture of the bodies. When the monastery was destroyed, heaps of bones were found on the tops of the niches. Since Pastor Rodriguez came to this city, eighteen years ago, fourteen cartloads of bones have been removed to the cemetery.

"These are things of the past," somebody may remark. There are others pointing to the future. A few years ago, at a Conclave of Bishops at Saragossa, it was voted that on the first opportunity the Inquisition should be revived. Though abolished by Napoleon I., it has never been taken out of the Constitution, and it threatens to become again a formidable

FOE TO THE SOULS AND BODIES OF MEN.

According to the decision of the Council of Trent, every convent must contain subterranean dungeons for punishment. Consequently what applies to Spain must apply to England also. We speak of our freedom as a nation. Can true liberty be conceived without protection to the individual? Can real freedom exist where any kind of slavery is being tolerated? Jesus Christ said: "I am the Light of the world: he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." But the convent system shuns the light. While we are boasting of our progress, enlightenment, and civilization, human beings may be slowly murdered, as in times of old, and under the mantle of religion. Some Christians are so afraid of being called intolerant and narrow-minded that they willingly shut their eyes against distressing facts, in order not to trouble their conscience. Above each convent door should be written Dante's dreadful inscription over the gate of the Inferno: "By me you pass into the city of woe; All hope abandon ye who enter here." And Tennyson's pregnant line: "Freedom free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name."

Escaping nuns in different parts of the country corroborate the tale of the havoc wrought in their souls, but to no effect. No electric thrill passes through the veins of right-minded men, causing them to rise with one accord against a tyranny more horrible than actual slavery.

In this very town of Figueras, a nun escaped some years ago for fear of death, because of knowing a secret between the priest and the lady-superior. Her father, afraid of excommunication, refused to take her home. She is now living in the town. Other cases are related where the fugitives were caught and sent to other convents. The wall of the above convent has been raised since the nun's escape.

Only recently a wealthy young lady in Madrid was induced by a priest to enter a convent. The widowed mother protested on the plea that her daughter was under age, but was told that the Church had a prior claim and authority over a minor. The Civil Court decided against the mother, who has now appealed to the higher Court. The decision will be a very important one as a precedent. Pray that it may be the only righteous one—for the mother and against the priests.

The Indian Famine.

ALTHOUGH the most critical period of the famine has passed, much distress still exists in many parts of India.

Rev. DENNIS OSBORNE writes, under date December 11:—The consignment of cloth stuffs for clothing has arrived, and I am in receipt of many urgent applications. Missionaries and other workers bear evidence to the value and opportuneness of this form of relief. Just when demands upon the Government cease, the sternest demand upon the missionaries begins, for they have to plan and provide for the support, training and education of the

THOUSANDS OF WAIFS CAST UPON THEM.

In a later communication Mr. Osborne says:—I have just returned from Baroda, where our annual conference was held. At this point no fewer than 800 rescued famine children are congregated under excellent care. The value of the famine foods sent us was demonstrated by the healthy condition of these children, who, under God, owe everything to these excellont foods. Now they are looking for clothing for the winter. Another unfortunate need is rough, inexpensive shelter for them. In this we are doing our best, but further assistance is necessary.

Mrs. HARRIETT TYTLER writes from the Orphan Home, Umballa:—The orphans are, with the exception of two or three, making good progress, and could not now be recognized by those who saw them when they first came to us. I have a very capable native catechist and his wife, who teach them during the day. During the evening hymns are sung and instruction is given in the Scriptures. They love to sing. I am grateful to your readers for their help.

Rev. J. H. MCNEILL, of Dohad, Panch Mahals, writes:—Although the most acute stage has passed there is yet much distress. The rains stopped early, and those who sowed late have lost all—the grain withering in the fields—and have now no means of obtaining seed. These are the people we are now helping. During the rains we were able to give seed grain, loan of oxen for ploughing, and grain, while the crop was growing, to 10,000 persons who were ineligible for Government relief, while food grain was given to 739 tenants who received seed grain from Government. In our village schools over 500 children were fed and taught, while their parents were on the relief works.

THE FAMINE FOODS

were an inestimable boon to us for our hospital patients.

Dr. G. P. TAYLOR, of Ahmedabad, says: A heavy burden of responsibility rests upon the Irish Presbyterian Mission in Gujarat in connection with the support and training of the 1,600 children received during the famine months. One may reckon that the average period during which each child will require support from the Mission will be five years, and the annual expense for each not less than £3. Industrial institutions must be started. Humanly speaking, the welfare of the native Christian Church in Gujarat in the near future depends largely on the judicious upbringing of these hundreds of children, and we trust that many prayers may be offered that light from above be given us, so that only such steps be taken as shall issue in the extension of the kingdom of God in this land. We do thank the readers of The Christian for the interest they have evinced in this sacred work, and we feel encouraged thereby in the midst of much that tends to discouragement.

Under date December 13, Rev. P. B. Keskar, writes from Sholapur,—The famine still continues in our district, and the people are coming into the city for search of work and help. Some of them come a distance of forty miles, and the story they tell is heartrending. The other day a woman came with her three little children. They had had no food for the last four days. She requested me to take two of them into my orphanage. I did so, and gave the woman a little help. I have at present more than 200 children under my care."

Mr. C. F. Reeve, of the Poona and Indian Village Mission, in reviewing the position says: 'The famine, we regret to say, is not yet over, and from January onward we anticipate a very trying time for the people, as the latter rains have not fallen. The people have reaped their first crop, but interest on money borrowed, and rates and taxes, have absorbed all their profits. Most of the second crops are in, but, owing to scarcity of water, they are very stunted, and will never attain maturity. The people say that after January they will have no food or money. We are a means of livelihood to about 800 men, women, and children, who are employed in connection with our works at Nasarapur, and almost daily fresh hands are taken on, which is a great relief to the district.

Our first Orphanage is built, and filled with boys, and the second one is in course of erection. These little waifs are thriving well, and achieving much that will be beneficial to in India by and by. They all work at their lessons and the duties allotted to them very assiduously, and evince much desire to get on. Some of them have begun mission work already, by giving brief testimonies and singing in the villages about, much to the interest of the older natives, who listen to them very eagerly.

Bareilly Theological Seminary.

WHILE the sad story of physical woe and suffering in India has moved the hearts of many nations to provide the means of restoring life and hope to despairing multitudes, there still remains "not a famine of bread nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord." The principal of the Bareilly Theological Seminary, Rev. T. D. Scott, D.D., in a recent communication, urges the supreme importance of raising a native ministry. In eastern Bengal alone it is estimated that there are at least 15,000,000 to whom the Gospel has not been preached. The Bareilly Theological Seminary has sent out nearly 800 qualified native agents into many parts of India.

Dr. Scott writes:—"Foreign missionaries can never feed the vast multitude. We rejoice at any help toward putting the Gospel within reach of India's millions; but especially important is anything organized for building up an indigenous ministry. Such is the Bareilly Theological Seminary. We are calling for enlarged endowment. Buildings, chairs endowed, plans of all kinds are needed to put the institution in the highest state of efficiency for the new century."

Central Morocco Mission.—The report of the Central Morocco Mission just published shows that the work, especially itinerating among the tribes, has been much hindered by the war in the Soudan and the French invasion; but Dr. Kerr (Rabat) adds a note of praise for the increased fruitfulness, though with diminished numbers, of the medical branch—"our encouragements have far outshone the difficulties we have met with." Mrs. Kerr returns thanks for the liberal response to an appeal made last year in The Christian, on behalf of the wives and children of poor Moorish prisoners. During the present furlough in this country of Dr. and Mrs. Kerr, Mr. and Mrs. Steven are meeting with much encouragement. Subscriptions should be sent to the hon. treasurer, Mr. Grahame Wilson, 191, Meadowpark Street, Glasgow.

American Notes.

THE Volunteers of America, who are doing excellent work in nearly all the States in the Union under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth, have made a new departure in Brooklyn, Chicago, Seattle (Washington State), and Spokane (Washington State), Denver, Lincoln (Nebraska), Oakland (California), Bridgeport (Connecticut), by opening their halls during the day-time as rooms for reading and writing, where men who would otherwise be in the saloons may spend some of their unemployed time. They are not only thus kept out of harm's way, but brought in contact with men and women who will listen to their stories with sympathetic ears, and do anything they can to help them either temporally or spiritually. The second Volunteer Home for erring and homeless girls has lately been opened in Boston, Massachusetts, that at Newark having been a great success from the start.

A meeting has been held of prominent religious workers of various denominations, who wish to inaugurate an extensive soul-saving campaign throughout the United States in 1901. The pastors and laymen present issued an appeal to the religious press. They say:—

Being firmly persuaded that God would have his Church heed this "sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees," and bestir herself for the accomplishment of the greatest evangelistic achievements of our time, by the blessing of God, we appeal, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, to all his ministers and people throughout the United States of America, immediately and unitedly to engage in a campaign for the promotion of a revival of Christianity in every city, town, and village at the opening of the twentieth century.

On a recent Sunday Rev. A. Fasanotti, D.D., who for three years was chaplain to the Duke of Norfolk, and has had exceptional facilities for obtaining inside knowledge of the way in which the affairs of the Church are administered in Rome, spoke at Christ's Mission (conducted by Rev. James A. O'Connor, himself formerly a Roman Catholic priest) upon his objections to the Roman Catholic Church. He referred to the worship of pictures and images, transubstantiation, the failure of the confessional to make men better, and other features of the system. In spite of his Italian name, the doctor is a straight American citizen, and sees the danger to the Republic that would result from the Church obtaining the civil power here that she desires to obtain. In his address he pointed out the contrast between the condition of Spain and Italy to-day, as compared with what they were 400 years ago, to show the destructive powers of the papal system.

New York. Roger Martin.

From the Mississippi.

By J. W. WEDDELL, Davenport, Iowa.

IT is surprising with what readiness and complacency, after the stirring movements and strident notes of a political campaign, the country settles down to plain, quiet living again, in accordance with the issue of events. President McKinley has gone back to the White House and the busy responsibilities that the people have not been willing he should lay down. Mr. Bryan has returned to Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska.

Both are Christian gentlemen of pious stock. I have preached at Lincoln, and being for a while at Conlin, the President's home, I know whereof I speak. There is evidence of this in the clear personalities of the campaign, and the courteous and kindly interchanging between the candidates since. There is a latent moral element in the suffrage, and it is a good sign when each and every party selects for its standard-bearer a man of integrity and Christian probity.

But out along this Mississippi are being sewn the seeds of an infidelity that, unless checked, will bear us an ill crop some day. There is a clearly defined infidel propaganda among the Bohemians, for example, who have settled in this vicinity in great numbers. Dr. F. J. Woitishek, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has placed in my hands writings that indicate that a vigorous effort is being made to build up in our midst a social estate wholly divorced from Christianity and religion. The Bible and sacred things are scorned and derided, vile names are applied to the Church and the Deity that is there revered, and, to insure such sensual, demonish indoctrinations, primers and societies and schools of an atheistic sort are in vogue. The trend of that teaching is to be read in the fact that the mortuary list of one of these Bohemian societies shows one-third of suicides. Drunkenness and infidelity, with us as with you—I saw a bit of it while in London—are the bane of our new civilization. May the Lord protect us from such intrusion of the evil one!

Italian Sailors.—Will friends send Italian Gospel tracts, booklets, and Testaments, for distribution among the many sailors of Genoa? They are sadly forgotten, and earnest appeals come from many of them for good Gospel literature. Address gifts—Mr. A.W. Higgs, Via Cesare Cabella, 12-6, Genoa.

The Simultaneous Mission.

INTERVIEW WITH REV. THOS. LAW.

IT is satisfactory to note that as the time fixed for the Simultaneous Mission approaches, interest in the movement is deepening on every hand. With the object of ascertaining the latest developments and arrangements of this great undertaking, a member of our staff interviewed Rev. Thomas Law, the organizing secretary, at his office at Memorial Hall.

"Is the latest intelligence of an encouraging character, Mr. Law?"

"I rejoice to say," replied the leading spirit of the movement, "that on every hand there is a spirit of unity, of prayerful anticipation, of

WAITING UPON GOD.

There is promise of wonderful blessing. I would like, by the way, to make it clear that those who are organizing and otherwise taking part, realize to the full their entire dependence upon God. Of course there must be machinery in arranging so vast an undertaking, but we know that the machinery in itself avails nothing. We cannot 'organize a revival,' or bring about a spiritual awakening by human means, however well-meaning and industrious a body our Free Church Council may be."

"The ministers and congregations throughout the country are united in the matter?"

"Wonderfully so. Where twenty-five years ago, in spite of agreement upon essentials there would have been dividing questions raised on doctrinal matters, there is now agreement in seeking to evangelize the masses. All the leaders of the Evangelical Free Churches are heart and soul in the movement. I would point out, too, as an encouraging fact, that the united missions conducted of late by our evangelists, Gipsy Smith and Mr. W. R. Lane, have been remarkable times of reaping. All this, let it be observed, goes to emphasize the important point that the great aims of the Free Church Council are spiritual, and not political or social."

"What progress is made in organizing the Mission throughout the country?"

"The Missions are arranged by local councils and federations of councils. Six hundred councils in England and Wales are represented in the movement, and they are devoting themselves to the work with intensity. They will see that every effort is made to gather in the people. In the helpful booklet, entitled 'Preparing the Way,' which we have issued as a comprehensive guide to ministers and other workers, readers are reminded, at the outset, that 'this is not a mission to church members, nor does it aim at making Christianity more popular; it is against ungodliness and worldliness.' We say that, as an essential to real success, a mission must be preceded by much prayer. Special prayer meetings should be convened for intercession, and earnest supplications should be offered at every family altar. In addition to these, groups of three or four praying people in sympathy with one another, and with the proposed mission, should be formed, and should meet together week by week to intercede with God for the outpouring of his Spirit, and for his abundant blessing, when the actual work of the Mission begins. It is of the first importance to seek, by prayer and waiting on God, a quickened sense of his presence, and a revived condition of spiritual life in the hearts of his own people. It is out of this that a successful Mission will arise.

"We have issued a shield-shaped card for hanging up in church vestries, &c., on which appears in bold type, 'Pray for the Simultaneous Mission.' Another card which has had, also, a wide circulation, is intended for the home. It is an appeal for daily prayer."

"Are you taking any steps in the way of special advertizing to attract the people?"

"In addition to the ordinary means, I am glad to say that we hope to reach great numbers by means of house-to-house visitation. We hope

EVERY HOUSE THROUGHOUT THE LAND

may be visited at any rate three times prior to the commencement of the Mission. That, at least, is our ideal, and in this department, also, a brief compendium of instruction has been prepared for the guidance of workers. 'Hints and Suggestions' have likewise been written by Rev. F. B. Meyer, for the use of missioners. Here is a striking passage :—

If I may be forgiven the presumption, I would say that the less an address is like a sermon the better. People hear sermons enough, and, on the whole, the missioner is not expected to deliver a discourse, with its heads and subdivisions, but to make an appeal for decision, based on the Word of God, baptized in the power of the Spirit, and lighted up with suitable incidents and illustrations, which will convince the judgment, touch the emotions, arouse the conscience. In most cases people have already been taught the way of salvation, and are ready to admit the duty of repentance and faith, but need to be led to take the final step across the line.

"As a leading minister said to me lately," Mr. Law continued, "we are in for anything that will make for the frustration of the devil, and the enthronement of the Lord Jesus Christ in the hearts of men."

"Presumably, you anticipate that the indirect as well as the direct spiritual results will be of value ?"

"I think the former will prove even more helpful than the latter. For instance, I trace already a change in the character of preaching. The elements of appeal and persuasion are more strongly marked, and this will doubtless be more clearly observed at a later date. The evangelistic idea is taking a powerful hold, and much more is heard in our pulpits of the great fundamental truths of the Gospel. Summing up, we may anticipate that the Free Churches will be filled with a passion for soul-winning. As your readers will remember, the Mission opens with an address by Rev. Dr. Parker, at the Guildhall, at noon on January 28. In conclusion, I should like to reaffirm that our reliance in this matter is upon God, and to ask the prayers of Christians that great blessing may be given."

Simultaneous Prayer.

The forest aisles are hushed and dim with death,
Yet, slumbering latent through the Arctic cold ;
What pregnant forces wait the living breath,
What strength of growth those silent twigs enfold !

One touch Divine and lo ! the sap shall flow,
Each bud shall hear the mandate of the King,
Each fragile leaf exultant break and grow,
Till all the vales are clothed upon with spring.

The ocean sleeps, yet through its myriad waves
One tidal purpose throbs from sun to sun,
Where ripples laugh, or storm-piled breaker raves,
In that vast, shoreward impulse, all are one.

We are the trees, O Lord, of thy right hand—
Thy planting, yet so profitless and bare,
Wilt Thou not rouse thy Church throughout the land,
And wake our lethargy to fervent prayer ?

We are thy ocean, many-voiced and free,
Yet compassed by thy hand and holden fast ;
Shall not thy longing thrill from sea to sea,
Till unison of zeal be ours at last ?

The people perish, drunk with sin and grief,
(The Cross from them so far and death so nigh) !
Lord, shame the torpor of our unbelief,
Lest while we slumber thine immortals die.

The world for Christ ! To simultaneous prayer
Arouse the forces now inert and dumb,
Lord, by thy love let us thy travail share,
And to our kingdom let thy Kingdom come !

Postal Employees in South America.—The free distribution of the monthly Gospel paper El Correo Evangelico (the Gospel Post) amongst the postal employés of South America is being continued. It is sent to every post office in Argentina, while the other republics are reached through missionaries labouring there, parcels being sent them for distribution. One of the best means for the spread of the Gospel in South America is by the printed page. Two itinerant evangelists in North Argentina lately found the paper being used of God. One man in a distant town was awakened through the reading of only a scrap of El Correo, found on a rubbish heap ; he has now obtained a Bible and is earnestly reading it. An issue of 8,000 copies costs £7. The hon. treasurer is Mrs. C. L. Smith, 35, Eltham Road, Lee, S.E.

*Individual Effort for the Salvation of Souls.

THE glory of God in the salvation of souls is both the highest end of Christian service, and its grandest result. That preacher, that Sunday-school teacher, will be wise who keeps this end ever in view in his sermons and lessons. It has recently been stated by one well qualified to judge, and as the result of a wide and long experience, that the note of earnest pleading is dying out of the modern pulpit. Whatever measure of truth there may be in this statement, there can be no question that there is urgent need on the part of all Christian workers for a renewed consecration of themselves to the winning of souls.

Can we be satisfied with the small number of conversions that we see ? Are not the Churches very largely failing to reach the masses of the people with the Gospel ? And while there may be a small increase on the whole, in the membership of the Churches, are not the numbers of those who are utterly indifferent to the claims of God and the appeals of the Gospel, increasing in a vastly larger ratio ?

My object, however, in this paper, is not so much to quicken the zeal and concentrate the efforts of recognized Christian workers, as to call attention to a form of service to which all Christians are called, and to which they must give themselves if the masses are ever to be reached :—Individual effort for the salvation of souls in private life ; every Christian earnestly seeking the spiritual welfare of those with whom he is brought into contact, to whom he has access, with whom he has influence, with whom he has

THE OPPORTUNITY OF PERSONAL DEALING.

It is commonly considered that a Christian fulfils his responsibility to the unsaved around him if he lives a consistent life before them. No words could indeed emphasize too strongly the primary importance of such a holy life ; without it, personal dealing will be presumptuous and futile. Yet even a holy life is not sufficient, without the wise, loving word of instruction, of warning, of entreaty.

"He that winneth souls is wise." Is not our unreadiness for this work largely due to our lack of conviction as to the infinite worth of the human soul, and its awful peril while still in sin ? It cost Christ his life to redeem it ; only God could find a ransom. He will be wise who seeks that on which God has set so high a value.

Doubtless this is a work of great difficulty and delicacy ; it needs courage, tact, sympathy, love. But "God is able to make all grace abound" even for this "good work."

I am not advocating indiscriminate personal dealing, but a readiness to speak a word to anyone whom the Lord shall lay upon our hearts, and to whom He shall direct our way. He will give the suitable opportunity together with

THE GRACE TO USE IT WISELY.

A birthday, a bereavement, a change in life will often afford an opening for a loving appeal, by word of mouth or by pen. What an opportunity, too, is given after every earnest Gospel sermon ! How many a soul under conviction might be led at once to decision for Christ by a loving personal word from a Christian friend at the close of the service ! Is it not for the want of this individual dealing, that the most faithful Gospel preaching often largely fails in definite results of conversion ?

Not only would individual effort on the part of all Christian people lead, under God, to a far larger number of conversions, but it would meet a difficulty that often arises in Church work. Earnest souls come into a congregation, and do not straightway find an opening for their activity ; there is not a class in the Sunday-school needing a new teacher, and newcomers cannot at once be put into prominent office in the Church or the Endeavour Society. Every pastor knows how difficult it is in such a case to retain those who, by reason of their spiritual fervour, he hopes will be a blessing in the Church, without their settling down to the level of the ordinary Church member, who is content to receive, without any definite effort to communicate to others, the blessings he enjoys. Were personal dealing to have its right place in the esteem of Christian people, it would be seen that here is a form of service, second to none in importance, unlimited in its scope, open to all believers, requiring no permission from pastor, deacons, or Sunday-school superintendent, but having as its sufficient sanction the "Go ye" of the Master Himself. No form of Christian work, moreover, is more fruitful of results, or more fraught with spiritual blessing to him who engages in it.

Yet there is no kind of effort which makes a greater demand on the spirit. How many are constantly self-condemned because they have not the courage or the skill to use the opportunities which are afforded them ! And how many have in this respect, who once were eager seekers after souls ! Space forbids more than a brief mention of the sources whence the power and wisdom for this work are to be obtained.

(1) God is the giver of this wisdom (Jas. i. 5).

(2) "Christ Jesus is made unto us wisdom" for this work (1 Cor. i. 30). The very Christ who dealt with the woman at Sychar's well will dwell in the yielded heart, and through the consecrated tongue and hand will still "seek and save that which is lost."

(3) The Holy Ghost is the essential power for this, as for all other forms of witness to Christ (Acts i. 8). The source of effectual power for personal dealing with souls is thus God Himself, in the Trinity of his sacred Persons. The means whereby his grace becomes actually ours are :—

(a) Prayer, not only for the power and wisdom to win souls, but also for individuals, as their spiritual welfare is laid upon our hearts. The most fruitful personal dealing with souls for God is the result of personal dealing with God for souls. As we pray for individuals, our love for them is deepened, our sympathy with them is increased, and when the opportunity comes, there will be readiness and tact in using it.

(b) The Word of God. Soul-winning is a "fruit of the righteous" (Prov. xi. 30), which can only be brought forth as the roots are nourished from the soil of the Word (Psa. i.).

(c) Definite consecration. However great the difficulty of the work may be felt to be, and however small our fitness for it, let the effort be made, as the opportunity is afforded in dependence upon the grace of the Holy Spirit, and every believer may have the unspeakable privilege of "saving a soul from death and hiding a multitude of sins."

How sweet 'twould be at evening,
If you and I could say,
"Good Shepherd, we've been seeking
The sheep that went astray ;
Heartsore and faint with hunger,
We heard them making moan,
And lo ! with joy returning,
We bear them safely home."

Bristol Believers' Meetings.—The invitation, signed by representatives of various assemblies, to the annual meetings, to be held in the Gospel Hall, St. Nicholas Road, on January 15 and 16, says : "The subjects proposed for consideration are—'The Need of Revival in the Church, and How to Promote it ;' and 'How to Walk with God in Perilous Times.' The hurrying spirit of the age, the strange doctrines on every side, the increasing love of pleasure, the too faint line of demarcation between the Church and the world, all make us feel our need of a closer walk with God, and of separation of heart from everything which is 'not of the Father,' but is 'of the world.' It is often on such occasions of united waiting on God that our strength is renewed, our love and zeal revived, and our purposes are established. Prayer is earnestly asked for Divine guidance in all our arrangements, direction for each speaker, and preparation of heart in those who gather, that all things may be done for the honour and glory of the Triune Jehovah." Friends requiring accommodation are requested to make known the same as early as possible to W. F. Higgins, 107, Stokes' Croft, Bristol.

The Racing Stables Institute, Chantilly.

PROBABLY few readers of this journal are aware that there is quite a colony of English trainers at Chantilly, the great racing centre of France. In the extensive racing stables adjoining the course are employed more than 500 lads, with few exceptions English, varying in age from eleven to eighteen, brought from English homes, and having for the most part neither friends nor relatives in France. What this must mean in such surroundings can easily be conjectured. Without parental control, under no moral restraint, and exposed to the terrible temptations inherent to such a calling, these lads are in imminent danger of being ruined—body and soul.

For how many years this state of things has gone on, without any organized attempt to remedy it, is sad to reflect; but it is a cause for profound thankfulness that, within the last eighteen months, a resolute and successful effort has been made to cope with so crying a need; and to-day an Institute exists at Chantilly which has already done much to ameliorate the material, moral, and spiritual condition of these lads.

Like many another good work, this effort had a very humble beginning, and was started without any "blowing of trumpets." The resident English Chaplain, Rev. H. Moxon, and the Wesleyan minister, Rev. W. Hawkins, had both sought to do what they could in an individual capacity to help the lads; but they longed to see some organized effort commenced, and lost no opportunity in bringing the need to the notice of English friends who visited them. This suddenly and unexpectedly bore fruit. Sir Matthew Dodsworth, of Bournemouth, became deeply impressed with the need, and casting about for a suitable man, invited Mr. H. Eliot Walton (brother of Mr. Spencer Walton, of the South Africa General Mission) to undertake the work. The choice was a happy one. Mr. Walton has a bright, genial manner, and possesses a peculiar magnetic influence over lads, and they gather about him as naturally as bees to a pot of honey.

It was in March, 1899, that Mr. Walton arrived in Chantilly, not knowing a single person, a stranger in a strange land. But he had not entered on this work without much prayer; his mind was made up to save the lads, if possible, and he was going forward in the strength of the Lord God. Wonderfully was the way opened up for him. The chaplain and pastor welcomed him heartily, and entered eagerly into his proposal that some place should be found as a rallying point for the lads. After much searching, four small rooms were eventually secured in the market place, the first year's rent being guaranteed by a few friends in England, and so the work was started. Mr. Walton had, meanwhile, got into touch with some of the lads by conversation, and, inviting them to a game of rounders to break the ice, and afterwards to tea at the Wesleyan Chapel, he quickly ingratiated himself as their friend.

Space will not permit to tell, in detail, of the growth of this interesting work. For eleven months the little Institute was thronged night after night with eager lads, grateful for the opportunity of reading, writing, and recreation which the tiny place afforded. Football teams were started, and cricket elevens, for outdoor recreation; while on Sunday the Bible class drew an average attendance of sixty to seventy members.

But "the day of small things" was coming to an end. The Institute began to attract general attention; some very influential people visited it, and, recognising the great possibilities for good, desired to see the work placed on a much higher level. Mr. Austin Lee, C.B., of the British Embassy, Paris; a well-known Baroness, and other wealthy English residents, promised support, and in April last the present commodious villa and grounds were secured in the Rue de Gouvieux, which provide sufficient accommodation for the work in its present stage of development, to the great encouragement of all those concerned.

SOME OF THE LADS.

It was the writer's privilege to visit the Institute last month, and to see its various operations for the welfare of the stable lads. Mr. Walton's motto is, "For spirit, soul, and body," and all are provided for. At the Institute the lads can rest, read, write, or play harmless games in warm, well-lighted, comfortable rooms without restraint. On the evening of my arrival, I wandered through the clean, bright apartments, before the hour of opening, and thanked God that such a refuge for these dear homeless lads was available. Long before the doors opened, the lads were already lounging about, eager to get in. It was indeed a joy to see their bright faces, as they poured into the various rooms, some to read, some to write to "Mother," some to enjoy a hot cup of coffee at the bar (at half the café price), while others, with more serious expressions, passed into the educational class, conducted by Rev. H. Moxon. Mr. Walton believes in co-operation, and a number of the lads proudly serve on the staff as librarian, organizer of games, &c., &c. During the evening Mr. Walton himself was simply ubiquitous; here chatting with a lad about his horses, there inquiring sympathetically about an accident, with a smile and a "How are you, laddie?" for all. The Institute is, in fact, as much like home for the lads as possible. Then, on Sunday, there are two Bible-classes held, one in the afternoon for young lads, and the other in the evening for elder lads. Both are well attended, and there is little doubt that God is working in the hearts of some of these dear lads.

Accidents are of frequent occurrence in the stables, and it is part of Mr. Walton's work to visit the lads when in hospital. These are special opportunities for spiritual dealing, and hearts are reached in this way, and the bond of affection is visibly strengthened. Apropos of accidents, the local medical man has just commenced an ambulance class, and the lads will soon be able, it is hoped, to render each other valuable assistance in the future. The Institute and its founder also exercise a wholesome deterrent influence, and prevent, there is no doubt, many hardships, and, in some instances, cruelty being inflicted on the lads, who have no natural protectors. This, in itself, is a great boon, which the lads will more and more appreciate as time goes on.

A new departure just made is the provision of bed and breakfast for lads temporarily out of employment, thus keeping them from the cafés and lodging houses, which are often something much worse.

In conclusion, let me say that this is a Christlike work. It seeks to care for those who are young, friendless, and away from home influences. More than this, it is calculated to save these lads from almost certain ruin, the temptations to which they are exposed being of an overwhelming character. It brings them into touch with kind Christian influences, and who shall say how many precious lives may not by this effort be won for Christ?

Christian friends desiring further information concerning this work may communicate with Mr. Milton Horner, Firlands, Reigate, Surrey, who will also gladly receive any help for its support. English friends passing through to Paris will be gladly welcomed by Mr. Walton at Chantilly.

An Interesting fact which is very creditable to the large Jewish Community in England has been brought to light. The Home Secretary decided that devotional literature of a special kind should be provided for Jewish convicts in British prisons; but at present only one volume is required, there being only one such convict, and that one a woman.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—II.

GOD THE BEGINNING AND THE END.

By Canon R. B. GIRDLESTONE.

IT is generally acknowledged that the last century has been prolific in discovery and invention. It has given us steamers, locomotives and motor-cars, gas and electric light, endless labour-saving machinery, steam-presses, telegrams, telephones, photography, electrotypes, and linotypes. Medicine has been revolutionized; surgical operations previously unthought of are performed under anæsthetics; bacilli are detected by the microscope, and foreign bodies by the Röntgen rays. The heavens are mapped out and photographed, and the elements of the stars are discovered by spectrum analysis. All things earthly are investigated and classified. The history of the past is re-written; Egyptian hieroglyphs and Chaldean tablets have yielded up their mysteries. The world has become smaller, thanks to facilities of communication, and nations are beginning to know one another, if not to love one another, better. It has been a century of missions and Bible-translations; the Gospel is preached and read in 400 tongues. The sun never sets on the translator, the colporteur, and the missionary. In fact, it has been an age of reconstruction all along the line.

But what about GOD? Must we reconstruct our thought of Him? And has any religion or irreligion arisen which has superseded Christianity? We English have had our famous preachers, our Melville, and Newman, and Robertson, and Spurgeon, and Liddon. The sound of Moody's voice is still fresh with us. We have had our epoch-making books—our Tracts for the Times, our Essays and Reviews, our Ecce Homo, our Natural Law in the Spiritual World. We have had our leaders in science—Buckland, Brewster, Faraday, Clerk Maxwell, Darwin, Wallace, Huxley, Tyndall; our philosophers—Hamilton, Mansel, Mill, Spencer; our historians—Grote, Thirlwall, Milman, and the rest. But have we a new Saviour? Has there been a total eclipse of faith? Has any system been evolved which even claims to be an improvement on the religion of Christ?

All study is now carried on by the comparative method; and there is a science of anthropology, and a science of comparative religion. Has Christianity gained or lost thereby? An attempt has been made to break down the wall between the natural and the supernatural in the historic records and in the theory of inspiration, but with what success?

I. In answer, let us review our position, and see how we stand at the present time.

(1) We still have the testimony of Scripture. No criticism compels us to modify the central thoughts concerning God which are contained in the Old and New Testaments, and which are enshrined in the Jewish and Christian creeds.

(2) We still have the testimony of Conscience. God has put his mark on man's inner being, and has taught him to distinguish right and wrong. There is in us a power higher than our natural self, a light distinct from intellect, making for righteousness.

(3) We still have the testimony of Reason. Science is a Lamp, but Reason is the Light; and by this light we have learnt the unity of Nature, and consequently the unity of the Power whence all nature, including human nature, proceeds. This Power, inasmuch as it is the fountain of consciousness in others, must be a conscious Being.

(4) We still have the testimony of History. This brings us direct to the historic Christ. The Gospels have been criticized with an intensity of zeal by friends and foes; but they have emerged from the fire unscathed, and their position is secured.

(5) We still have the testimony of Experience. We need not go far from our door to find living, walking evidences of Christianity. The Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believes.

These are the five witnesses to the truth about God and Christ. Armed with these, we challenge the world. Let it produce five such witnesses for any religion, ancient or modern.

II. But there is another side of the question. In the course of ages old words frequently get new meanings, so that an age of reconstruction calls for a reconsideration of our terminology. Three words will furnish samples of this:—

(1) Take the word Law. We believe in a Reign of Law in all nature; and we thank the late Duke of Argyll for the expression. There is a fixity rather than a flux in the natural world; but though it is constant it is not absolute. The Eternal One may bring into being new elements, new proportions of existing elements, new physical processes. We cannot stand up in our little corner of the universe, and dictate to Him that such a thing is impossible or undesirable. We believe that nothing is left to chance, but it does not follow that nothing is left to Providence. God is not dethroned by the discovery that He works by rule. Atoms, molecules, stars, obey that rule. Chemists find out that all has been weighed and measured; but by whom? We imitate what we read in the Book of Nature: but who wrote the Book? Do all things work automatically? Then who made them do this wonderful thing?

(2) Take the word Space. A theory is prevalent that the interplanetary and interstellar spaces are filled with a superfine material which is called "ether." It is a desideratum suggested by the physical philosopher, as a medium for the transmission of light, heat, &c. Whether it is diffused through infinite space who can tell? But, granted that it is so, would the universal presence of ether involve the absence of God? Does He need a place of his own called heaven, measurable by three dimensions? The old Book tells us that the heaven of heavens cannot contain Him; in other words, partitioned off from the rest of space, He is not subject to our ideas of space.

What room is there in space for the spirit world? Can we point up or down, or east or west, and say it is there? Probably all space is equi-distant from the Spirit of God. There may indeed be a moral distance where there is a local nearness, but this must be done away with by spiritual means.

(3) Take the word Force. In the middle of the century there came out an epoch-making book called "The Correlation of Physical Forces." Though written by a lawyer, it stimulated and directed scientific thought and embodied ideas which have been still further elaborated in later days, e.g., by Tyndall in his work on Heat. What is Force? Have we any reason to doubt the old saying, "Force belongeth unto the Lord"? Let us suppose that one ever-present Force actuates all things, producing various results according to the materials which are being dealt with. But is it physical or spiritual? or are these two elements or departments of one Force, answering to the two sides of our nature? When "The Unseen Universe" came out, it was intended to show that materialism could only provide a most inadequate solution for the problems of nature. One of its authors shortly afterwards brought out some discussions on Force, which seemed almost paradoxical to the scientific student, though he could not readily reply to them; the other brought out a book on "The Conservation of Energy," which appeared at first sight to leave no room for God in his universe—though this was a misunderstanding. Science certainly encourages us to believe that all energy is eternally flowing from one Source, so that we are only facing the old truth that God is the same, and his energy is ever conserved. But if, as other writers have reminded us, there is a dissipation of energy as well as a conservation, and a law of renewal as well as a law of continuity in nature, we get that idea of constant activity on the part of God, which our Lord alluded to when He said, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work."

Such words as we have referred to have a richer meaning than ever when read in the light of science. Speaking generally, it may be said that the nett result of modern physical speculations is that, whilst at first sight God seems to be pushed into the background, and to have had nothing to do with nature since the present order of things began—perhaps since the primæval and homogeneous elements were first differentiated—further reflection shows that we have gained rather than lost. The forces of nature produce nature, but do not belong to it; they are one, not many; and if one, that one must be Personal. It is no new doctrine that God hides Himself, and that we may look to right and left, with telescope and microscope, and yet fail to find Him. The novelty is only the way in which the doctrine is put. After all, as Descartes said, "Nature conceals God, but man reveals Him." The physical origin of man is still wrapped in mystery. Automatic evolution no more accounts for the existence of man than it does for his dwelling-place. The century has revolutionized the doctrine of the human ovum, and has traced its marvellous development from fertility to birth, and from birth to maturity. But whence are the spiritual powers with which it is endued? What is the force by which the animal part of our nature can be controlled, and the spiritual evolved? Is spiritual life self-generated, or is it the inspiration of the Almighty? The brain is the nursery and instrument of consciousness, but it is not the ego. Mind cannot be "cribbed, cabined, and confined," like brain. The will is really the ego in action; and consciousness tells us that this will is not at the mercy of the strongest motive, like a dead stick floating down a river, but is itself directive. Motives suggest; Will acts. The material is thus subordinated to the spiritual. The one is the scaffolding, and the other the permanent structure. When we have reached this point we are tracing the spirit-life back to the Fountain-head, which is God. "Show me thyself," said Theophilus of Antioch, in the second century, "and I will show thee God." To quote the words of the celebrated Russian lyric poet, Derzhavin :

I hold a middle rank 'twixt heaven and earth,
On the last verge of mortal being stand,
Close to the realm where angels have their birth,
Just on the boundary of the spirit land.
The chain of being is complete in me;
In me is matter's last gradation lost,
And the next step is Spirit.

As long as we hold the spiritual origin of nature and the spiritual side of man, we cannot lose the fundamental thought of God. But all is mystery until we come to Christ. In Him we see what we otherwise only dimly feel after. He stands in history like a rock. He challenges attention, claims allegiance, and offers life. There is no other way. "He that hath the Son hath the life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life."

Let us face the new century with Him as a living bright reality in our hearts. There are sure to be new onslaughts on the faith. Materialism will spread itself like a thick fog, the Scriptures will be riddled with fresh attacks; the Lord's day will be desecrated; animal pleasures will be made easy; and the day of judgment will be forgotten. Our principles will be tested far more seriously than has lately been the case. But God remains the same; and the Master has said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." He who has witnessed to Himself so marvellously in the nineteenth century doubtless has greater things in store for the twentieth.

The Name of God.

"They that know thy name will put their trust in Thee" (Psa. ix. 10).

Make known thy name to me, my Lord—
Thy nature in thy name;
Help me to read it in thy Word,
And every truth to claim.

Thy name is The I Am—all things
Are changing—Thou, the same;
Time passes by on swiftest wings—
Our life, a dying flame.

Thy name is Goodness—and my guilt
Takes refuge in thy grace;
I think of blood, for sinners spilt,
That they may see thy face.

Thy name is Holy—who can tell
How infinite Thou art;
And yet Thou dost descend and dwell
In every contrite heart.

Thy name is Father—orphans, we,
Who in bereavement cry,
And run for refuge unto Thee,
Who dost their needs supply.

Thy name is Light—in darkness deep,
Thou dost our footsteps guide;
And in the way our feet dost keep
And lead us to thy side.

Thy name is Love—our cravings fill—
Help us in Thee to rest
Our hearts' unresting yearnings still,
And hold us near thy breast.

Thy name is the Consuming Fire—
Burn all our base alloy,
Subdue in us carnal desire,
And fill us with thy joy.

The Week of Prayer.

THE Week of Prayer called year by year by the council of the Evangelical Alliance is now being observed throughout the world. In a brief word of encouragement and appeal, which has been issued by the council, it is remarked that children of the one family kneel in one spirit, and in one faith, on one day, and with one petition before the one great God and Father of all.

The topic announced for Monday was "The Church Universal." At Exeter Hall, Pastor Archibald G. Brown presided over the daily prayer meeting, and announced that by desire of the committee the whole hour would be devoted to prayer. He explained that the subject naturally divided itself as follows:—(1) Praise: for the love of God in Christ, and the gift of the Holy Ghost; for the wide preaching of the Gospel, and re-awakening and that the present is still "the day of salvation." (2) Confession: of slothfulness and worldliness amongst Christians; prevalent neglect of New Testament doctrine and practice; and omission by churches and individuals of faithful witnessing before Jew and Gentile. (3) Prayer: for greater manifestation of the Holy Spirit in the lives of Christians, for zeal in soul winning, and for recognition of the unity of all believers; for more entire consecration and clearer views of truth amongst all ministers, teachers, and evangelists; and for the speedy accomplishment of prophecy and earnest preparation for Christ's coming. The numbers who attended proved than an unusual amount of interest had been awakened. Among other topics heavy on the hearts of those taking part were a realization of the need of fellowship which should include especially the native believers of China in this time of persecution, and a yearning for the close of the war between two Christian nations in South Africa, which is so great a cause of offence to the native races.

At the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, the speaker was Rev. C. Bradshaw Foy, who founded his address upon part of Heb. xiii. 21, "To do his will." After quoting passages from Scripture illustrative of promises of blessing to those who seek to do God's will, Mr. Foy said that most of our trials, as well as our sorrows, are the result of failure in realizing and following that will. It is necessary, first of all, to have knowledge as to what is God's will concerning us, and that knowledge may be obtained in prayerful to which we must turn, not merely to obtain a "daily portion," but as a student turns to his text book, or a traveller to his guide. It is a melancholy fact that many professing Christians devote more attention to their newspapers than to their Bibles, and need to pray, "Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law."

There is a tendency to act in the affairs of daily life without reference to God's will, and we must seek more and more that spiritual discernment of which Paul speaks in Rom. xii. 2: "That ye may prove (or discern) what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." Finally, there must be a process of spiritual adjustment, since our wills and affections become warped by contact with the world, but in the Resurrection of Christ we have a pledge of God's power and willingness to help his people to live in newness of life, according to the Divine will.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—At the New Year's gathering of this Society, the hall at the headquarters at London Docks was well filled with seamen of various nationalities. Mr. H. W. Maynard presided. Rev. John Spence, of Sloane Street Baptist Church, who said that he started life as a Shetland fishing lad, gave the men some practical and excellent counsel. Addresses were given by other friends in Swedish and German, and for the benefit of the British seamen, who were in the majority, these remarks were translated into English.

Dr. Harry Guinness.

ALTHOUGH during the latter part of last week the condition of Dr. Guinness was of the gravest possible character, a most serious relapse having taken place early on Thursday morning, at the time of writing (Monday, January 7) we are thankful to say that a decided improvement has taken place, we believe in answer to the many prayers of God's people all over the land. From every quarter, during the past few days, telegrams and letters of inquiry have been received at Harley House, and special meetings for prayer have been called together in many parts of the country by friends and helpers of the work. Mrs. Guinness and members of the family have been much cheered and sustained at this critical time by the many sympathetic messages which have come to hand.

In the meantime, every department of the world-wide work of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union with which Dr. Guinness' name is associated, is being carried forward, and in the course of a few days a party of three missionaries will be leaving for the Congo, where reinforcements are urgently needed to fully man the mission stations. A new station has recently been opened at Baringa, on the river Maringa, one of the many tributaries of the great Congo river. The necessary clearing in the forest has been made, and dwelling-houses and a Mission school-chapel erected. As the readers of The Christian well know, the arduous nature of missionary work on the Upper Congo—or indeed in any part of Central Africa—involves the necessity of frequent furloughs of missionaries, and therefore it is all the more necessary that none of the stations should be under-manned. Several brethren are due home this year.

Mr. Somerville Gilchrist goes out for the third time, and returns to his station of Lulanga, which is situated at the confluence of the tributary bearing that name and the main Congo. In his former periods of service, during the past eleven years, this beloved brother has passed through very deep waters, but he goes forth again to his post with courage and hope, and girded with Divine strength. Mr. Gilchrist acts as the secretary of the Field Committee of senior missionaries. The other two brethren, Messrs. Charles Bond and James W. Cole, go out for the first time. These have both received a full course of training in the R.B.M.U. Colleges, and have in every way evidenced, during their college career, their call to foreign missionary service. Mr. Cole is a member of the East London Tabernacle, where for many years he worshipped and was a worker under Pastor Archibald G. Brown, and has already a sister in the Chinese Empire under the C.I.M. Mr. Cole has taken the Livingstone College year of simple medical training, which has already proved such a valuable adjunct to many in the mission field. Mr. Bond comes of a godly family in Nottinghamshire, but his latter years, prior to coming to College, were associated with Devonport, where, as a member of the Y.M.C.A., his testimony for Christ was markedly owned of God; in fact, the secretary of that Association wrote of him as a man of whom "professors" are afraid. May his outspoken testimony be increasingly used of God in the dark land to which he goes.

The necessary expense in connection with outgoing of these brethren, and the home-coming of others, together with the up-keep of the Mission Stations, and steamers, as also the manifold operations of the R.B.M.U. in many lands, and the maintenance of the Training Colleges and Evangelistic and Medical Missions at home, involve an outlay of £500 a week. The practical co-operation of many of the readers of The Christian during the past years has been greatly valued, and their continued fellowship is earnestly sought.

The Baptist Union (19, Furnival Street, E.C.) have issued as a neat booklet a memento of The Late Mr. Henry Wood, J.P., late treasurer of that organization. Mr. Wood was a man of sterling character, and many who knew him will be glad to possess a copy of the booklet.

SUNDAY, January 13. Ezekiel x.

IN this chapter we have two further stages in the departure of the Shekinah from the Temple. In chap. viii. 4, it stands in the inner court; in chap. ix. 3, it has removed to the threshold of the house; in chap. x. 4, it has mounted up so that it stands above the threshold; in v. 18, it has mounted up still higher; in chap. xi. 22, 23, it has removed to the Mount of Olives. Such are the stages in the departure of God's keeping power. There is an old legend that the sentries in the Temple on the eve of the day of its destruction by the legions of Titus heard the rustling of wings, and voices that cried, Let us depart. If this is at all emblematic of God's departure from the soul, let us remember that the Divine Being does not all at once withdraw his presence, but removes by stages. He lingers as long as He can, and removes only when He can stay no more; and when He is gone, whether from a city or a soul, his protection is gone, and its destruction is near.

The description given of the cherubim and the wheels is very mysterious. The points to notice, in vv. 11, 12, are, first, the intelligence of the cherubim indicated by their eyes, as though always fixed upon the Divine will; and the sympathy between them and the wheels, which represented the course of Divine Providence. There is a close connection between the spiritual beings that serve God day and night, and minister to his saints, and the arrangements of his Providence. All things work together for good to them that love God.

The people mocked Ezekiel. They declared that the destruction of their city was not so near as had been foretold. Their contrariety led to an intenser possession of the prophet by the Spirit of God (v. 5), and heavier judgments were pronounced. The words of the prophet fell with mighty power upon the people, so much so that one of them fell dead at his feet. Then it was that the prophet began pleading for them with strong crying and tears. As we see the sin around us, let us fall on our faces before God, and plead that men may indeed come under the mighty conviction of the Holy Ghost. What a blessed thing it would be if, in the midst of the avocations of daily business, a great conviction from God were to fall upon the people, and that to many a Saul, proud of his youth and wisdom, the Son of God might appear, casting him to the ground, and transforming him into an apostle. Let us pray for this.

See how prayer prevails with God, and ponder the exquisite promises of vv. 16-21. If you are unable to go to the house of God, either through sickness or far journeying, ask Him to be Himself your sanctuary. Plead for the united heart, and the new spirit; for the removal of the heart of stone, with its insensibility and obduracy; and for grace that you may walk in his statutes, keep his ordinances and do them, so that you may be his people, and know Him as your God.

TUESDAY, January 15. Ezekiel xii.

The scene of prophecy once more returns to Babylon. The Jewish exiles there were unwilling to admit the unwelcome truth that they should not return to their own land. The false prophets were buoying them up with hopes that were not destined to be realised. We must always take care when our expectations are affected by our desires. So often I have noticed that people are unduly influenced by those who are shrewd enough to guess what they wish, and fit their words with it. That is more likely to be God's Word which conflicts with natural inclination. These false prophets glided in the current of the people's wishes, and declared that their return to Palestine was imminent. The very fact that Ezekiel stood out so firmly was a presumption of his speaking the truth of God.

In two striking actions, the one of digging through the wall of his house, as afterwards the princes would dig through the walls of the city; and the other, the eating bread and drinking water with trembling and carefulness, Ezekiel depicted the horrors of the siege, and the ultimate fall of the city. The closing vision, from v. 21 and onward, indicated that the fulfilment of these predictions was at hand.

What a comfort it is to us to know that we belong to a city which cannot be moved, but abideth for ever, founded upon the eternal covenant between the Father and the Son; whose walls and gates can never be dug through or overthrown.

WEDNESDAY, January 16. Ezekiel xiii.

This is a scathing denunciation of the hollow and mischievous pretensions of the false prophets, who followed their own spirit, but had seen nothing. They had not seen, and had not been sent. They had prophesied peace, when there was none. They had daubed the slight wall of the people's hopes with the whitewash and mortar of their assurances.

It has seemed full often, as we have turned over the books of current sermons, that there is room for these awful denunciations to be ringing out still in the world. Men build their slight walls between themselves and eternal death. They say that God is good, and all will come right at last! that if a man obeys the impulses of his nature, the God who made him, and not he, is responsible; that either all souls will be saved, or that the wicked will be annihilated. And there are always plenty of false prophets to be found, who, whatever doctrine is in vogue, are ready to countenance and sustain it. But all their work is only to entrap unwary souls, and add to their personal condemnation. The great hailstones and the stormy wind will work their wild fury, in spite of wall or mortar. It becomes us, who are set to be the ministers of God's Holy Word, to ask ourselves very anxiously, whether we are proclaiming the whole purpose of God, or are pandering to the tastes and whims, the loose doctrine and loose living of our people?

Professing Christians are teaching their children that a good deal of the world is compatible with the service of Jesus Christ, that the ball, the theatre, the godless companionships of the world, are in keeping with the Lord's Supper and tract distribution. It becomes every servant of God to be very watchful, and not to make pillows for carnal ease, nor kerchiefs for ashamed faces. Ah, the lies with which the hearts of God's people are being made sad! Truly, the Master suffers most at the hands of his friends.

THURSDAY, January 17. Ezekiel xiv.

The elders of Israel seem at last to have been aroused by the prophet's vehement protestations. They came to him, hoping to hear a mitigation of their sentence; but they were not sincere, as they had set up idols in their hearts. How true this description is of many professing Christians. We have idols which we put in the place of God, and to which we give the homage and love which are due to Him alone. An idol is something that can be seen, an appearance, a semblance; and how many of us twine around the things seen and temporal the very emotions which we should reserve for the Unseen and Eternal. It cannot be too often remembered that the people and things which God has put into our lives will not harm us, when they are accepted as his gift, "who giveth us richly all things to enjoy." When we thank Him for them, see Him in them, use them for his glory, they are innocent. But they are awfully hurtful when considered apart from Him.

Notice that seventh verse; the man who sets up idols, always separates himself from God. It is the separation of things and people from God that makes them idols. Very often those who apparently are most devout, are most deeply under the spell of idolatry. There is room, therefore, for us all to ask that God would search us, and cast the dagons down before his ark.

The dearest idol I have known,
Whate'er that idol be,
Help me to tear it from thy throne,
And worship only Thee.

The repeated classification of Daniel with Noah and Job is very remarkable. He was still comparatively young, perhaps between twenty and thirty years of age. But such was the sanctity of his life, and the noted power of his prayer, that he is classed with two of the greatest names of Scripture. Each of these three men by intercessory prayer had warded off peril from those who were closely allied to them; but even their prayer could not avail to deliver their people from imminent destruction.

FRIDAY, January 18. Ezekiel xv.

The only use of a vine is in its fruit-bearing. Alone amongst all trees it is notable for the abundance of its luscious fruit. It is this that gives it its unique value. Its wood is never used for any work; not even a pin is made of it on which to hang vessels. If, then, a vine does not bear fruit, it is absolutely useless. The oak, chestnut, the fir, are always serviceable, but a fruitless vine never.

This parable explains Israel's position in the world. The one reason why God chose Abraham and his seed was the specific purpose of bearing fruit to Him in the world. The Jews were chosen to give us the very words by which to express and teach the great doctrines of Substitution, Atonement, and Faith, to supply us with the phraseology of our prayers and psalms, and to be the means of the Divine revelation. If God may be said to have chosen the Assyrian as his hammer, the Roman to teach legislation, and the Greek to touch our imagination—to the Jew was reserved the higher office of furnishing the Scriptures, and of the Hebrew race He came who is God over all, blessed for ever. To fail in their high function was to fail utterly; hence their scattering to the winds.

What a solemn lesson is here! All the advantages which we possess have been bestowed on us with the special intention that we should pass on the love of God to others. Our spiritual prerogative is our one claim. If we fail there, there will be nothing for us but to be as fuel to fire. We have failed in the one thing for which we were redeemed (John. xv. 2).

Under the image of a little baby girl, cast out in the day of her birth, without pity or compassion, but in contempt of her life, God reminds his children of their lowly origin. There was nothing naturally to attract Him. He loved them because He would. How exactly this applies to many of us who had no possible claim on God, saving that of our utter need and desolation. But He passed by. It was a time of love, and He cast over us the skirts of his mantle, and bade us live.

What has He not done since? As the protector of the little outcast set himself to clothe her in broidered work with fine linen and silks, with bracelets, earrings, and jewels, so our God has made lovingkindness to abound towards us. There is simply no limit to the beauty with which He has sought to deck us, and the grace which He has put within our reach. We are accepted in the Beloved, clothed in his righteousness, perfect in his comeliness, so that He can say of us, Thou art all fair, my love. Oh, ponder the expression of v. 14, "Perfect through my comeliness which I have put upon thee, saith the Lord God."

As the adopted child turned from her immortal Lover, became unfaithful to his claims, and sought the fellowship of idle deities and idolatrous nations, so have we turned from God. Oh, what a bitter story of infidelity and self-pleasing is traced on the tablets of memory, and on the books of God. So wayward have we been, fitful and capricious! Now like a flaming fire, and again as cold ashes! It is for this that God has been compelled to chasten us. Those who had not such advantages, and were not called to such a high destiny, have not suffered as we have, just because God has not expended on them what He has on us, and has not yearned after them with the same intense desire. Ask Him to establish unto thee his everlasting covenant (v. 60).

The King of the World.

AN ALLEGORY.

(From the French of Rev. R. Saillens.)

AROUND an elevated throne a vast assembly was gathered. The throne was empty, and this tumultuous assembly had for its object the designation of him who was worthy to occupy it. I beheld and I saw in this crowd the most illustrious of all men—many of them as history had depicted them—but others, the greater number, were unknown to me, so different were they from their portraits. I recognized them only by hearing their names repeated by the multitude.

"To me the throne belongs," cried a young man, still three parts intoxicated. "My name is Alexander. I have borne my victorious arms even to the world's margin, and I have the right to be the king of the world."

"What is this boy saying—the throne is mine," cried out with brave voice another man, who was named by those around him Julius Cæsar. "I am not a vulgar conqueror, but a founder of a civilization. I created the Roman Empire, and I would have created a universal empire if the dagger of Brutus——."

"You are only heathen," said a third person in whom I recognised Charlemagne. One could not mistake that long white beard, or the globe surmounted by a cross which he carried in his hand. He continued, "I am the sole legitimate Emperor, for I have been consecrated by the Pope. To me the throne belongs. Have I not merited it, for did I not baptize in one day 30,000 Saxons? My victories were pious actions: and I had certainly founded a universal monarchy if death had not arrested me."

After him Mohammed, Tamerlane, Charles V., Henry IV., and Napoleon spoke. Each of them, advancing most plausible reasons, defended his right to reign. And, in fact, each of them had, in his lifetime, dreamed of the throne of the world, and some of them had nearly obtained it.

In one corner was gathered a disdainful crowd of philosophers. Amongst them Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Cato, Cicero, Seneca, Diderot, Rousseau, and Voltaire occupied the front rank. They were more numerous even than the conquerors, and their clamours were quite as impassioned. "What claims have these violent men, these champions of brute force? The true royalty is that of the spirit—and that is ours."

Said some, "Do we not represent Greece, whose ancient wisdom still governs the world?" Said others, "Have we not moulded the type of powerful Rome, of which even the shadow causes you yet to tremble?" "And we," cried others, "are we not the father of the French Revolution, which has regenerated the world?"

In another part of the assembly were the savants and the inventors. One professed to reign by the power of the cannon, another by the printing press, another by electricity.

Finally, the poets closed the circle. They were all there, from Homer to Shakespeare. And the noise of all their lyres together, disputing for the universal royalty, was less harmonious than one had expected.

As all these persons disputed with loud voices, there was suddenly, at the foot of the throne, a movement of the earth. A gaping hole, several feet deep, had just been hollowed out. And all gazed upon it with astonishment. Soon a voice sounded from the depth of this hole:—"Kings and philosophers, wise men and poets; all of you, great and small, behold your king."

The voice was sarcastic and scoffing; and, as all leaned forward they beheld emerge from this dark hole an unclean creature which advanced slowly, unfolding its long rings upon the dust, and moving in the direction of the throne. It was a worm! And all the men drew back with affright, for each of them had recognised his master.

Already the worm was at the foot of the throne—it was gliding from step to step, when from the gaping hole which it had left behind it there appeared Someone.

He was not a king, for He had neither sceptre nor crown. He was not a soldier, for He had no sword. He was not a philosopher, nor a poet, nor a savant, for He had nothing in his hands—nothing but bloody marks, as if nails had pierced them. He took one step out of the sepulchre, and, placing his foot upon the earth-worm which had silenced the great men, He crushed it. Then He mounted to the throne, and sat upon it.

And all there, both great and small, were silent before Him.

And the small, the humble, and the oppressed adored Him, for they had recognised in Him the only conqueror, the only sage, the only liberator, the only one worthy to reign over the world, because He only had triumphed over death.

Korean Children.

THE Home for Destitute Children at Seoul, Korea, is situated in a healthy location outside the city walls, and yet within easy distance. Twenty-one children have been received and cared for during the past year, or rather during a year and three months. Four of these were brought in such a neglected condition that they never rallied, and the doctor's verdict as to the cause of the death of two of them was, "Generations of dirt and uncleanness."

After a child enters the Home, it takes about five months' regular feeding and bathing to produce any appearance of healthfulness. The children have no idea of play at first and have a look older than their years. This gradually softens down, and they look younger, and the boys begin to roll down the banks and play like other children.

The religious teaching in the School and Home is evangelical and undenominational. The secular instruction consists of elementary branches of knowledge, and is given, of course, in the Korean language. The industrial training includes dairy, laundry, and needlework for the girls, and Korean industries and farm work for the boys.

A Sunday school is conducted on the premises. Scripture is taught daily, and the main object of the Home is to train Christian men and women that they may carry the truth to those among whom they shall live. Two ladies, Miss Jean Perry and Miss Ellen Pash, direct the work in conjunction with the council. Miss Pash is at present in England, and may be addressed Esbourne, Laurie Park, Sydenham.

A Newsboy's Sermon.

HE was working his way through a crowded car, offering his papers in every direction in a way that showed him well used to the business and of a temperament not easily daunted.

The train started while he was making change, and the conductor, passing him, laughed.

"Caught this time, Joe!" he said. "You'll have to run to Fourteenth Street."

"Don't care," laughed Joe, in return. "I can sell all the way back again."

A white-haired old gentleman seemed interested in the boy, and questioned him concerning his way of living and his earnings. There was a younger brother to be supported, it seemed. "Jimmy" was lame, and "couldn't earn much hisself."

"Ah, I see! That makes it hard—you could do better alone."

The shabby little figure was erect in a moment, and the denial was prompt and somewhat indignant.

"No, I couldn't! Jim's somebody to go home to—he's lots of help. What would be the good of havin' luck if nobody was glad, or of gittin' things if there was nobody to divide with?"

"Fourteenth Street!" called the conductor, and as the newsboy plunged out into the gathering dusk, the old gentleman remarked, to nobody in particular, "I've heard many a poorer sermon than that!"

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 13.

Youthful Consecration (Eccles. xii. 1).

I WAS interested to hear the other day from a soldiers' missioner, just back from the front, that on the eve of the battle it is almost impossible to get the men to decide for God, because they say they feel it mean to have spent their life for themselves, and to give the poor remainder of it to Him, under the pressure of fear. What a regret there must be in the hearts of men who are withheld from coming to God by a feeling of this kind! In their heart of hearts they must be having a perpetual controversy with themselves, from which we shall be saved by obeying the injunction of the preacher. Let God have your best, the peep of the morn, the first nosegay of spring flowers, the brightest, gladdest, happiest moments of your life. Be sure of this, that He will not make them less gay, but more deeply and thoroughly blessed. Of all the young men and women that I have met, I am sure that none will compare with those whose hearts have been right with God. Their laughter has been the merriest; their part in innocent mirth and manly sport has been the most exuberant and successful.

Break up these words, and remember. Sit down by yourself each day, and think steadily and quietly about God, his claims, his love, his words of truth and grace. It is recorded of one of the Egyptian kings that he was accustomed to spend a certain amount of time each day in a room which was furnished with the utmost simplicity as a shepherd's hut. He loved to be reminded of the circumstances of his early years; he said that they enabled him to think more truly of himself, and of the responsibilities of his government.

Enter into thy closet, and shut the door upon thee, and remember thy Creator. Do it now. The longer we procrastinate, the more difficult it is to act. The habit of indecision grows upon us, and all the time that we are halting, that appears to be more and more of a burden which should be our privilege and delight. Thy Creator. He made thee, and has a claim therefore, just as the man who has built the house may claim to become its occupier. If He created thee, there was a Divine purpose in his heart which inspired Him. Wilt thou not go to Him and ask what that purpose may have been, and yield yourself to Him that He may realize it perfectly? It is a blessed thing for youth to remember God as the Creator, because in redemption He will not contradict anything which He put in us in creation. To hear some people talk, you would suppose that the Saviour had come to annihilate all the natural play of the humanity with which our Creator has endowed us, but it is not so. Jesus only saves us from the evil principle which has crept in to vitiate our souls, but He leaves us the power of laughter and tears, the sense of fun and merriment, the natural, generous, genial, flow of spirit which is so characteristic of opening manhood and womanhood.

We need hardly linger upon the exquisite imagery which follows of old age, when the power of enjoying life has faded away. Almost any commentary will explain the references. I suppose it would be impossible to find in literature a more exquisite description of the failure of age. The closing hours of life, already darkened by the evening (2); the powerlessness of arms and feet, of voice and nerve (4, 5); all are so full of pathos and poetry. It is for us, however, to speak of the silver cord by which the lamp of life hangs in the vestibule; of the golden bowl in which the light burns; the pitcher of the heart which so soon breaks; and the wheels of the wondrous mechanism of nerves by which the heart is kept in its motion. See to it that before the loosening and the breaking come, that every spark of intellect, every throb of affection, every thrill of nervous energy and strength, be given to Him who made, redeemed, and waits to fill with his own most blessed Spirit. The body, at the best, is only the temporary tent of the spirit which God presently will recall to Himself to give account of the splendid opportunities given to it by its brief residence in this world. Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?

C.E. NOTES.

A bronze tablet is to be placed in Williston Congregational Church, commemorating the fact that the first C.E. meeting was held there twenty years ago. Its designer is Mr. H. B. Pennell, who led that first meeting as a mere lad. Contributions for the tablet have have been received from literally all corners of the globe.

The holidays have been a great time for the sunshine work of Endeavourers throughout the country. Reports come from district after district of breakfasts and dinners being given to poor children, or of the distribution of food and garments to the needy and infirm. Endeavourers have thus been learning the meaning of the Christmas message, "Peace on earth, goodwill towards men."

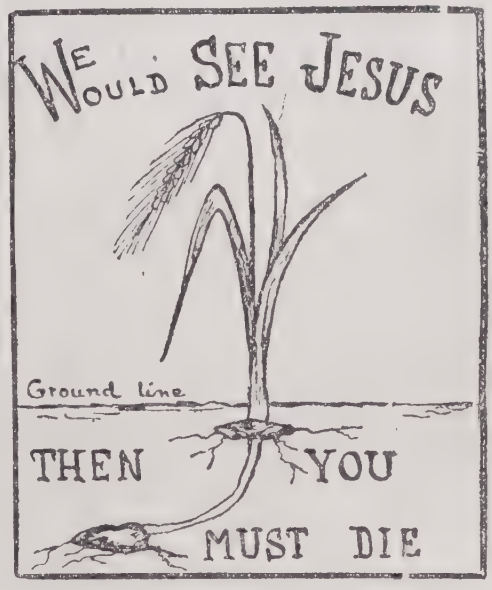
International S.S. Lesson.

January 20, 1901.

Greeks seeking Jesus (John xii. 20-33.)
Golden Text.—"We would see Jesus" (John xii. 21).

Introduction.

(20) MANY had heard of Jesus who had never seen Him, and among the crowds who came up to Jerusalem to the Passover were some Greeks. They were Gentiles (John v. 35); but as "they came to worship," we see that they believed to a certain extent in the Jews' God. Gentiles came to worship at the birth of Christ (Matt. ii. 11); and now at the end of his life, just before He dies, come other Gentiles with a great desire to see Him (21).



Plan for Blackboard.—(24) Jesus Christ Himself died, and from his death much fruit has come to the glory of God. If we would see Jesus, we too must die. Notice the process. The first seed throws out a rootlet or two, and a tiny frond; this frond forms another root, throws out fibres, and pushes its way through the earth to grow up and bear leaves, blossom and fruit. The first seed put in the earth dies.

1. A Wish.

(21) "We would see Jesus," a deep, earnest longing to see Him; this was the Greeks' wish, so they come to one of his disciples. Philip and Andrew consult, and together they tell Jesus. Other verses about Philip, John i. 45; vi. 5; xiv. 8; and of Andrew, who brought others to Christ, John i. 41; vi. 8, 9.

Have you this wish? And if you do not know how to see Jesus, won't you go to one of his disciples who loves Him, and ask him to show you the way? You can have that wish gratified to-day: now at once you can see Jesus by faith if you will (Job xxiii. 3; Psa. cxlv. 18). Look at v. 32, and with it John iii. 14-16, and you can see Him.

2. How to obtain the Wish.

Two words out of ver. 24 tells us: "Except," "Die." Study the blackboard plan.

We must see Jesus dying for us first, and then we must be willing to "follow" (26).

Die to the self-life; Die to all sin; Die to the old way of living. (Eph. iv. 22, 25, 28, 31).

This is all taught us in verse 25 by Jesus Himself, and (26) brings in the reward and honour to those who do thus die.

3. God's Voice confirming Christ's Teaching.

(28, 29) As though God approved of all that Christ had said (30) "for your sakes," He speaks from heaven.

Other times when God spoke (1 Kings xix. 12, 13; Dan. iv. 31; Mark i. 11; ix. 7; Acts ix. 4, 7; xxii. 9). Let us take heed to all Christ teaches us, and remember God approves of all.

There is a warning (31) to those who listen to God's voice and follow Christ; and that is, that we have an enemy who will do all he can to drag us away from the Saviour who gave his life that we might live. "The prince of this world" is one of his many names; if you would see Jesus, be on the look out lest this enemy crush the wish in your heart.

4. Christ's Wish.

Christ has a wish, too, a longing desire, and that is (32) to draw us to Himself. Surely when we read verse 33 we can see what He suffered, and does it not draw out our very heart's love to meet his great love? Oh that we may be softened and made willing to yield all to Him.

Mr. Moody said: "No machinery has ever been invented that can draw a stubborn will to Christ." No, the stubborn will must be broken, and the need of a Saviour felt before any human being can be consecrated to Him in the death of the self life, Children's Special Service Mission.

THE Committee of the Children's Special Service Mission have long desired to send out a representative to the Australian Colonies, to visit the existing Scripture Union Branches, and to endeavour to extend the work of the Scripture Union generally. Mr. H. M. Gooch, and the Assistant General Secretary of the Mission, son of Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, has agreed to undertake the work.

The Scripture Union was first introduced into Australia by Rev. H. B. Macartney, M.A. In Victoria there are about 320 branches, with about 21,000 members, the General Secretary being Mrs. Veal, of Melbourne. The New South Wales division has about 300 branches, including those in Queensland, with about 13,000 members, and there is a committee at Sydney, of which Mr. Sutherland Sinclair is the secretary. The South Australian division has been formed more recently, and the branches are nearly all in Adelaide, Mr. J. Colville, of Adelaide University, being the secretary. In New Zealand there are a number of scattered branches, with about 9,000 members, the general secretary being Mr. S. C. Farr, of Christchurch.

Mr. Gooch sails to-day (Jan. 10), and is proceeding to Adelaide first, where he expects to remain about a fortnight, afterwards proceeding to Melbourne, where he will spend some three months. Then, after a similar period in Sydney and New South Wales generally, Queensland and Tasmania will be visited, and the work in New Zealand will be taken on his return journey at the end of the year.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey.

IN a letter from New York, Mr. Ira D Sankey says: "We have reached home in safety after a seven days' voyage. The first three days were very rough and stormy, after which the wind changed, and for the last four days the sea was quite smooth. As usual, we escaped sea-sickness and begin to think we are fairly good sailors, this being my eighteenth crossing.

"While we are glad to be again in 'Our ain Countrie,' we do not forget the kind reception accorded us by kind friends in the old land, and wish to send to them all our Christmas and New Year's greetings, especially those who expressed interest in our movements as they read of them in the pages of The Christian."

North London Gospel Samaritan Mission.—The annual report states that abundant blessing has rested on the labours of the workers during the past year. The Open-Air Services in Finsbury Park, and in the immediate neighbourhood, have been signally owned of God; while the visitation work among the poor of the Mission Sister continues to prove a source of help and cheer to many. The hon. pastor is Mr. Henry Bird, 83, Isledon Road, Holloway, N.

Adult Sunday Schools.—In a recent letter to The Times, Mr. William Tallack points out, as lessons of the London School Board election, "the continuing existence in the community of a number of good and earnest men who feel that the most important department of elementary national education is religious training," and "the utter impossibility of the wishes of these good men being carried out." He believes the most practicable remedy for the present painful state of affairs "would be found in a general and vigorous extension of Sunday schools, both for juveniles and adults." After relating some of his American experiences in this direction, he points out that in certain English towns schools on a similar basis have proved very successful. "At Birmingham the Friends' Sunday schools, partly for adults, have trained many thousands of useful citizens of various denominations." That there is much to be done in this way the whole history of the Methodist class system has shown, and we commend the subject once more to the earnest and prayerful consideration of our readers.

Gray's Yard Ragged Church.

THE usual New Year breakfast provided for six hundred poor men and women in the district of Gray's Yard was given on Sunday morning. As on previous occasions the repast was preceded by a brief service. A glance at the congregation revealed a pathetic scene. The major portion was obviously composed of homeless destitute wanderers, who to all appearance had lost energy, were devoid of all ambition, and had become victims of despair, The gathering was essentially an informal one, and prior to the commencement of the simple service the audience engaged freely in conversation, and many individual attempts to improve the appearance of tattered coats and dishevelled locks.

On Colonel BENTINCK announcing the opening hymn, perfect order was obtained, and the general bearing and attitude of the motley company was at once strikingly studious and attentive. It was touching to observe how heartily and reverently, and with what feeling, all united in the singing of the appropriate and inspiring hymn:

> Oh, precious words that Jesus said—
> "The soul that comes to Me,
> I will in no wise cast him out,
> Whoever he may be."

Then followed prayer, led by Mr. T. A. DENNY, and the reading of a portion of Scripture. Another hymn, and every eye is centred upon the platform as Dr. SCHOFIELD rises to warmly welcome his audience, and extend

A HEARTY GREETING.

As he proceeded, his words assumed a deeper significance in propounding in homely terms a Bible story, bringing home its teaching and its application to our every day life. The close attention and whispered comments betokened that the speaker's message was reaching the heart, and hallowed memories were being awakened. Here and there was an indifferent hearer and a dozing loafer, but the attentive and intelligent listeners by far outnumbered these, and earnest looks and tear-filled eyes gave expression to unspoken desires of yearning hearts.

The service over, the scene is transformed. A fourth of a half-quartern loaf of bread, with a mug of tea, form the usual diet for these Sunday morning breakfasts, but on this occasion the fare is amplified, and each is the recipient of a substantial meat pie with mug of tea, followed by a large cake. The distribution of Scripture mottoes brings the gathering to a close; and as the company disperse, little groups gather around the workers, each with some request to make, some trouble to unfold, or some question to ask.

Many letters thanking God that their steps were ever directed to Gray's Yard are continually received from grateful visitors to the church, who have entered the hall wretched, forlorn, and sinful, but have found peace and joy through accepting Christ. The mission is an interesting branch of Christian service, having for its object the temporal comfort and succour of the destitute, but, above all, the winning of their souls to Christ.

If it be true that "he best looks forward who frequently looks backward," those responsible for the mission at Gray's Yard may continue their much-needed work confident of the support of Christian friends, and with the assurance that their labours cannot be in vain. The secretary is Mr. A. G. Fraser, 22, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.

The Tyndal Bible School has been founded "to promote the study of the Word of God by old and young." The specimen weekly exercise before us bears out the statement that "the chief aim will be to secure an intimate knowledge of the Bible itself, rather than knowledge about the Bible." The first term commences January 19; and communications should be addressed to Miss Mason, 8, St. Luke's Villas, West Norwood, London, S.E., daughter of the late Mr. Harley Mason, of the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A.

Christian Workers at Cardiff.

ABOUT two months ago it was laid on the hearts of Christians in Cardiff to meet together in the Police Institute, Westgate Street, to wait upon God in prayer for a revival of his work, From the first a deep, earnest, and self-humbling spirit pervaded each meeting, and the numbers and interest steadily increased, and representatives from various sections of the Christian Church met and lifted up their voices in strong cries and tears, saying, "O Lord, revive thy work." These are evident tokens for good, for as soon as Zion travailed she brought forth her children.

On Saturday evening last there was a very large gathering from Cardiff, Barry, and surrounding district. After singing and prayer, Mr. G. GRANT, of the Sailors' Rest, Cardiff, gave a very helpful and instructive address on "Soul-Winning." Illustrating his remarks by reciting a number of cases that had been dealt with at the Sailors' Rest, he sought to encourage Sunday-school teachers and others engaged in teaching the young who perhaps were not permitted to see much fruit to their labours, and said that Sunday-school teachers began at one end, by preparing the ground and sowing the seed, while they at the Rest were privileged to come in at the other end, and reap what others had sown; but in that day the sower and the reaper would rejoice together.

Captain SHARPLES, Sailors' Missionary, Barry Dock, also gave a short address, declaring his conviction that if Christ were lifted up in the life, as well as in the sermons, He would draw all men unto Him. Mr. THOMAS M. WINTLE, of the Pontymoile Mission, spoke on tract distribution in connection with soul-winning, and said that those evangelists and others that were so mightily used of God to the salvation of souls in the Revival of 1859 and following years were great tract distributors. He believed that in the coming great awakening history would repeat itself, and that God would be pleased to appoint an important place to this method as well as personal dealing with souls.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE well-known missionary to China, Rev. Hopkyn Rees, has been visiting some of the Welsh Congregational churches of North Glamorganshire. The earnestness and simplicity of the missionary made a deep impression upon the congregations, and his visit cannot but be productive of much good.

For the last four or five years a Prayer Union has been in existence in connection with the Calvinistic Methodist body. It consists of ministers and missionaries of the denomination, and its membership now totals 323. The president for the ensuing year is Rev. Griffith Ellis, M.A., of Liverpool, the secretary is Rev. Ellis W. Evans, M.A., of Pensarn, Abergele, to whom the Union owes its initiation.

The official returns of the Welsh Wesleyan Church show a total of fifty circuits, with a total membership of 20,684. The ministers number 107. It should be added that these figures do not include the English Wesleyan Churches in the Principality. Of the four leading Nonconformist bodies in Wales it will be seen that Welsh Wesleyanism is numerically considerably behind the other three.

Welshmen figure with considerable prominence in the programme of the annual meetings of the National Free Church Council. These, as is already known, are to take place at Cardiff on March 12, 13, 14. Rev. J. M. Gibbon is to preach before the Council, and Welsh sermons are to be delivered by Revs. H. Elvet Lewis, of London, and J. Williams, of Liverpool. Other prominent Welshmen who are to take part are Revs. Hugh Price Hughes, J. D. Jones, Thomas Stephens, and James Owen. The Cardiff Free Church Council has made arrangements for over 1,000 delegates.

Lord Street Mission, Stockport. — The work at Lord Street Mission was commenced in a small way in a cottage. Bible readings were held, and meetings for prayer and preaching. Later, the way was opened to secure a new hall, and the work continued to make progress. Many departments of work are maintained, and at the Sunday night Gospel services many have sought the Saviour. An eight days' mission has been held recently by Pastor R. Howton, of Glossop. Much blessing was given, and subsequently seventeen persons were baptized.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

REV. THOS. E. GIBSON, of Armagh, Sunday-school secretary, has addressed a letter to the boys and girls in the Irish Methodist Sunday schools, urging them to commence the twentieth century by praying for peace, and resolving to live pure, healthy, and manly lives.

The Irish Association for the Prevention of Intemperance is doing an excellent work in Dublin, where it carries on extensive open-air work, and where it is just now establishing dining rooms in which working people can get food at lowest remunerative prices.

The two Irish Archbishops have addressed a letter to the Bishops of their provinces, suggesting that special services should mark the close of the nineteenth century, and the beginning of the twentieth, and urging that their meditations should centre in the three notes of confession, thanksgiving, and meditation, with the view that their devotions may be "chastened, gladdened, and elevated."

Scottish Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE voluntary contributions sent in to the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association during 1900 amounted to £22,400, bringing the amount for the past twenty-seven years up to £312,000. The estimated expenditure for 1901 is £16,500.

The usual reunion of members of the Glasgow Young Women's Christian Association was held on New Year's Day, when there was a large attendance. Mrs. Mirrlees presided. Miss Marchbanks, from China, spoke of her work, and Miss Corbett provided excellent music. Miss Jane Hay gave an address upon the war in South Africa, illustrated by limelight views. She had many stories to tell of the bravery and sufferings of our soldiers, and her collection of relics from the battlefields was most interesting.

A well-attended two-days' conference was held last week in the Baptist Church, Cambuslang. On the opening afternoon addresses were given by Rev. James E. Houston and Rev. A. H. Sutherland on "The Full Inspiration of the Bible"; and in the evening Rev. John Urquhart and Mr. J. R. Jack spoke on "The Use of the Scriptures: Precepts and Examples." On the second afternoon the subject was "The Lord's Coming," among the speakers being Rev. A. A. Milne and Mr. Urquhart. The evening subject was "The Signs of his Coming in the Church and in the World," when Mr. Urquhart and Pastor Thomas Stewart spoke.

Lord Provost Chisholm sends a "new century message" to the Scottish Reformer, in which he says: "It may be quite true that temperance reformers close the century in some perplexity. There have doubtless been great searchings of heart, and the love of many may seem to have waxed cold. But they have compelled the nation to acknowledge the supreme importance of the cause they advocate. And their lesson to us is surely this—We temperance reformers must fall back for a time on our root principle, personal total abstinence. We must press home on Christian men and women the obligation under which they lie to set an example which others can safely follow, and the duty they owe to the Master they serve, to deny themselves lest a brother should stumble and fall."

In a lecture delivered at Blairgowrie last week—subject, "The Nineteenth Century: Science"—by Rev. William Muir, he said that, after surveying this great field, the conclusions he had been led to were (1) that in every sphere of life we owe much to science, and that nowhere has the progress of the century been more remarkable than in this connection; (2) that the facts of the case in no way bear out the popular conception that there is some necessary antagonism between science as dealing with the material and religion as dealing with the spiritual; (3) that in every apparent conflict between science and religion the only guiding principle for Christian men is that they must not only not reject, but must welcome, everything which can be proved to be true; (4) that science at its best is neither able, nor professes to be able, to satisfy man's religious nature, and that in presence of all the treasures with which it has enriched his life, he needs as much as ever that Divine satisfaction which comes through Christ alone.

Dublin Prison Gate Mission.—In various ways this Mission aids yearly upwards of 1,000 women and young girls. Those permanently employed earn over £2,000 towards the annual expenditure. Present difficulties have arisen through the outlay for necessary repairs and alterations to the premises in order to maintain the efficiency of the laundry and avoid forfeiture of insurance. Timely help will prevent the work being crippled, and those needing assistance turned away. The hon. treasurer is Mr. William Hayes, 12, Grafton Street, Dublin.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE British Conference will be held at Oxford from June 25 to 28 next, by invitation of the local association. The gathering in the University city promises to be of unusual interest, and several important functions have been already arranged.

Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Oatts have been warmly welcomed at Sydney. Mr. Oatts opened his campaign in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A., and for a fortnight meetings were held in connection with the mission. The afternoon Bible readings were taken advantage of by a large number, and the expositions were most helpful. The mission was continued under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. in Scots' Church, Church Hill. On the Sunday afternoon, Mr. Oatts delivered an address on "Personal Purity," in the Association Hall, which was crowded with young men, over 200 of whom remained behind to sign the "Personal Purity Pledge." The address was received with satisfaction and appreciation, being plain and yet prudent.

Presiding at a meeting convened for the formation of a Y.M.C.A. in Canterbury, Dean Farrar said that those who were acquainted with such institutions in other towns knew the inestimable benefit they were to young men, and he could only hope that this would be the commencement of a flourishing branch of the Y.M.C.A. in that city. When he first came to Canterbury he had a Bible class for young men, but gave it up for various reasons; but it would give him the greatest possible pleasure to meet any class connected with this new association, for certain weeks at any rate in the year, and to take them carefully, and, he hoped, in a way which would interest them, through various parts of the most precious Book which God had given to man.

Ross Bible Carriage.

THE nineteenth annual report of the Ross Bible Carriage, Tent, and Evangelistic Mission will appeal to all who are interested in the welfare of the inhabitants of out-lying villages. In this record we read: "The year that has passed, like its predecessors, has been full of the loving-kindness of the Lord. We have had anxieties and some sorrows in the loss (by death) of several who have been valued helpers of the mission for many years past. But the joy of the Lord has been our strength, and his work our great delight." God has abundantly owned the labours of the superintendent (Mr. John Coates) and his co-workers, who have realized more and more of the Master's presence and leading. Throughout the year Bible carriage and colportage work have been incessantly maintained. By these means thousands of houses and cottages have been visited, and a vast amount of Gospel literature distributed. Upwards of four hundred mission services were conducted, and the itinerations of the evangelists with their tents have resulted in the Gospel being preached in many isolated and neglected districts. Mr. Coates may be addressed, Northleigh, Cantilupe Road, Ross, Herefordshire.

Eastbourne Home for Girls. — From the twenty-ninth annual report of the Home for Motherless, Orphan, and Destitute Little Girls at Eastbourne, it appears that no substantial increase of numbers in the inmates has been made. While little ones everywhere are needing the shelter and training such as can be given in this Home, there are many vacancies, owing to the insufficiency of the means at the disposal of the superintendent. It is desired to increase the number of inmates, and extend the usefulness of an institution which has established its claim to hearty support by its ministry to those of tenders years who have been deprived of parental care and affection. Communications may be addressed to Miss J. S. Lee, at the Home, Hurst Road, Eastbourne.

The Coventry Floods. — The floods which recently occurred at Coventry were of a devastating character. Thousands of people were unable to leave their houses for at least twelve hours. In some instances the bedrooms were flooded, and there is a record of a bedridden woman being rescued by her landlord when the water was up to the top of the bed. In numerous cases the flood reached the top stair. One of the saddest spectacles was to be seen in a court, where the living rooms of five dwellings were destroyed. The stream, which must have risen here to a height of twelve or fifteen feet, not only tore the walls down, but swept away practically the whole of the contents of the rooms, leaving only the front wall, the upper rooms, and the roof standing. A number of families were thus rendered homeless; some lost their all. At St. John's Church, Bibles, hymn-books, chairs, cushions —everything moveable was swept away. The harmonium was floating about, and parts of the wooden flooring that is laid down all over the church were also being tossed about.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Leonard Weaver at King's Weigh House Chapel.

AT the final mass meeting of last year's London Tent Campaign, held at Exeter Hall, large numbers expressed a desire that the work should be continued during the winter months. As a result of these expressions the King's Weigh House Chapel, in Grosvenor Square, W., was obtained for a Mission during the month of January, the first meeting being held on Sunday last, when Mr. LEONARD WEAVER gave a stirring address to workers. It is anticipated that large numbers will be reached in this needy district. Meetings are to be held every evening at 7.45, the evangelist being Mr. Leonard Weaver, and the soloists Mr. R. S. BRADBROOK and Miss EMILY ANGEL.

A. G.

Weaver Brothers at Greenwich.

The Brothers WEAVER have just concluded a most fruitful thirteen days' mission at the East Greenwich Baptist Church. Notwithstanding the Christmas holidays, the meetings have been well attended, and not a single service has lacked definite results. On the second Sunday afternoon a men's meeting was held, when about 400 men gathered to hear the Gospel spoken and sung. Several are now bearing bright testimony, and giving undoubted evidence of clear decision for Christ. On Thursday, December 27, the converts and inquirers were invited to meet the church officers. After tea a happy evening was spent, when advice, counsel, and exhortation was given by Pastor Thos. Murray and Mr. Frank Weaver, who also sang. The people are praising God for the help and blessing he has so richly bestowed upon the church and the two missioners during this happy visit.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

Having regard to the unpropitious weather of December, coupled with the fact that in a district like the East End of London this month in the year is always one of uncertainty, the meetings in the Great Assembly Hall may be considered as having been well attended, especially the Sunday evenings, when Mr. J. S. HARRISON gave some stirring and impressive addresses, awakening the conscience of many, who found their way into the inquiry room for further instruction. During the month the Browning Quartette sang at the evening services.

The week nights were, as usual, devoted to Gospel temperance, and were taken by Mr. George NOKES, whose success as a temperance lecturer is so well known. Watch night brought the old year and old century to a close. A march round at 10.30 with a band, conducted by Mr. F. N. CHARRINGTON, was the means of inducing many outsiders to attend the mid-night service. A more miscellaneous gathering could hardly be imagined. Many came in from the neighbouring public-houses, and the great hall was packed from floor to ceiling. A solemn and powerful address was given by Rev. JOHN T. VINE, and Mr. Geo. Nokes pleaded with the drinkers to begin the New Year without intoxicating drinks. In the early moments of the new century 223 persons came forward and signed the temperance pledge.

Mr. JAMES MACFARLANE has delivered eight addresses on "The Tabernacle," in Gordon Evangelistic Hall, Aberdeen. The addresses proved interesting and helpful, and the meetings were largely attended.

Mr. BOB JOHNSON recently sang and spoke at a gathering of 200 victims of intemperance who had been brought together by the Archway Temperance Society, Highgate, N., Mr. HEAL of the West London Mission, and Mr. E. WELSH of the Temperance League also spoke, and twenty-six pledges were taken.

On New Year's Day a number of young men from the Tib Street Open-Air Gospel Meeting visited once again the Manchester Races. Very few entered the racecourse without receiving a tract or seeing some Scripture texts, which were gummed on banners. The cabmen were not forgotten, and with their permission suitable texts were placed inside their cabs.

Mr. GERALD R. COULTAS has been conducting services in Breconshire. A Bible and Book Depôt has been started in Brynmawr Market, and last Saturday many were attracted to read the good books displayed; among them was the Rabbi of the neighbouring synagogue, who listened attentively to what was spoken. Some deeply interesting meetings were held in the Assembly Room, Worcester Street.

Lord RADSTOCK has had good meetings in the Hotel Continentale, at Paris, and would be glad of the prayers of the Lord's people in connection with their continuance—the next being on January 15, at 8.45 p.m. Much interest has been manifested by a number of Roman Catholics: the great need felt is prayer for a deeper spiritual life among Protestants, to respond to the spiritual aspirations of the Romanists.

Mr. THOMAS PAYNE lately paid a visit to Liverpool. He spoke three times at a Holiness Convention held by Rev. E. INCE, vicar of St. Alban's, in the parish Mission Hall. On Thursday and Friday Mr. Payne took part in a convention in St. Clement's Parish Room, presided over by the vicar, Rev. C. MUSGRAVE BROWN. On Sunday, Mr. Payne spoke at the Gay Street Mission Hall, where he conducted a Watch Night service on the Monday, taking part also in a well-attended convention in the same hall on New Year's Day. Much of God's blessing and power was experienced in these meetings.

Requests for Prayer.

For special services in Staveley, being conducted by James Walker, up to January 17.

That the visit of the Brothers Weaver to Annan, January 13-26, "may be richly blessed."

For a united mission in St. Louis, conducted by Professor W. R. Newell, of Chicago, commencing January 15.

For a blessing upon Dr. T. H. White's visit to the Ipswich Monthly Meetings for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, January 17.

That the work of evangelists labouring at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road, S.W., may be owned of God in the conversion of souls.

For blessing on the course of lectures on Foreign Missions, arranged by the Student Volunteer Missionary Union centre at Bristol, commencing January 15.

Notices.

Will the friend who has been sending THE CHRISTIAN to Mrs. Smith, Manse of Unst, Shetland, kindly send it in future to Rev. W. S. Brouenlee, at the same address?

Will other friends who are sending to the following please note new addresses: Mr. George Smith, Calle Herrera, 420, Buenos Aires, South America; Mr. Robert Lennie, New Westminster, British Columbia.

About Books.

INDIA'S WOMEN.

In the course of a biographical sketch of the late Mrs. Marcus B. Fuller, of Bombay, Mrs. Dyer recently spoke of that lamented missionary's remarkable literary championship of the cause of the women of India. Mrs. Fuller's great work on this subject was brought out in America, and could hardly be spoken of as within the reach of all who might wish to peruse it. It is gratifying now to announce an English edition—The Wrongs of Indian Womanhood. (5s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

The chapters, eighteen in number, originally appeared in the Bombay Guardian. They deal with subjects of pathetic interest and urgent importance, and it is right that they should have been issued in book form. In substance and style they are worthy; and the numerous illustrations materially assist such as would understand the sad topics discussed. In a cordial introduction, Pandita Ramabai says the author "has neither exaggerated nor kept back what can be said on the most important things connected with Indian women's conditions. All who are interested in and want to do something for the salvation of women in India will do well to read her book."

After this, commendation is almost a superfluity. The pages bear evidence of painstaking research and patient investigation regarding infanticide, child marriage, enforced widowhood, also as to life in the zenana, and the questions affecting the nautch-girl, and the muralis, and devadasis, or temple women. Mrs. Fuller sketches the history of reform, whether through Governmental or other exertions, and boldly declares that the Gospel is the real remedy for the sorrows and sufferings of the women of India. Hence she dedicates her book to "the Christian women of India, England, and America, who owe all they have and all they are to our Lord Jesus Christ;" and Ramabai warmly asserts the responsibility of such, in view of the command "Go . . . preach," to give the Gospel to the heathen women of India.

This is a heart-stirring volume. As there is great need for wide-spread intelligence on the subjects with which the pages deal, we trust there will be many readers; also that Mrs. Fuller's appeals will issue in earnest and speedy measures for the deliverance of our great Indian dependency from the thraldom of customs which have cursed its women for thousands of years.

SOME STORY BOOKS.

T. Nelson & Sons.

Craddles, by Alice Knight, is a brief romantic story for boys, of average merit. (1s.)

Among books for younger children are: The Overtons, by Elsie Macgregor. (1s.) The quaint sayings and doings will entertain elders, and the things recorded will show the little folk how to amuse themselves.

A Little Ray of Sunshine, by Jennie Chappell, will be sure of a warm welcome from boys and girls of tender years. For these the author writes with genuine sympathy with the ways and feelings of young folk. (1s.)

A Toast Fag, and Other Stories, is by Harold Avory, the boys' writer. (1s. 6d.) School boys will only regret that the tales come to an end; but then they will assuredly read them again.

Under the title A Terrible Feud, we have a collection of brightly-written stories for children. Each of the narratives has sufficient adventure and amusement to make it entertaining to young folk, while the illustrations leave nothing to be desired. (2s.)

Various authors have contributed, with equal acceptance, to the Gunpowder Treason and Plot, and Other Stories for Boys. The narratives are marked by a brisk, racy style, whether relating the doings of some school boys, who did not count the cost of a lark which consisted in a fusillade of squibs and crackers, or recounting stirring adventures on land and sea. (2s.)

Ivy and Oak is a volume of stories for girls, the writers being Dorothea Townshend, S. Cave, and K. Macdonald. (2s.) The story from which the title is derived, introduces us to two noble girls, the record of whose conduct points obvious and salutary lessons.

A wholesome and stimulating character sketch for girls is E. L. Haverfield's Rhoda. The charge of a family bereft of parents devolves upon the eldest daughter, who proves herself an adept in assuming the care of a home, the harmony of which, however, is not advanced by the tastes, demands, and indiscretion of the younger sisters. (2s. 6d.)

In A Gordon Highlander, by E. Everett-Green, there are picturesque and pathetic passages, but the prevailing note is that of the war drum. The boy characters revel in the phraseology of South African battlefields, and "play at Elandslaagte." (2s. 6d.)

The author of My Lady Marcia reverts to the time of the French Revolution for the incidents of an admirably written story. Interest in the characters portrayed is at once evoked, and is sustained throughout. The heroine having suffered the loss of her father in the conflict, a spirit of revolt against sovereign authority is aroused in her childish mind, the outcome and growth of which are cleverly developed. (5s).

Mr. Horace Groser's biographical sketch of Field-Marshal Lord Roberts have reached its fourth edition. It admirably meets a demand for information regarding a distinguished man, and is sure of still wider popularity. (1s. nett. Melrose.)

That I May Know Him, by Freda Hanbury Allen, is a small volume of verse—soundly spiritual and experimental. The muse treats of high themes and heavenly truths, and the pages will assuredly prove helpful to those who desire deep thoughts expressed in tuneful measures. (1s. nett. Marshall Brothers.)

Regions Beyond, the organ of the works which have Harley House for their headquarters, has completed its twenty-first volume. It would be difficult to conceive a more telling statement of missionary facts, especially as they relate to Africa and South America. Various fields are surveyed in these attractive pages, and the illustrations are numerous and of a high order. (Partridge & Co.)

Another bright book has been written for the Church Missionary Society by Edith M. E. Baring-Gould—With Note-Book and Camera: A Winter Journey in Foreign Lands. (1s. 6d.) The pages describe travels in Egypt, India, Italy, and elsewhere, with nearly 100 snapshots of persons and objects, landscapes and scenes. It is a capital book, a primer of missionary education for the young, and calculated also to instruct readers of riper years.

A volume which many will read to spiritual profit is—God, my Exceeding Joy: A Sketch of the Trials, Labours, and Triumphs of the late Miss Jean McLean. By her Twin-sister Margaret. (Cloth, 2s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) The subject was a missionary in China, and the author of the book is well known for her work among the Japanese. The pages have a definite message for earnest souls. Already the book is in its second edition. Copies may be had from the author, at the Japanese Christian Institute, Tilbury Docks, London, E.

The Book of King Arthur and his Noble Knights. Stories from Sir Thomas Malory's Morte Darthur, by Mary Macleod. (6s. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) A perennial interest attaches to these tales of shadowy men and women; and where the stories may be regarded as of little account, the literary charm and grace of their narration will assuredly demand recognition. There are many excellent illustrations from drawings by A. G. Walker, sculptor; and John W. Hales writes an introduction, embodying welcome biographical points respecting Malory. The volume is sumptuously produced.

Footsteps of Truth appears for the eighteenth year in its useful form. In this annual volume (which is neatly bound and admirably illustrated) we have contributions from leading ministers, notes of evangelistic effort at home, echoes from the mission field, as well as choice poems, Bible readings, and suggestive sermon outlines. The book is representative of a multitude of writers, whose thoughts and pens have given to the world the highest results of holy living and Christian service. Its pages will convey light to many minds, and comfort and inspiration to many hearts. (2s. Shaw & Co.)

Among literary monuments of the Reformation, a place of distinction must be given to the Heidelberg Catechism; and the story of its compilation deserves to stand out in the great body of Protestant instruction and information. A recent publication will help many to know what these things mean and involve: The Heidelberg Catechism; the German Text, with a Revised Translation and Introduction. (2s. 6d. Andrew Melrose.) It is issued in the handsome "Books for the Heart" series, and well deserves such association. The questions and answers are appropriate for present-day study and meditation; and the introductory description is succinct and adequate.

Two very attractive volumes have been added to "Uncle Ben's Bookshelf." The first, by W. Stanley Martin, is The Tinker of Bedford, and the Book that he Wrote, which is a capital sketch for young readers, amply illustrated withal. It would be a grand thing to place a copy in the hands of every boy and girl leaving our elementary schools. The second book is The Fights and Flights of the Huguenots, by Ebenezer Wilmshurst, in which we have an outline of the story of Protestantism in France. Here again are many illustrations which assist the letterpress in showing the cruelties for which Romanism has to answer. (Pictorial covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

Pastor F. E. Marsh's volumes dealing with the Bible and its unfolding for practical purposes, have proved of service to many. He has added yet another to the list: The Christian Worker's Equipment. (6s. Marshall Bros.) It is a volume of studies that have already served as addresses to Christian workers. The chapters number over thirty. They begin with the worker's Assurance, and end with his Reward, the various intervening topics including the worker's Authority, Consecration, Wisdom, Walk, Motive, and Model. Busy Christians, who would bring forth out of the heavenly treasury things new and old, will find this a very useful book, and will prize it all the more for the striking portrait of the author that appears as a frontispiece.

The Miracles of Jesus as Marks of the Way of Life, by Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, M.A. (6s. Isbister & Co.), is an attractive volume. Dealing with the miracles simply as constituting one of Christ's methods of teaching the principles of a true life, the chapters (which originally appeared as Sunday readings in Good Words) are rich in practical instruction. Divergent views and questions are left on one side, in order that the Gospels may tell their own story. Helpful in outline and profitable in reflection, the treatment is admirable. Those who can consult standard expositions of the parables will, nevertheless, find much suggestion in these pages, which will also be welcome to the "ordinary" reader, as simply worded and devotional in tone.

The Red Letter New Testament is an edition of the Scriptures at once curious and useful. It presents the Authorized Version, beautifully printed, with the distinguishing feature that our Lord's words are given in red. The principle is applied not only to the Gospels, but to the Acts and Epistles in which the words of our Lord are recorded; why it is not extended to the many passages of that nature in the Apocalypse we cannot say. To rubricate the concluding section of the New Testament, and so conform it in some measure to the early parts, will be a deeply interesting exercise. This is a publication which is sure to be widely used. It is bound in Syrian morocco (red limp) with round corners, red under gold edges, and well suited for presentation purposes. (1s. 6d. W. S. Forster, London Bible Warehouse, 53, Paternoster Row.)

We heartily welcome a re issue of Rev. Dr. Edersheim's very useful work, The Temple: Its Ministry and Services as They Were at the Time of Jesus Christ. (5s. Religious Tract Society.) For years this work has occupied a place of its own in English literature, having for its aim the exposition and illustration of Holy Scripture. It is at once for the erudite and for those who lay no claim to special scholarship. It is the result of thorough research, yet written in plain and untechnical language. Dr. Edersheim was learned in all the wisdom of the Jews—he being of the stock of Abraham—and had access to the sources of extra-Biblical Semitic knowledge and tradition. Whether we seek information in the understanding of times or places, sacrifices, priestly orders, or any Old Testament rite or institution connected with the Temple, we have light and direction in these pages. The types are explained, and the fulfilment of God's completed revelation is made clear to mind and heart. There are valuable indexes of topics and of Scripture references.

A volume which is sure to be widely read in Anglican circles is The Doctrine of Holy Communion and its Expression in Ritual: Report of a Conference held at Fulham Palace in October, 1900. Edited by Henry Wace, D.D., chairman of the Conference. (2s. 6d. nett. Longmans, Green, & Co.) The Round Table Conference, attended by theologians of various schools and phases of thought, aimed at placing on record well-considered opinions, not the elaboration of new formulæ. The Bishop of London, in a brief introduction, explains the circumstances under which it was called. The Conference was, as it were, a committee appointed to report to the Bishop; and the copy of the minutes is the report which was in due course presented. As a contribution to a great controversy, expressed for the most part in dispassionate language, the book is good reading; as a rehearsal once more of well-known views and convictions, it is also interesting. With thoughtful readers, the pages should make an impression in the Evangelical direction, and in the degree that this is done the Conference will be justified and the publication of the minutes prove of service. Assuredly the Catholic and Protestant positions, with intervening shades of doctrine, were never set forth in fewer words, and with more explicitness of language, than in this book.

The first issue in connection with Story's "Self Improvement Series" of booklets is entitled MEMORY: HOW TO MAKE AND KEEP IT GOOD. It is by Alfred T. Story, and suggestive, though of necessity brief. (6d. L. N. Fowler & Co., 7, Imperial Arcade, Ludgate Circus, E.C.)

An interesting New Year's Address to the Young is FAITHFUL FOR CENTURIES, being an account of a visit to the Valleys of the Vaudois, and some stories from the history of that remarkable people. By J. Forbes Moncrieff. (1½d. Glasgow: Chas. Glass & Co., 43, Mitchell Street.)

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

AS the days draw nigh for the holding of the Great United Mission in London, there is a call on all true believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, to cry day and night to God to send his Spirit abroad into the churches, that his way may be prepared among the vast community of non-churchgoers. Already the visitors are hard at work calling on the people from house to house, and inviting many who have perhaps never been personally invited into a church before. This is a trying and difficult work, needing much wisdom and grace to do it well. Many of those who are unable to join in it themselves are deeply interested. It is our duty to be instant and constant in prayer that these preliminary efforts may move many hard and indifferent hearts to a spirit of openness and willingness to receive the "engrafted Word."

Once more the Daily News comes forward, with the pen of its Special Commissioner, to plead the cause of the helpless and oppressed. This time "The Cry of the Children" is heard, and well does the writer plead their cause. The following headlines speak for themselves:

THE GREAT TEMPTATION.
PUBLIC HOUSE MESSENGERS.
NEED FOR REFORM.

The man in the street, as well as every Christian worker can fill in the paragraphs from their own observation. We have for years been urging the necessity of restrictive legislation. We rejoice to hear the voice of our powerful contemporary in the same cause.

A parent draws attention to what she deems to be a fruitful cause of gambling. She writes:—

> Having to buy and receive gifts of toys for a number of children, I have been appalled to see that by far the greater number of round games now in vogue are games of hazard, with a pool, dice, or counters, thus training children to trust to chance or luck, and enjoy the excitement of winning from others. I send one sample, which speaks for itself. Should not Christians, for the sake of the future, expel from their playrooms this class of game, and encourage games of skill, thus cultivating thought, perception, and ingenuity?

We quite agree with our correspondent. Prevention is better than cure.

Genuine regret is felt at the death of the Bishop of London. During his episcopate, he has won the esteem of the country in a remarkable degree, though he has not given entire satisfaction to either of the great parties in the Church of England. The Bishop was a man with a clear insight into spiritual things, and his probable elevation to the Primacy was regarded with satisfaction both within and without the Church; yet, as has been generally recognised, it was by the number and wide scope of his activities, as an historian and an ecclesiastic, rather than by what we may term saintliness of character, that he will be remembered in years to come. Evangelical Churchmen expected a more authoritative assertion of Protestant principles, but elaborate ceremonial and beauty of outward form had a charm for Dr. Creighton which prevented him from taking so definite a position as had been hoped for.

It would appear from some strange performances at the church of St. John the Divine, Kennington, that the High Church Party are determined to renew something like the old "Miracle" and "Passion" Plays, of which the decennial performance at Ober Ammergau is the only surviving instance on a large scale. A series of tableaux, illustrating the Incarnation, were given during the closing days of last year, including the Visitation, the Annunciation to the Shepherds, the Nativity, the Visit of the Magi, the Shepherds at the Manger, the Flight into Egypt, &c. This "realistic" method of teaching religious facts may have had some justification in early ages when the populace was totally uneducated. To revive such customs now is to feed a low and sensuous instinct, and altogether to obscure the spiritual character of religious faith.

In this connection it is painful to learn that a cinematograph show is "on tour through Great Britain, France, and the United States," depicting, on Sunday evenings, the scenes from the Passion Play. At present it is in the north of England. We hope the Christian public will raise an effective protest, which will banish this blasphemous money-making concern from our shores, at any rate.

The address of the Duke of Norfolk to the Pope last week has aroused the deepest resentment throughout Italy. The leading Italian papers, from the Tribuna to the Secolo, speak in unmeasured terms about this "offence against Italy's inviolable rights." For an English ex-Minister to express publicly in the capital of Italy his desire for the restoration of the temporal power, in such terms as he employed, was a gross breach of good manners, and a State offence. Equally insulting were his remarks about "the attempts of wealthy proselytising societies to corrupt the faith of the young and poor in this your city of Rome."

The Pope, replying to this effusion, lamented the "permission of Protestant activity at Rome, which exploited the misery of the population." "Exploited" is a remarkable word to employ. Were it not for the assistance rendered by various Evangelical societies in Rome, many of the poor would starve. Within the Vatican there are stores of fabulous wealth, while in the streets without there are whole tracts abandoned to poverty and crime. We wonder if the Duke of Norfolk has ever walked across from St. John Lateran into San Lorenzo! He would there see most repellant spectacles, and he would look in vain for any institution, save a Protestant one, which attempt, to deal with the crime and the poverty of that quarter.

As for the faith of the young and poor being interfered with, alas! it is very little faith of any kind that the most of them have. Great numbers of the Roman people have not a scrap of belief in their Church, and still less in their priests. The men in particular frequently make sport of the whole business, and that in public. To call a mechanical and nominal attachment to the Roman Church—by means of child baptism—"faith," is a foolish misuse of words. But through the splendid Evangelical work which is being undertaken in Rome, great numbers of nominal Catholics have been led to a true faith in our Lord and Saviour—a saving faith. It is this work that the Pope would suppress, and if he regained the temporal power, every Evangelical agency would cease immediately. We need not fear, however. Italy has tasted the sweets of liberty, and she will not willingly permit her hands and feet to be again shackled in Papal chains.

The members of the French Chamber will probably be as surprised as the most ordinary French peasants at the revelation of the wealth of the religious orders, which a parliamentary book has just made known. In 1850, they possessed fifty million francs worth of property; within fifty years their real estate has so increased, that to-day their wealth is nearly sixty times that amount. With recent events in mind, the French Chamber will want to know, for political reasons, what is behind all this vast accumulation of wealth. It is remarkable that men who have taken the "vow of poverty" can boast of possessions like these.

There has been a good deal of comment on a recent article in The Spectator, in which the writer bewailed the loss of the "religious certainty" possessed by the Apostles. This is a most misleading phrase, and is made to do duty as a veiled argument for an external standard of authority, such as is afforded by the Roman Catholic Church. It is the trend of recent Anglican literature and teaching that the individual soul is not sufficiently equipped for the voyage "o'er perilous seas" of thought and doubt, and that our religious thinking must be taken care of by experts under the general title of the Church. And there is a widespread feeling among semi-religious people that they are right in relegating their religious problems to the care of the clergy, and the more dogmatic the clergy are, the better these people like it. But the whole position rests on a fallacy. The grounds of certainty are safe and sure—the Word without us and the Spirit within us; and if we but put ourselves under their guidance we shall lack in no feeling of security in spiritual matters.

The secret of freshness in the pulpit is, first, a perpetual refreshment of the heart at the fountain heads of Christian experience; second, a steady habit of filling the mind with new materials of thought; and, third, living contact with men and women in the struggle and stress of life. The first condition provides the spiritual, the second the intellectual, and the third the sympathetic condition of success. The great preachers have been invariably men of devout piety, they have been omnivorous readers, they have possessed a first-hand knowledge of the needs and the difficulties of average human nature. Preachers who are not great, may at any rate, emulate the masters in their method, and, though the results will be moderate, they will be of the same kind. There will be a perpetual touch of freshness and force in their work, and the weariness which so often touches the hearer will be less often felt than is now the case.

Those who undertake to defend the Christian Faith, and to substantiate its doctrines by a process of reasoning, should see to it that they do not fall into the error of suggesting more doubts to their hearers than they are able to dissipate. Not long ago, an aged but well-educated preacher in Wales thought it his duty to discourse on the "Existence of God," and he delivered an elaborate and exhaustive sermon on the subject. Next day an old lady in his congregation met him and said tartly, "Mr. ——, I believe in God in spite of you, in spite of you!" It is indeed doubtful if the pulpit is the place for Christian Evidences, but if they are handled at all, it should be in a way beyond the misunderstanding of the simplest.

We may go further, and say that the Christian pulpit does not exist for the purpose of teaching the people the principles of natural theology. Our Lord and his Apostles took these for granted, and appealed to men accordingly. There is a background of faith on which the Bible builds its special teachings, to which it superadds its own priceless revelation. Jesus always addressed men as those who already knew that God is, and devoted Himself to revealing Him as Father and Himself as Saviour. These are the redeeming truths, to which the later writers of the New Testament are grandly faithful throughout. The Christian preacher and teacher are called to the same work, and had better keep to it. Outside these lines they may be in peril, for few there are competent to deal persuasively with abstract principles of reasoning; within them they are safe, and can appeal without fear to a religious consciousness of their fellow-men.

Among the many "Substitutes for Christianity" invented during the Nineteenth Century, few at one time seemed more formidable than Secularism. Under the inspiration of a few gifted and determined minds, such as Hyndman, Bradlaugh, and others (not to speak of Mrs. Besant, at one time an ardent Secularist), it made a great noise for many years, and claimed a large following, especially among working men. In America, Colonel Ingersoll was its chief exponent and champion. At the beginning of the new century, however, it finds itself in a poor plight on both sides of the Atlantic. Its protest against "other-worldliness" is spent, its leaders are dead, and its message superfluous. The American Christian Standard gives an account of the twenty-fourth annual Congress just held at Cincinnati, where the attendance was very poor, and the chief source of attraction seems to have been a gramophone! Only twenty-seven votes could be mustered as the result of all these years of propagandism, and no enthusiasm of any kind was manifested. Spurious "religions" die with their inventors; the true religion survives its counterfeits and its rivals by simply living on and growing more powerful as centuries go by.

It is a remarkable fact that when men revolt from Revelation on the ground that it is unreasonable, they often gravitate either towards immorality or superstition. Mrs. Annie Besant could not endure the Bible because of its "superstitions;" she has, however, found herself able to accept the crudities and absurdities of a "religion" which teaches the existence of mahatmas, astral bodies, and impossible re-incarnations. And now, concurrently with the present indifference towards, or the revolt from Divine Revelation, we have an extraordinary revival of gross superstition. Fortune-telling has of late assumed colossal proportions, and we are informed that Society people are crowding to the rooms of professed sorcerers. The heavy fines which have been imposed upon some of these impostors seems to have no effect in diminishing the rush after them. How true it is that when men deliberately refuse Divine Light, a nemesis demands that they shall become victims of the grossest follies!

The fight with Tammany Hall—one of the worst enemies of pure and enlightened administration in public affairs in New York—has been going on for almost a decade with varying success. At the last Mayoralty Election in 1897, the victory lay with that party of corruption. This was, it seems, due to divisions in the camp of the reformers, who divided their forces, Mr. Croker's party defeating the reform candidates individually, though it was in a minority on the whole. A very determined attack is to be made on the Tammany party now in power, at the elections coming on during this year, with great hope of success, as there will be a united Reform Party this time, whose enthusiasm is unbounded, and who are finding more response from public opinion than was the case in 1897. The future purity of municipal elections and local government depends largely on the issue of this contest, and it is hoped that in the American capital a blow will be struck at corruption in high places.

When Mr. Arthington's will was announced to the world, many of the secular papers referred contemptuously to the man who "had denied himself the luxuries of life in order to provide means for preaching the Gospel to the heathen." It was altogether too fanatical for the secular press. But we notice that two or three laudatory columns are devoted to recording the career of Mr. Armour, the meat packer of Chicago, who has just died a millionaire. Of him the journals say:

> He was a slave to money making, finally becoming little more than a human money-making machine. Once he told a friend that he had no other interest in life but his business. "I do not love the money—what I do love is the getting of it, the making it. What other interest can you suggest to me? I do not read. I do not take any part in politics, what can I do?"

All this is regarded as "smart" by the men of the time. It looks paltry enough to those who have looked into eternity. We read with curious feelings that this millionaire financed a Mission Institute, in which he enforced "practical and definite ideas," chief amongst them being an "intolerance of doctrines of any kind." Mission work, he said, was "a good investment, bringing in more than ten per cent. of satisfaction." But any mission work of which the love of Christ is not the motive power must be but ephemeral in its results.

The eyes of the whole world have been directed during the first days of the century towards the Antipodes, where we have seen the birth of a new nation under the British flag. Whatever humiliations may have come upon us in South Africa, the relations between Britain and her other colonies bear witness to a wisdom and beneficence in our past dealings with them, of which the British people may well be proud. The federation of the Australasian States was largely the outcome of a spontaneous movement of affection towards the Old Country. Now that they have amalgamated into one nation, and started on a practically independent career of progress, it is to be hoped that they will begin with high ideals and a clean bill in their public administration. Other nations will watch with curious eyes the development of Australasia; but Britain with maternal solicitude and a hopeful pride and confidence that the offspring will improve upon the parent stock.

A writer in the North China Herald, referring to the escape of Dr. Gershom Guinness, and the wonderful deliverance of Mr. Bird, both missionaries of the China Inland Mission, recently observed:

> The whole tale of missionary slaughter, adventure, and escape, ought to be collected and published. It would make a story to be read wherever the English language is spoken.

This, so far as relates to the China Inland Mission, has been done, and the book will, it is expected, be issued at the end of the month—Martyred Missionaries of the China Inland Mission. Edited by Marshall Broomhall, B.A. (5s. Morgan & Scott). The book gives a brief account of the "witnesses unto blood," with portraits. There are also thrilling narratives of the great perils and awful sufferings endured by a number of missionaries while escaping from scenes of utmost danger.

We have heard so much recently of a pessimistic character as to the prospects of Christianity in China, that it is good to hear, from one who knows that country so well as does Rev. Arnold Foster, that the Chinese as a whole are far from being antagonistic to it. In an interesting letter to The Spectator, he says that both the Taeping rebellion and the reform movement of 1897-8, were strongly Christian in origin and tendency, and that though both were abortive at the time, they contained the seeds of inevitable future progress. The Emperor Kwangsu, who is said to have spent his enforced retirement in prayer to the God of Christians, to restore him to power for the sake of the Christian religion, is at heart a Christian, and will show it if he returns to his throne. The attitude of the Chinese themselves is seen in the following extract from this encouraging letter:—

> If, as is often stated, the Chinese dislike missions and missionary methods, how is it that day after day our preaching places are thronged with non-Christian hearers, who will often listen for an hour, or even two hours, at a time to the preaching of Christianity?
> How is it that they will take our Christian books and tracts, literally by the million every year, in almost every case paying with their own money for what they take? It is not our custom to give even farthing tracts away for nothing, and it is not a characteristic of the Chinese to spend even a farthing on what they do not want.
> How is it that they send their children to Christian schools, at many of which they have to pay fees, while purely native and heathen charity schools exist in the same neighbourhood? Of their appreciation of mission hospitals and dispensaries I need not speak.

We have not yet forgotten that the Daily Mail was the chief offender last summer in publishing heartrending news about the massacres in Peking—"news" which afterwards turned out to be untrue. Untaught by experience, the Daily Mail now allows an attack to be made upon Christian missionaries in China, whom it accuses of looting and cruelty. Already Bishop Scott, of North China, has replied challenging the whole statement, and asking the public to receive the Mail correspondent's charges "with extreme caution," because of "their anti-missionary bias." Unhappily, certain of our English newspapers are so opposed to missionary work that in several instances they have opened their columns to vicious attacks upon missionaries, which afterwards have been proved to be unwarranted. There is neither honour nor justice about this sort of thing.

Worldliness.—II.

BY REV. F. C. SPURR, LEWISHAM.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 John ii. 15).

WHEN a man is travelling to a certain destination, and he knows that his route is lined with foes who will do their best to prevent his progress, it would be absurd for him to proceed as if the way were clear. He would seek an escort, and along the entire road he would be wary.

The Christian is marching to a heavenly goal, and he knows, or ought to know, that everywhere the world is lurking, determined to hinder him. A Christian can never overcome the world by ignoring it; he must comprehend its object and its tactics, and he must avail himself of Divine guidance. The world has two most deadly and most subtle weapons which it employs everywhere with fatal effect. We must thoroughly understand these. They are its maxims and its manners. Let us look at these.

First, its MAXIMS. In all that concerns God, man, and destiny, the world contradicts whatever Divine revelation announces. Concerning GOD, the Gospel teaches that He is our sole Master, that in his knowledge eternal life is found, and that there is but one legitimate approach to Him, through the Mediator, JESUS CHRIST. The world contradicts all this. In its estimation God is either folly or poetry; in any case, He is far enough away from man's common life. If any person's temperament should lead him to be "religious," then he is quite at liberty to choose his own religion, since all religions are of equal merit. And as for a mediator, well! the world simply does not believe in one.

Between these two hostile things we must choose, and he who by Divine mercy has chosen the side of God is thereby compelled to treat the "world"

AS HIS INVETERATE ENEMY.

Reconciliation between two such opposed things is simply impossible.

Concerning MAN, the Gospel teaches his great worth and reveals to him his great weakness. His soul is so precious that the entire world of treasures would be no compensation for its loss (Matt. xvi. 26). His soul is so precious that it is worth his while to make any sacrifice in order to save it (Matt. v. 29, 30). The Gospel also solemnly tells man that sin is his great shame and hindrance, and that at all hazards it must be removed; and it crowns its testimony by showing to us that unique spectacle—a God-man dying for man's sin in order to redeem him from its power.

The "world" contradicts all this. It bids us follow our "nature," and give full play to our passions. It makes sport of the notion of a soul to be saved, and speaks only of senses to be gratified. It easily disposes of the idea of sin by wrapping up its evil in perfumed packets, and attaching noble names to the most ignoble deeds. And some of its most daring leaders have gone the length of publicly blaspheming the holy Sacrifice of the world's Redeemer.

Again; we must make a choice between God and the "world," and accepting God we set ourselves resolutely against the world.

Concerning DESTINY, the Gospel teaches definitely why we are here. Our life is but a passage. Eternity is our goal, and the time allotted to us in this world is for the purpose of the grand preparation for the beyond—a preparation which can only be accomplished by "seeking first the kingdom of God."

The "world" contradicts all this. Its maxim is that the present life is alone worth living for; anything beyond that is problematical. The "beyond" being illusive, any preparation for it is unnecessary. The only thing to do is to occupy oneself with the present happiness.

Again, we are compelled to choose. Such contradictions cannot be harmonized—they are condemned by the force of things to an eternal hostility. If we accept the world we make ourselves the foes of God; if we accept God we are bound to hate the "world." Ah! hateful maxims of the world—odious beyond description, more hurtful than a plague, it is easy to understand why our Lord spake of the "world" as He did. He cursed it for its scandals—we must curse it too.

After its maxims, we have to consider the second weapon, its MANNERS. With such maxims what can its manners be? Here, however, is where its subtlety appears. The ways of the "world" vary between the two extremes of blasphemy and formal religiousness. To the pious, to the unclean, it can be voluptuous, but it is the same world, and ever it has the same malice in it. Sometimes it assumes the mask of religion, for its own social purposes; it is the "correct thing" to go to church. Often its vices are refined. It can be witty, clever, pretentious, flattering, and "goody," but whatever it is, and whatever it does, it is always against God—it remains his unrepentant foe.

THE WORLD CAN BE RELIGIOUS;

Often, however, the world is loud-voiced, vulgar, and menacing; its hostility is unconcealed. It directly opposes God, by denying Him to his face, by pretending to discover "errors" in his truth, by vile innuendo, by direct lying, by magnifying any little fault in his Church, and by ribald jestings about his providence.

Opposed to God, it is equally opposed to the good of man; it seeks only his ruin. Ruin of his honesty, by offering to him quick returns for little outlays—prostituting legitimate business into a series of disgraceful and thieving gambling tricks. Ruin of his passions, by forcing upon his senses lewd songs, indelicate photographs, horrible dances, corrupted journalism, and perverted art. Ruin of his emotions, by sensational stories and novels which, failing to convey information or to arouse an honest sentiment, succeed only in exhausting true emotion. Ruin of his soul, in withdrawing it from God and all that is holy and helpful.

In ancient times, when it was clearly visible as an organization separate from the Church, the world openly struck at Christians, burning and imprisoning them. To-day civilization does not permit these methods, but the old worldly spirit is as vigorous as ever: it has altered its methods, but not its objective. It hates God, and it hates man whenever he seeks after God. No marvel that the New Testament uses such terrible language about it: to its invective every enlightened heart must add an emphatic "Amen."

"Careful for Nothing."

"Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you" (1 Peter v. 7).
"As thy days so shall thy strength be" (Deut. xxxiii. 25).

BE not anxious for to-morrow,
Cast on Jesus all your care;
What He gives of joy or sorrow
He will give you grace to bear.
We shall never see to-morrow;
When it comes 'twill be to-day;
For this, strength we need not borrow;
God supplies it as we pray.

"Your Hearts."

BY PASTOR F. E. MARSH, SUNDERLAND.

REMEMBERING that the heart stands for the inness of our being, let us ponder a few Scriptures where the words "your hearts" occur.

I. THE DESTINATION OF THE SPIRIT'S PRESENCE.—There are two great "sent forths" referred to in Galatians iv. The sending forth of the Son for our redemption, which means our emancipation from sin's guilt and government through his atoning death and almighty resurrection; then the sending forth of the Holy Spirit into our hearts, when we become children of God through faith in Christ (Gal. iii. 26; iv. 6).

II. THE LOCATION OF CHRIST'S INDWELLING.—"That the Christ may dwell, through means of your faith, in your hearts" (Rotherham, Eph. iii. 17). The first thought in this verse is, that Jesus as "the Christ" may dwell in the heart. What it means to have the Anointed of God dwelling in us may be illustrated by the different things in the tabernacle. To have Him means we have the glory of his holiness (2 Cor. vi. 17), the ark of his love (1 John iv. 16), the rod of his power (Eph. i. 19), the tables of his word (Col. iii. 16), the manna of his promises (2 Peter i. 4), the incense of his grace (Rom. viii. 34), the table of his fellowship (Psa. xxiii. 5), the light of his truth (Psa. cxix. 105), and the food of his word (1 Pet. ii. 2).

III. THE REALM OF THE LORD'S RULE.—"Sanctify in your hearts Christ as Lord" (1 Pet. iii. 15, R.V.). When the Shah of Persia visited England several years ago, a certain number of rooms in Buckingham Palace were set apart for his occupancy, and for the time being he had absolute control of those rooms. That is what this passage means; we are to set apart our hearts for the occupancy and absolute control of the Lord. When this is done, his will is our delight, his work is our service, his word is our authority, his love is our inspiration, his truth is our element, his grace is our strength, and his glory is our aim.

IV. THE SPHERE OF THE LORD'S MINISTRY.—"He may stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness." "Comfort your hearts and stablish you in every good word and work." "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God" (1 Thess. iii. 13; 2 Thess. ii. 17; iii. 5). The Worker in each of these verses is the Lord. His it is to make us, like a good foundation, firm and steady, so that we may be able to weather the storms of life; and it is his, too, to direct us, as a skilled Pilot, into the harbour of God's love.

V. THE PLACE OF THE WORD'S OPERATION.—We have also "a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed (until the day dawn, and the Day Star arise) in your hearts" (2 Pet. i. 19). I have purposely put a part of the verse in a parenthesis, as the obvious mind of the Spirit is that we are to take heed to the sure word of prophecy in our hearts, till Christ as the Day Star appears. To take heed to the Word of God is to have light in darkness, guidance in perplexity, comfort in trial, authority in testimony, protection in conflict, joy in life, and growth in grace.

VI. THE JURISDICTION OF PEACE'S ARBITRATION.—"Let the peace of God rule" ("act as umpire," Rotherham) "in your hearts" (Col. iii. 15). The peace of God is personified into an arbitrator, to whom all questions are to be submitted which would cause friction, unrest, and disturbance in the heart, and cause opposition against the will of God in the life.

VII. THE TABERNACLE OF THE BELIEVER'S WORSHIP.—"Singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord"* (Col. iii. 16). The incense of grateful praise rises from the heart; the Lord smells a sweet savour of gratification. There is nothing that delights God's heart so much as a praiseful soul. Praise is the essence of worship, the expression of gratitude, the exercise of love, the education of faith, the element of consecration, the employment of heaven, and the evidence of the Spirit's infilling.

* "With gratitude raising song with your hearts unto God."—Rotherham.

Letters from Spain.—III.

CHRISTMAS FIESTA AT FIGUERAS.

ROME changes not. Only recently a priest in London offered a poor struggling widow to have her eight children educated until they were of age, on condition of her becoming a Roman Catholic. This may seem as if Rome were in favour of education. Statistics in Spain, however, show that in places where the priests exercise sole influence, the percentage of those able to read and write is considerably smaller than where Protestant missions have opened schools.

In Figueras, e.g., 95 per cent. can read and write, while in Granada about half of the people are illiterate.

When Madame Rodriguez (before her marriage) first started Protestant day and night schools, only two Government schools existed in the town. Now there are over sixty educational establishments of various kinds. The Bishop of Gerona having intimated that no expense should be spared in opposing the Protestants (i.e., the Figueras Evangelistic Mission) in this province, some schools now try to win the children by free meals and other advantages. Notwithstanding many drawbacks, the Mission schools are turning out the best scholars every year. We were present at some of the examinations, and were much struck with the ready and smart answers of the children, and not least in the villages where they all speak Catalan, while Castilian is the language of the schools; so that the children must mentally translate from the ruder dialect.

The Mission Home resembled a beehive during the days preceding to which teachers as well as scholars were eagerly looking forward, the latter anticipating their diplomas, and the former a well-earned rest after weeks of toil, practice, and preparation. When the longed-for day came, the hall, attractively decorated and illuminated, was thronged with parents, friends, and onlookers. The scholars, standing in the outer hall, sang with much effect a song composed by the singing teacher, after the style peculiar to the Pyrences. Then they marched in, with sparkling eyes gazing at the huge Christmas tree upon the platform. It has not always been easy for the pastor to secure such a fine one. On one occasion the purchase was already completed, when the seller, hearing that he had been doing business with Protestants, exclaimed, horrified, "Holy Mother of God! Here is your money; I do not want it." Through receiving benefit at the Medical Mission, however, the same man was convinced of the good they were doing, and now esteems it a privilege to provide them with Christmas trees.

In his introductory speech, the pastor remarked that some of the boys before them may some day be deputies. To hear the children, girls as well as boys, down to the tiniest mites of three and four years of age, exhibit their oratorical and musical abilities, did not leave any doubt as to the good material in hand. For more than two hours, alternating with recitations, castanets and tambourines gave impetus to the fresh young voices, ringing out with enthusiastic interest. Clothed in the poetical garb of a musical language, the all-important problems of religion, life in Christ, victory through the truth as found in the Gospels, love of mother and country, hatred of vice, and the sweeping condemnation of the Freethinker and the Atheist, were brought to bear upon the hearers, with a force the more intense for being pronounced by such young lips.

A local paper, El Ampurdanes, of December 30, 1900, thus describes the Fiesta:

THE PROTESTANT CHRISTMAS SCHOOL TREAT.

This year, as usual, the Protestant School Fiesta has gone off splendidly. It took place on Christmas Eve. The interior of the building was profusely decorated, and illuminated with numberless coloured gas-lights, and presented a most enchanting scene. The music of the hymns was superior to that on former occasions; both vocal and instrumental renderings were in excellent time and tune. The recitations in poetry and prose, given by the boys and girls, were remarkably well delivered, and called forth immense applause from the large and delighted audience.

Before closing, Don Alexander, the pastor's brother, briefly but powerfully described the difference between the teaching in Roman Catholic and Evangelical schools, proving by facts and statistics, that where Protestant schools exist the majority of the population can read and write, whereas it is the opposite in places where there are only Romish educational institutions.

Diplomas were then awarded to pupils who had been successful at the public examinations held a few days previous. The distribution of toys and other Christmas gifts to the happy children terminated the delightful Fiesta.

In another article the same paper says:

The Protestants are taking root in Figueras. They have established a church, schools, a medical mission, and an illustrated paper, &c., in this town.

We could wish such establishments multiplied throughout the country. W. M.

North African War.

LETTER FROM THE FRONT.

NORTH AFRICAN WAR! I did not know there was one, you exclaim. No, South Africa and China fill minds so full that other things are crowded out, and we forget that the good may be the enemy of the best. But there is a war, a holy war, in Northern Africa, and I want to tell you how the fight goes in Sousse, Tunisia. Till six years ago, the enemy had it all his own way here, no soldiers of the King had appeared, and, unchallenged, sin and Satan held the field; then one man arrived, and others quickly following, the standard of salvation, by faith in Jesus' death, was firmly planted. Opposition, too, soon came from high and low; rulers and ruled alike disliked the message, and would have none of it; but the truth, like its Lord, "passing through the midst of them, went his way." That way, like his, was a medical mission way, satisfying felt needs, while offering help for needs as yet unfelt.

HUNDREDS AND THOUSANDS OF MOSLEMS

have come since then, eager for medical assistance. Thus ear-gate has been stormed, and proud Mohammedans have gladly sat, patiently listening to the Gospel of Jesus Christ, to them a new, new story, though centuries older than the Islam they profess.

Thirty-two places and districts were represented in our consulting-room last month, for while great difficulties attend going to them, medicine attracts crowds as syrup attracts flies, and opens their hearts too. The woman who will not hear the Gospel at first, listens gladly after her sick child is healed; and a convert's wise advice to me was, "When your hand is upon them, then speak to them." When spoken to they admit they are sinners, that God is just, that they fear judgment to come, and if pressed as to their hope they say it is in the intercession of Mahomet, yet of this intercession they can bring no proofs, for there are none; and though they like it not, yet the Gospel, and the Gospel alone, suits their need. Much of the seed sown is lost to sight; it seems to die, but Jesus said "if it die, it beareth much fruit," and work for the same Master. Only let us not be weary in well doing. Indeed, we appeal against any going back in this good work, or even standing still. At present we are giving up an out-station at Mŏknene, in order to keep expenditure within a diminished income. This is sad, but debt is sadder still. "Why don't you come to see us?" say the poor Arabs. "We have no money for medicines or railway," we reply, and so this large district will be left at present without a single witness for Jesus, though it is within a week of London, though, through the medical mission, the door is widely open for Gospel effort, and though the qualified workers are standing waiting.

We look up wistfully for the signal "advance" once more, and doubt not that the Lord will say to those who are the channel of his help, "I was sick and ye visited Me. Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto Me."

Closed Nepaul!

WRITING from Sukhia Pokhri, Darjeeling, India, Mr. Innes-Wright, of the Nepaul Mission, says:—

"It is just three years since my wife and I began work in this little Himalayan village, close to the border of Nepaul. Our aim is to reach with the Gospel some of the 3,000,000 souls living within that as yet closed land.

"During the three years a large number of meetings have been held in the bazaar here, on neighbouring tea gardens, and while itinerating along and at times across the Nepaul frontier. Medical help, blessed to many, has been given in thousands of cases. We have been enabled to sell over 1,500 Gospels, printed in eight languages, besides giving a number away. Several thousands of Scripture cards in Nepauli, kindly got up by Mrs. Grimké for our use, have also been distributed.

"During the dry season we itinerate as much as possible, walking to various bazaars and villages by day, and camping at night in a tent.

"On one occasion we were on tour for three weeks, of which one week was spent in Nepaul. Rough mountain tracks are the only roads there. Our days were spent in climbing, preaching, and doing medical work; while at night lantern meetings with Scripture slides were held, attracting some who would not otherwise have heard the Gospel. Some of the lantern meetings were held in the open air, at a height of 10,000 feet above the sea, the screen being fixed against the end of a native house, and the audience, well wrapt up, sitting on the ground around me while I spoke.

"On our way home we climbed down into a large valley on the British side, where the people told us they had never seen a missionary before. We were well received and had some good times there, lifting up Christ to those who had never heard of his grace and power. The path at the mouth of that valley had been swept away, and at times we had to scramble along a narrow ledge, with a precipice below, where one false step would have meant death, but our feet were kept, and we reached home in a few days tired but safe.

"We need about £100 to put up a small hall and dispensary in Suhkia, where the people stand patiently at our open bazaar meetings, in spite of summer rains or winter cold."

A VILLAGE ADVENTURE.

Mr. Jai Bhai, of the Indian Christian Realm Mission, sends particulars of a tour into Nepaul by one of the workers, Mr. J. Prasad:—"At a village some twenty miles over the frontier Brother Prasad was talking to an interested group of villagers, some of whom were expressing astonishment at the story of Christ's life and death, when some people who had been to towns in British territory, interrupted the meeting by alleging that all Christians were of low caste, and lived bad lives. They finally succeeded in turning the villagers against our brother, and soon all joined in stoning him. He took refuge in the next village. Two men, suffering from colic and fever, asked for medicine. He gave it, asking God's blessing, and both speedily recovered. This news quickly spread. Many people came to hear our brother, and quite a number of sick people were cured. The men of the neighbouring village who had stoned him sent their head man to ask pardon, and finally came en masse for the same purpose. Many days were spent in teaching them of Jesus."

Aggressive Mohammedan Women.—Miss Read (of the North Africa Mission), writing from Cherchell, tells of meeting with several religious Mohammedan women, who try to convert the missionaries. In one case Miss Day asked whether they could promise her as a woman anything in the other life, and whether they themselves were sure of going to heaven. The answer was that, being married, their own entrance depended on the good will of their husbands; but that she, on the other hand, might enter if she believed in Mohammed—"rather a new version of their belief." When the speaker was confronted with Scriptural teaching, the majority of her companions seemed to turn against her, and changed the subject.

Rescue Work in France.

MANY English Christians visit fair, sunny France every year, and interest themselves much in what they see of work done for the Master. Evangelical work carried on in Paris is widely known, and often visited en passant.

There is, however, one phase of spiritual work in France which, I feel, has not yet obtained the attention its importance merits. I speak of Rescue Work among the unhappy girls drawn into the vortex of sin, so perilously near to them, at every step, among the working classes.

Outside of Catholic institutions, which are numerous, but which are conducted on very severe, almost prison-like lines, I know of but six Refuges in France; these are under Protestant direction, three of them have been founded by the Salvation Army—in Nimes, Neuilly, near Paris, and Lyons.

With the help of some devoted comrades, I have the care of this last. Lyons, the second city of France, a populous, thriving, commercial city, teems with shops, factories and workshops of all kinds; and in many of these, either the wages are very low, or the slack season so long, that they nullify ample pay. This means that a supplemental income must be found elsewhere, and too often the young ouvrières are persuaded to seek it on the streets. In other cases, of course, they are beguiled to this life, or escape to it from restraint and from work.

We have visited the streets, have spoken to many girls separately, and a little kindly interest is so unusual that there is small trouble in winning their confidence. So many of them are very young, almost children, several under our care in this Home being under sixteen or seventeen, who had already followed this sad way of life for two or three years.

We have a plain, large house just outside the city boundary and Octroi Station, with a large garden. We are well situated on the high ground of the peninsula formed by the Rhône and the Saône, a height very welcome during the foggy days of winter, which almost rival those of Father Thames. The garden yields abundant produce in summer time, and in warm weather visitors would find us with work-table and machine, and all our family outside under the trees, fabricating numerous dainty and useful garments.

I feel increasingly that effort is needed to awaken a stronger belief in the possibility of successfully rescuing these unhappy girls. When once that is created in the minds of thinking, benevolent people, there will be no lack of sympathy. French people are particularly appreciative of any effort to relieve suffering, where they believe in its practicability. In Paris, for instance, the authorities, and many people of all sorts of belief and non-belief, appreciate highly the Slum Work and Men's Shelter. I may say in passing that a shelter for women is shortly to be opened there.

In Lyons we long to begin work among the slums and back streets, but want of means and of workers holds us back. I think English Christians visiting this country could help to awake interest and hope for rescue work if they were more generally aware of what is being attempted, as they can speak to the value of such work at home. A passing visit would be very welcome; such hospitality as is ours to offer would be always ready, and both ourselves and our visitors would feel stronger and braver for a little communing.

Indian Famine Orphans.—The recent famine has left the Irish Presbyterian Mission in Gujarat face to face with the charge of nearly 1,600 children—in many cases terribly weakened and injured by the suffering they have undergone—who will require not only food, clothing, and shelter, but constant care and attention during the next few years. The buildings necessary to accommodate them will cost £1,000. Contributions in aid of this work may be sent to Mr. W. D. Eakin, 12, May Street, Belfast.

Brazilians and the Gospel.

IN a recent issue of "Help for Brazil," some encouraging reports are given of the work which is being maintained by missionaries in this part of the field. With regard to the services at Pernambuco, Mr. Telford writes: "I am glad to say they continue to be well attended. We are seeing many new faces, and this encourages us. The more we come into contact with the people, the more we are convinced that they have very little confidence in the priests. There is a young man coming regularly just now; his people are strong Romanists, and one sister has taken the veil. This youth, though very intelligent, is, in spiritual matters, very dark. He gazed at me in astonishment when, in answer to his questions, I said that I never lifted my hat when passing a church, nor even when the 'host' was being elevated, and that I would not adore a piece of the actual cross on which our Lord was crucified. It is declared that this cross has been found by the Romanists, and split up and divided among the churches! We might have a small plantation if all the pieces were brought together. Do pray for this young lad that his feet may be turned into the ways of righteousness. A lieutenant in the army has attended our services recently, and prayer has been asked that he may be led into the light. In conversing with me he spoke of being in this world just to do the best we could, and at the last day we should find out whether we were saved or not."

For the further development of the mission, Help for Brazil, many things are needed; but, above all, men filled with the spirit of God, thrilled with a love for the souls of men, are in urgent request. The hon. secretary is Mrs. R. R. Kalley, Campo Verde, Tipperlin Road, Edinburgh.

A Kurdish Sorrow.

A PITIFUL story of persecution and sorrow has just come from our correspondent in Oroomiah, Persia: "During my latest recent tour in Kurdistan, I was deeply touched by the condition of one of our Christian villages there. It was burned down by Kurds while I was in that region, and our people were scattered in caves and hiding places on the mountain. Hiding by day, they would venture out by night, and try to secure some food for their families. During the day they could see the Kurds come and cut and thresh out the wheat on which they depended for their winter supplies. I know of no more pitiful scene or needy condition than that of the poor Hassan people. Would it be possible to make an appeal, or secure any help for this village? Our station have urged me to do what I can, and I thought possibly you could call the attention of some to the need. We have a church there, and over sixty members. I fear many must starve this winter, and that they can never return unless some help is given them to rebuild and replant."

Any practical sympathy with these desolated Christian villagers would be at once forwarded by the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society.

Among Women Students in America.

A SPECIAL donation having opened the way in 1899 for the appointment of a second woman secretary to travel among the women students of Canada and the States, Mr. John R. Mott records with gratitude how God provided the right person for the work, and prayer on behalf of her efforts has been abundantly answered. In the midst of other work she has visited between eighty and ninety women's colleges and girls' seminaries, and has been the means in the hand of God of influencing not less than 120 young women to volunteer for foreign missions. During the year nearly 5,000 students—men and women—have been engaged in mission study classes, nearly one-fifth of whom were enrolled as the result of her efforts—the subjects of study being (1) China, (2) Lives of Eminent Missionaries, and (3) the Evangelization of the World in this Generation. In face of the facts that (1) one-half of the unevangelized are women and girls, (2) that women missionaries can best reach them, (3) that the supply of candidates falls short of the demand, and (4) that women have always shown themselves most responsive to the call of Christ—a longing desire is expressed for the appointment of yet another such secretary.

American Notes.

A DESPATCH from Wichita, Kansas, describes how Mrs. Carrie Nation, the president of the Barber County W.C.T.U., is carrying on a Prohibition campaign in that town. Last Thursday she entered the saloon connected with the Hotel Carey, and destroyed property to the value of nearly 2,000 dols. by throwing stones and billiard balls about the place. The previous evening she had visited every one of the sixteen saloons in the town, and given the proprietors warning to close up. They all laughed at her, although all were running in open violation of the law, and are only allowed to remain open by paying monthly fines.

Taken into custody, she sent a note asking the Governor of the State to aid her, but he did not answer the appeal. Later in the day a warrant was sworn, charging her with destruction of property, and she went to jail at her own request, refusing to accept bail. She says that there is no law by which she can be punished, because these places have no right to protection, being run in violation of State law. It seems that two months ago she raided two saloons in Kiowa, without punishment.

A late despatch from Wichita says that the jail in which Mrs. Nation is confined has been quarantined on account of smallpox, with the result that no prisoners will be allowed to enter or leave the jail, and that the Federal and District Courts, which were to open next Monday, are compelled to postpone all trials till April. Mrs. Nation, in an appeal to women everywhere to aid in the crusade against saloons, says:

I can stay in jail and eat my bread and gravy in a tin pan and with a spoon. I can stay here and be quarantined from seeing any friends. I can sleep on a bed without a pillow and take the fare of the poor criminals and feel this a small sacrifice. Can you not do something? Take your consecrated rocks, hatchets, and brickbats, and anything that comes handy, and you can clean this curse out. Don't wait for the ballot. I have exhausted every ordinary means, and looked into the faces of mothers, wives, and daughters, who were broken-hearted, till I have become almost desperate, and I am doing the best I can, the worst I can, and all I can, and expect to continue, if it ends at the stake. I expect to lay my ashes here, even if my body shall be cremated by the whisky element.

While this lady is waging war on the liquor men in this way, we are informed that at Chattanooga, Tennessee, 100 saloon-keepers applied to the pastor of a new Methodist Church in that city for front seats at the auditorium where the dedicatory services were to be held. It is stated that this action was taken to show the pastor that these members of the congregation were not afraid of him, as also that they intended to contribute 700 dols. to pay off the remaining debt on the building.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey conducted a service last Sunday morning in the Tombs Prison in this city. A small organ was placed on the second tier for his use. Of the congregation of about 250 persons only about half a dozen were in sight. They remained silent behind the doors of their cells, and only manifested their presence and pleasure by applause, at the end of each hymn. Mr. Munro, the chaplain of the prison, had the meeting opened by music from a cornetist and violinist, who played several well-known hymn tunes. After Mr. Munro had read from the Scriptures and offered prayer, Mr. Sankey sang, "Throw out the Life Line." He also gave a few anecdotes of his work with Mr. Moody, and sang a Scotch song in a way that brought forth long applause from his hidden auditors. Then he gave a little gospel talk, and finished by a short prayer.

Governor Roosevelt, of this State, the Vice-President elect of the United States, delivered an excellent address on Sunday afternoon to a mass meeting of young men, convened by the Y.M.C.A. The speech was unique in this respect, that it was delivered at the same hour all over the country where the Association has branches. Copies of it had been secured in advance, and sent to the local secretaries, who caused them to be read at the appointed time.

The Marias of Bastor.—More than once attention has been called to the cause of the aborigines of Bastor and the Nizam Dominions. Rev. C. B. Ward, writing from Yellandu, says:—"God has wonderfully helped us to establish two mission stations on the threshold of the two main sections of the Kai, at Yellandu and Jagdalpur. We now have churches, orphanages, property, and a good work at each place. The Maria section of this people occupy Northern Bastor, among the almost inaccessible hills and forests. They number 100,000, the wildest, rudest people yet unreached in India. Not the least missionary work has ever yet been done for or among them. I am praying that two missionaries—one a doctor—may be sent to the Marias, also that God will raise up friends to support them for a few years. We have the house for the missionaries, helpers for them, and can find a way to get them here." Mr. Ward may be addressed—Yellandu, India.

The late Rev. C. S. Thompson,

C.M.S. MISSIONARY, INDIA.

DURING recent years we have heard many harrowing accounts of the misery caused by famine and sickness in India. That the hearts of many have been touched by these sad stories has been amply proved by the liberal answers made to the appeals for help; and those who have helped so liberally will probably understand in some measure the heavy strain that has been put upon those who have relieved the sufferers, and realize how, especially where cholera has to be contended with as well as starvation, all considerations of self have in such circumstances to be laid aside. Many have devoted their lives entirely to the saving of the sick and the starving, whose names will never appear in this world's records, but who have been more than content to work on for years, waiting for the Master's "Well done!" when their work is over.

Such a man was Rev. Charles Stuart Thompson, of the Church Missionary Society—the pioneer Bhil missionary, who, while devoting himself to relieving the cholera that was raging all round him, fell a victim to it, and passed away, alone, by the roadside on May 19 last. Mr. Thompson went out to India in the end of 1880, and, although assisted at different times, may be said to have carried on almost single-handed, for fifteen years, the work of opening up the Bhil country. He spent the greater part of his time moving about amongst those wild hill-men, relieving the sick and helping the needy, and inspiring them with such confidence in himself that he eventually secured a welcome wherever he went. He built small dispensaries, schools, and rest-houses, but when not within reach of any of these he would sleep under a tree or in a native hut, and content himself with any food that the natives gave him.

Such a life of constant self-denial, naturally, told at last upon his health, and he came home to England in the spring of 1896, completely broken down. He returned to India in November, 1899, full of enthusiasm at the prospect of resuming his much-loved work, and he set himself at once to organize means for relieving the terrible suffering in his district. But in six months God called him home in the very midst of his work. He was seized with cholera in the night, and at three o'clock on the Saturday morning bearers started, bearing him in the direction of Kherwara, the station of his colleague, Mr. Outram, who reinforced the mission while Mr. Thompson was at home. But as the disease grew worse, Mr. Thompson signed to his bearers to stop under a big tree, and there he passed away peacefully at noon. He was too weak to do anything but send loving salutations to all. A messenger was sent to tell Mr. Outram of Mr. Thompson's seizure, but the distance was great, and he did not reach Kherwara till evening. Mr. Outram started at once, and after a long ride, through the night, he met the sad procession bearing Mr. Thompson's body. A grave had to be dug there at once, and the departed one was laid to rest at break of day.

That is all that is known of the last hours of this servant of God. He had lived much alone with God, and he died alone with God. A grand ending to a grand life! Those who heard the few details could not, perhaps, restrain a feeling of pity, to think of the unrelieved agony of that day—but their eyes were holden; they were restrained by the conviction that the Angel of the Lord encamps round about them that fear Him, to deliver them.

The Allahabad Corresponding Committee of the Church Missionary Society are contemplating some memorial of the life and work of Mr. Thompson—to be for the welfare of the Bhils. This memorial will probably take the form of an orphanage building for the little waifs and strays rescued by the Mission during the present famine. Some of Mr. Thompson's friends, who realize what a grand work he has begun, have expressed their desire to help with such a memorial, and it is thought that others also, although not personally acquainted with Mr. Thompson, may feel drawn to show their appreciation of his self-denying labours by joining in this effort to perpetuate his memory, and to help on that work for which he gave his life. Rev. C. H. Gill, the C.M.S. secretary in Allahabad, will gladly receive contributions.

The Morning Star.

"Until the day dawn, and the daystar arise."

THE desert sands with dewdrops glisten bright,
And mirror back to heaven the starry way;
A roseate streak proclaims the coming day,
And footfalls break the silence of the night.
Expectant crowds press on, with scarce a sigh,
Through columned avenue and pillared hall,
Intent to hail the flash on burnished wall,
Within the shrine, which tells the god is nigh.
The daystar rises, and with level ray
From out the eastern sky illumes the nave.
A mighty shout! Behold the god is come!
Thus heathen rites.—Shall we not wait thy day,
O Christ? The night is dark. 'Tis thine to save,
In morning watch; and take thy ransomed home.

Midnight Meeting Movement.—The New Year's gathering of voluntary workers was held at Exeter Hall last week under the presidency of Mr. T. J. Drysdale. A goodly number of friends assembled, from all parts of the metropolitan area, and, in the unavoidable absence of Mr. R. C. Morgan, an address was delivered by Mr. Barry Wake.

"A Converted Christian."

"YES, ma'am, he is a converted Christian, that's what he is."

The little maiden beamed at me as she gave this description of the relative who had befriended her—a poor, motherless girl—in her need. From all I heard of Mr. ——, I quite believe that her high opinion of him was justified, and that he was a truly God-fearing and consistent man. But, quite apart from the person described, the description remained in my memory—"A converted Christian."

She only meant to state, in an emphatic manner, that he was a believer in Jesus. She did not know, poor child, that if he were a Christian at all he had been converted to God. The words, so familiar to us, were unfamiliar to her—"Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. xviii. 3). And so she unconsciously gave a duplicate certificate to the Christianity of her kind friend.

Musing upon the matter, I have been wishing, however, that even amongst Christians there might be more of those who could be correctly and literally described as "converted" Christians! Is there not sore need to-day that some of our critical, censorious church members should be converted into imitators of the meek and lowly Christ?

If some, of whom we dare to hope and believe that they are Christians at heart, would only by lip and life testify to all the world that they are not only Christians by profession, but also wholly Christ's, by loyal and glad surrender—oh, what a welcome wave of "conversion" that would be!

If the worldly, world-loving adherents to the Christian creed might be "converted" into self-denying bearers of Jesus' cross, making it their palpable life-ambition to be "well-pleasing unto God," even if this involved a "going forth to Him without the camp"—how great the change would be, and how welcome! Many are thinking much, and joyously, of the coming Simultaneous Mission, and are rightly hoping great things, assured that God is able to do, and purposed to do, for us again, as of yore, "exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think." Yes, and yes.

But, oh, if as well, there might be, as this fast-receding century ebbs away, a deep, wide-spread awakening—"simultaneous, if you will"—amongst the children of God, with the result of tens of thousands of "converted Christians," we would feel no anxiety whatever as to the Simultaneous Mission; the blessing would be at once assured! The world, lying in the wicked one, is hardly more in need of revival than are those who, having a name to live, are giving no perceptible signs of life. The world would soon enough discover a change if "converted Christians" became more general, and would ask the reason of that change.

If all who "name the Name" would also "live the life of Jesus," and show the Spirit of Jesus, loving one another, as He gave commandment, and desperately in earnest to win the perishing ones and the lingerers outside, who can estimate what the result would be? "By this shall all men know, . . . if ye have love one to another," was our Saviour's own prescription for the world's enlightenment. Has the test been really made? Shall we not, with one consent, make it now, beginning with ourselves, and becoming, in deed and in truth, "converted" Christians?

SUNDAY, January 20. Ezekiel xvii.

IN this chapter the prophet describes, under the form of a parable, events shortly to happen to the royal house. Nebuchadnezzar is represented as an eagle, removing the highest branch of the cedar, which, of course, stands for Jehoiachin, whom he carried to Babylon—the land of traffic, the city of merchants. In his stead a seed, Zedekiah, is planted, who becomes, not an erect cedar, but a dependent, creeping vine (3-6). Then another eagle is introduced, Pharaoh-Hophra, the King of Egypt, who attracts to himself the roots and branches of the vine, and because of this it is adjudged to destruction.

There is a lesson for us all here. In graphic words the prophet depicts the withering process which shall ensue, as soon as the roots draw out of their natural direction, towards the strong magnet of Egypt's might. We are all exposed to a similar temptation, to turn aside from the only source of fertility and freshness to the mighty forces of this world, to rely on human foresight and energy. Take care, my soul, lest thy roots and thy branches turn aside from God to Egyptian sources of reliance. Get away to some quiet loch, and there adjust thy instruments by the points of the compass, that thou mayest know how far they may be affected by the masses of iron around and within thee, so as to be able to reckon for them.

But in spite of the shortcomings of his people, God would not forsake them. Jehovah would plant the topmost branch of the cedar (22, 23), so that it would become a great tree, to which all fowl of every wing should gather. This can be none other than our Blessed Lord, into whose loving care all fowl of every wing are being gathered. Whatever be your power of flight—the sustained wing of the eagle, or the soon-exhausted wing of the sparrow—see that you hide in his shadow with great delight.

A notable chapter is this. There were some who accused God of injustice in punishing innocent children for their father's transgressions; the prophet, therefore, makes it clear that every individual shall be held responsible for his own conduct, because all souls were God's (v. 4). Yes, all souls belong to God by right of creation, and because Jesus made propitiation for the sins of the whole world.

What a wonderful conception! We think of the vast multitudes of the human family that have covered our globe, back to the early dawn of history, the myriads that built the Pyramids, the successive cities on the site of Nineveh and Babylon, the teeming masses of human beings of China and India; but not one of them, not the most wretched and degraded, not the smallest and shortest-lived, that is not included in the circumference of these mighty words.

And as we lay emphasis on that present tense, and read, "All souls are mine," and couple with it the Saviour's words, "God is not God of the dead, but of the living," we are compelled to remember that all the generations which have stormed across this earth of ours are living yet. To use the words of another—Somewhere, at this very instant, they now verily are. Men say, they were, they have been, but there are no have beens. To be is eternal being.

The prophet traces the course of a family through three generations (3, 10, 14); and insists that each man has to give an account of himself before God; though, of course, he would admit, of which there are innumerable evidences, that each of us is greatly helped or hindered by the lives of those whose blood flows in our veins.

This is a dirge, in very figurative language, of two kings of the house of Judah, Jehoahaz and Jehoiachin, who, like wild beasts, had been carried into captivity, the former to Egypt, the second by the Chaldeans (1-9). We have then a description of the whole royal family, depicted as a wasted vine, cast down to the ground, her fruit dried up by the east wind.

Of how many a Christian Church this description holds good! God's ideal is that she should be planted by the waters, and be fruitful and full of branches, by reason of many waters; but how often it is true that an east wind has dried up her fruit—the east wind of jealousy, of pride, or of worldliness! It is very sad, especially as we contemplate the awful need of the world. It is as true as it was in the days of John the Divine, that it lieth in the wicked one. There are still 900,000,000 of unevangelized heathen, and in our great cities it is said that seven out of ten never enter a place of worship. Ignorance of God's Word, and contempt of its solemn teachings, are increasingly prevalent. The Sabbath is becoming a day of amusement and dissipation. Our national drink bill last year amounted to 162 millions, about the amount which it is estimated that our African war will cost, whilst half a million of our people are habitual drunkards. If there ever was a time when the Church of Christ should be a strong rod for a sceptre to rule, it is the present. But in answer to prayer God will surely visit us, and it becomes all the children of God, in every place, to unite in prayer that this may be a season of great revival and quickened life to all the Church. We desire the revival of the Church, which will guarantee a perpetual work of grace to the world at large.

WEDNESDAY, January 23. Ezekiel xx.

A year had passed from the conclusion of the previous chapter, and the prophet commences a new series of prophecies. It was the seventh year of Jehoiachin's captivity. Some of the Jewish elders had come to inquire God's will and purpose. But the Divine oracle was dumb. "As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be inquired of by you." Instead of a favourable response, the prophet was commanded to answer them in words of judgment (4). If we regard iniquity in our hearts, God cannot hear our prayer. As long as Saul practised witchcraft, God answered him not, "neither by prophets nor by dreams." Before our craft can glide across the waters, it is absolutely necessary to haul in the anchor that grapples the shore.

There are many interesting touches here. That God made Himself known to his people in the land of Egypt (5); that He espied out Canaan for them, "which is the glory of all lands" (6); that the Sabbath was intended for a sign (12); that the wilderness wanderings were marred by many sins besides those recounted in the Book of Numbers (16); that as the people would not have life, God was forced to give them up to the death which they had chosen for themselves (25). But perhaps the most interesting is the recurrence of that phrase, "I wrought for my Name's sake," (9, 14, 22, 44). What a plea this is with God, when all other arguments fail. "We are unworthy, and have no claim on Thee, but remember thine own character, thy covenant, thy reputation, amid the nations of the world. Vindicate Thyself. Let men know that Thou art the Lord."

How often has the thought expressed in verse 32 come into the heart of men, who have borne the name of Christ, but have been caught in the snare of some unholy fascination: Why can we not live as we like, and do as the heathen, that give themselves up to lust and sin, without the grave consequences which are threatened to us? Ah, but that shall not be at all. The former relationship in which we walked with God counts for something. The other party to it has a right to speak. A wife cannot do as the unmarried.

In the Hebrew Bible the twentieth chapter ends with verse 44, which is a better arrangement than that of the English version, as the remaining verses of that chapter belong to the subject of this, and the whole describe the destruction which was impending over Jerusalem, first, under the image of a flaming flame that could not be quenched (45-49), and secondly, because the people derided the prophet as speaking parables (49) under the figure of a sharpened and glittering sword (1-17), which would contemn the rod or sceptre of the reigning house of Judah (10).

It is explained afterwards (18 and onwards) that this sword was the King of Babylon, who is depicted as standing where two ways meet, the one to Rabbah, and the other to Jerusalem. Shall he march to this on the left, or that on the right? In order to test the guidance of his god, he shakes out of his quiver arrows previously marked with the name of the cities, taking the first that falls as decisive. It was also a habit among Romans, as well as Orientals, to examine the liver of a sacrifice, to obtain direction.

The royal family had broken their royal covenant and bond, and had thus exposed themselves to retribution (2 Chron. xxxvi. 13; Jer. lii. 2). The mitre of the High Priest and the crown of the King were alike to cease (26). The whole land was to be overturned. There have never been more widespread and terrible wars than those which desolated the world during the 500 years which preceded the coming of the Saviour. And the unsettled condition of the world to-day surely portends another advent of Him who went away to receive a kingdom for Himself, but who told us He would return.

It is a terrible thing to read this chapter, and to trace an exact resemblance between the sins enumerated by the prophet and those with which we are familiar in many of the great cities of our empire. Indeed there are forms of sin amongst us in excess of those charged against Jerusalem, Notice the emphasis laid on the words, In thee (7, 9, &c.). These sins were committed in Jerusalem, which God had chosen, and had favoured with the highest privileges. But even Zion had not such privileges as have been the lot of London.

It is impossible that our nation should be spared from heavy calamities, unless there be a change for the better in our national spirit and manners. We shall no longer be fit to be God's messenger of life and blessing to the world, unless our filthiness is consumed out of us (15).

In Jerusalem, the prophets, priests, and princes were specially reprehensible; because they were the leaders in the national apostasy, their retribution was to be proportioned to their opportunities (23-31). We have amongst us many godly men, who sigh and cry for the abominations that are being wrought among us; may God increase their number, and raise up specially in our Colleges and Divinity Halls a godly succession. God is ever seeking men to stand in the gap, as Moses did (30; Psa. cvi. 23).

This is a terrible chapter, in which the faithlessness of Israel to God is depicted under the most repulsive figures. The sins of the ten tribes are depicted first (5-10), then those of Judah, which were even greater (11-21). Her penalty is set out in full detail (22-35); and a tribunal is opened, in which first her accusation and then her penalty are declared.

We are each tempted to similar faithlessness to our God. There is no sin under which others have fallen, of which we are not conscious that the germs are within our own hearts. That was a striking illustration which one used recently, who said that in his dream he saw steps up to heaven, which he was permitted to climb, on the condition of writing with chalk the record of his sins on each step as he reached it. At each ascent he was aware that the tale grew bigger, and ere long he was compelled to descend for more chalk. So the consciousness of sin grows on us. The more our ear becomes attuned to the eternal harmonies, the quicker we are to detect our own discords, or the discord of others, in speech and act.

But God has purposed to make our lewdness cease, so that we shall not remember it any more. Let us allow the blessed process, wrought within us by the Holy Ghost, to go deeper and deeper within our nature; cleansing us throughout, that we may not have to pass through such purgations of sufferings as were the lot, and are still the lot, of the chosen people. But one or the other it must be. God loves us too well to leave us uncleansed.

"I only Live to Preach."

Rev. DINSDALE T. YOUNG, WESLEYAN MINISTER.

AMONG the many ministers of individuality and power in the Wesleyan Church, a place of honour must be assigned to the worker whose portrait accompanies these lines.

Dinsdale T. Young is a Northumbrian by birth. Born at Corbridge-on-Tyne, he spent most of his youth at Malton, in Yorkshire, to which place his father had removed. His father was Dr. William Young, who for twenty years was Medical Officer of Health for Malton District. Dr. Young was a singularly cultured and godly man, and was greatly respected throughout the country where he resided, Mr. Young thus characterizes his parents, in dedicating to their memory one of his books: "Their winsome spirituality, their intellectual cultivation, and their self-sacrificing devotion to the Methodist Church, are among my highest and most powerful inspirations."

Mr. Dinsdale Young was probably almost the youngest candidate for the Wesleyan ministry ever received in that Church. He began to preach before he was fifteen years of age, and was accepted for the ministry (in 1879), when he was three months short of eighteen. He was placed on the "President's List" in 1879, and went to labour in Gateshead (Bensham Road), where he remained for nine months. The chapels were filled to overflowing, and numerous conversions took place. Some of the devoted Church workers in that district to-day were brought to God under Mr. Young's ministry then. He went subsequently as a student to Headingley Wesleyan College, Leeds. Whilst there he preached and lectured on every available day. The Governor of the College allowed him to make his own arrangements for Sunday preaching appointments, so numerous were the calls for his services. In two years he only received four ordinary students' appointments, all the other Sundays being filled up by special arrangements.

All through the college vacations he preached and lectured, literally almost daily, in the villages, especially of the Northern counties.

In 1883 Mr. Young was sent by the President of the Conference to London (Highgate), where he laboured for nearly four years as pastor of Hornsey Wesleyan Church. He was the first minister appointed by the Conference to that charge. During his term of ministry a new chapel was erected, and great prosperity was experienced. His subsequent spheres of labour have been—Birmingham (Islington), where great congregations were gathered, and much spiritual blessing realised; York (Centenary), where the crowds that gathered Sunday by Sunday were phenomenal, and where conversions were frequent; and Manchester (Gravel Lane), where by special permission of Conference Mr. Young remained five years, and where again, crowded congregations and general blessing were witnessed. A notable feature of his ministry there was his week-evening service. He preached in that central chapel every Thursday night. People of all denominations attended the service.

In 1898, Mr. Young returned to London, and became superintendent of Bayswater Circuit, and minister of Denbigh Road Chapel, Westbourne Grove, W., the chapel of which Dr. Morley Punshon was the first minister. Every Sunday evening and every Thursday evening Mr. Young occupies that pulpit. The chapel is always full, and often crowded on Sunday evenings; and he has an excellent week-evening congregation. A special feature of his ministry is his monthly sermons to young men and women. During recent months he has been giving a course on Christian doctrine, and great interest has been aroused.

In the early days of the week, Mr. Young travels all over the kingdom, preaching and lecturing. Only great physical strength could enable him to discharge this heavy service in addition to his pastoral work. His correspondence is heavy, and he contributes frequently to the religious press. He has published two books, in addition to a large number of scattered articles. One is a little volume for young workers, entitled, "Girding on the Armour: Letters to a Young Preacher." It is now out of print. The other is a series of sermons, and is entitled "Unfamiliar Texts" (Hodder & Stoughton). This is no mere product of eccentricity or homiletical gymnastics, but the outcome of fruitful study along the very attractive by-ways of Scripture story.

Rev. DINSDALE T. YOUNG.

Mr. Young often lends a hand in the larger Christian cause—preaching and lecturing for other churches. He has frequently occupied Dr. Parker's pulpit at the City Temple. The meaning of his activity is found in the fact that preaching is his delight. He expresses his feeling in one of his books, when he says, "I only live to preach. I work at it by day, and dream about it at night. It is my labour and my recreation; my duty and my delight; my battle and my song."

Mr. Young has accepted an invitation to become the minister of Nicholson Square Church, Edinburgh, in 1901, on the completion of his term at Bayswater.

The Royal Sailors' Rests.—Miss Agnes Weston's latest booklet, "Say au revoir but not good-bye," is chastely designed and admirably produced. While so much attention is being directed to the Navy in operation, the doings of Jack ashore, as detailed and illustrated in this attractive brochure, will be followed with peculiar interest, and the simple yarns of thrilling experiences related by members of the Naval Brigade, will recall the perilous days in which the "Handy Man" established his fame.

Notes on the London Simultaneous Mission.

THE All-Day Prayer Meeting at the Queen's Hall, on Monday, January 21, from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. will be one of the most remarkable gatherings for a generation. The leading Free Church ministers will preside for an hour each, and two hours will be devoted to Rev. John McNeill, at 4 and 7.

In connection with this All-Day of Prayer it is pleasant to notice that the Rev. F. S. Webster, being the incumbent of the nearest church of the Establishment (All Souls', Langham Place), has been invited to utter words of God-speed and good-will during the first hour.

We understand that the task of the marshalling this meeting has been kindly undertaken by Mr. Wild, Y.M.C.A., Bayswater. He will be assisted by about forty ladies and gentlemen.

We are glad to see that Rev. John McNeill is taking noon-services at the City Temple, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday, January 22, 23, 25. This is in addition to his great evening services at Mr. Charrington's, the Shoreditch Tabernacle, Metropolitan Tabernacle, and Westminster Chapel.

The Lord Mayor and Sheriffs have signified their intention to be present at the noon service, at the Guildhall, on January 28.

We understand that Rev. F. B. Meyer has convened a meeting of missioners at Exeter Hall, on Saturday, January 26, for final prayer and conference, as a fitting inauguration of the Mission. He has also issued a letter to all the Free Church ministers of London, asking them to be ready to carry on services in their own places of worship, directly the Mission is closed, wherever the evident blessing of God and the interest of the crowds shall show that this is desirable.

It is hoped that in many cases the week of arranged meetings may lead to a great manifestation of God's Spirit, that will demand further development on the part of ministers and congregations. Mr. Meyer has expressed the hope that the blessing may be so great as to affect the Evangelical clergy of the Church of England, so that they may open their churches, and that the week of mission may be the precursor of widespread awakening and revival.

Protestant Reformation Society.

CHEERING reports are to hand from several of the society's mission stations. At Bristol Mr. Charles Tucker regularly visits the workhouse, and is warmly received by the inmates. Large quantities of Protestant literature are distributed, not only at the people's houses, but in the large factories with which Bristol and district abounds. The visitation work amongst Roman Catholics is steadily carried on under the direction of Rev. C. Neep and other clergy.

The mission at Weston-super-Mare continues to prosper in the hands of Mr. H. Wolstenholme. Amongst the efforts made recently were a series of lantern lectures, at which "The Life of John Wickliffe," "The Life of Martin Luther," "The Power of the Popes in the Middle Ages," and similar topics have been treated. Another useful endeavour is the Protestant Educational Class for young people, which has been well attended. The Men's Sunday Morning Class is one of the largest in the western counties, while the Sunday evening evangelistic services are full to overflowing.

The society's mission at Mayfield is largely carried on amidst a scattered rural population. Good work is done by visiting the people in their own homes. Gospel services are held in outlying mission stations, and one notable feature of the work is an educational class and club for the lads of the villages round about.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—III.

THE FALL.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IT has been alleged that this word, by which the sin of our first parents is generally known, is not a Scriptural one, and it has even been suggested that such sin was a necessary stage in the process of upward development. This is not, however, the way in which the Apostle, under the guidance of the Spirit of God, regards it, and in one passage he distinctly employs the word which modern theologians disown: "The woman being beguiled hath fallen into transgression" (1 Tim. ii. 14, R.V.).

Adam was the son of God by his original creation (Luke iii. 38), and was made in the image of God* (Gen. i. 27). There has been much discussion as to the real significance of this phrase, but the most reliable thinkers seem fairly agreed that it stands for man's moral nature, his power to distinguish between right and wrong; that he is moral, self-conscious, and self-acting; that he can choose right and refuse wrong, or the reverse. "God, the Archetype of all Personality, supremely self-conscious, self-acting, moral, has made man to be, 'the image of his own peculiar nature.'"†

At first man was innocent, he knew not evil. Evil was already in the universe (1 John iii. 8), but as yet it had not come nigh him. And it was not necessary for his perfect development that he should know it by yielding to it; since a truer knowledge of evil is acquired by resisting than by yielding; even as our Lord, in his human nature, became acquainted with the force and fascination of temptation by his perfect and unfaltering resistance (Heb. ii. 18). Man's original condition, therefore, was "very good"; there was no bias towards evil; he was made "upright," so as to have unbroken and face-to-face fellowship with his Almighty Friend; there was perfect harmony between himself and himself, between himself and God, between himself and his pleasant environment in the garden, and between himself and his fair consort (Gen. i. 31; Eccl. vii. 29).

We are not called to discuss here the origin of moral evil. That it originated beyond the confines of our planet, is certain. "Sin entered into the world" (Rom. v. 12)—a phrase which would not be appropriate, unless it had been pre-existent. Before our first parents fell, angels had failed to keep their first estate (Jude 6). Through the prince of fallen spirits the suggestion of evil was first brought to the ear and heart of the newly-made beings, who were so peculiarly dear to the Creator, and who, perhaps, had been created to take up that supremacy and vicegerency of the lower orders of being which "the prince of this world" had forfeited (Gen. i. 28; John xvi. 11). We are told, therefore, that the Serpent beguiled Eve in his craftiness, i.e., seduced her from her purity and simplicity (2 Cor. xi. 3).

The permission of the Temptation, with its awful liability, and with the certainty, foreseen and prepared for from before the foundation of the world (1 Peter i. 20) that man would succumb to it, is an insoluble problem, which has tasked the supreme intellects of our race. Probably there was no way of making a moral nature, which would choose God for Himself, apart from the liability, and almost the certainty, of refusing Him;—imposing on God the necessity of redeeming the soul from the power of its corruption, and alluring it back to the right exercise of its Godlike prerogative. This only must always be borne in mind, that sin is our own act and deed. Each individual must in turn appropriate the words of the patriarch, "I have sinned, and perverted that which was right" (Job xxxiii. 27); and those of the Psalmist, "Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done that which is evil in thy sight" (Psa. li. 4).

The first sin was an act of disobedience. "Through one man's disobedience . . ." (Rom. v. 19). Disobedience implies a command, and the commandment was a very explicit and simple one: "The Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden, thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it" (Gen. ii. 16, 17). This prohibition was clearly apprehended by Adam and his wife; indeed, she was inclined to increase its stringency, as when she said: "God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die" (Gen. iii. 3).

Thus, to use the Apostle's words, "The law entered" (Rom. v. 20). It was necessary that the law should enter, in however elementary and simple a form, else man might have glided into a life of self-pleasing and self-indulgence without realizing its essential sinfulness and harm. It was natural for him to desire what was good and pleasant. These instincts were implanted for human happiness and perpetuation; but men might, almost unconsciously, have fallen into the habit of using the world around for the lowest of all purposes, mere animal gratification; with no knowledge that their life was low. They would have sunk ever lower, with no knowledge of the reasons why the garden was becoming a wilderness, why the flowers and fruits were being replaced by thorns and thistles, or why pain and sorrow, alienation and death, were overshadowing their once happy lives. It was necessary that law should enter, first, to check self-indulgence in its earliest suggestion; and next, if the due limit was overpassed, to reveal to man his sin; just as a rock, jutting from the surface of the limpid water, reveals, by the slight ripple at its base, in which direction the water is travelling.

From that day the law has ever been more and more enlarged, to reveal to man the life which God is ever living, and for which man was created. Moses brought a wider law, without which man would have gone on practising many things which were evil and hurtful, without realizing their true nature; for, until the law, sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed when there is no law (Rom. v. 13).

The Son of God revealed a still wider law. He did not hesitate to say: Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time . . . but I say unto you (Matt. v. 27, 31, 38, 43). Under the former dispensation, it had been wrong to do wrong; henceforth it was wrong not to do right (Matt. xxv. 45). It was not enough to say, "I am not an extortioner nor unjust; I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess." The only answer was his insistence on the words, "Thou shalt love." And perhaps, as the centuries have passed, the full meaning of the law of love has been increasingly revealed to the Church; and it is a common experience, in the individual life at least, to find something becoming sin, which once seemed absolutely innocent. This is what the Apostle means when he says, "I was alive apart from law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived and I died" (Rom. vii. 9). This, then, has been the office of law ever since: first, to check the commission of what would be hurtful and evil; and, secondly, to show its exceeding sinfulness, in case it has been committed.

In the case of our first parents, the law indicated an act which would be a sin, dishonouring to God, fatal to the former blessed holy relationship and union, and inimical to the best interests of man. Now, contending claims arose, and strove for mastery. On the one hand self was clamorous for its pleasure. Was not the tree good for food, and a delight to the eyes, and desirable to make wise (Gen. iii. 6)? "Good," and "pleasant," and "desirable"—have not those words been the current coin of selfishness in all ages? On the other hand, conscience, gratitude, the fear of the consequences which had been prognosticated, arose, and pressed on the judgment and specially on the will. It was an awful moment, pregnant with a long entail for the race, a moment, which has endless repetitions in human hearts; but finally desire became stronger than conscience, passion overwhelmed judgment, the inclination for self-gratification overbore the will, and man deliberately chose self rather than God. He "worshipped and served the creature rather than the Creator, who is blessed for ever" (Rom. i. 25). That was the Fall.

The Fall is essentially the assertion of the self-life, the ego, the will of the creature, against and above the will and law of God. Because I like, and covet, and deem that I shall derive pleasure from, certain objects that appeal to the senses and appetites, I deliberately choose the present instead of the future, the transient instead of the eternal, the material instead of the spiritual, the human instead of the divine. Sin is egotism, the assertion of self, the choice of man's own will and way. The Apostle describes it as "the mind of the flesh" (Rom. viii. 6); and still further defines the flesh as being the assertion of me:—"In me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing" (Rom. vii. 18).

In the Fall, the centre or pivot of man's being was shifted from Love, the not-I, to Self, the I; and instantly Paradise began to fade into the wilderness; a blight came over the fair beauty of the world; the animals broke into rebellion; the light toils of Eden were exchanged for the sweat of the brow; sorrow, travail, death, began to exact their heavy toll; while there was misunderstanding between Adam and his wife, alienation between them both and God (Gen. iii. 8-24).

The essence of redemption, therefore, does not consist in forgiveness, or deliverance from the penalty which we have undoubtedly deserved; but in the reversal of man's fatal choice, so that we may love God with all our heart and soul and mind and strength, and our neighbour as ourselves; so that we may not live to ourselves, but to Him who loved us and gave Himself for us; and so that loving Him we may become centred in the life of love, which He is ever living in the glory of Heaven. This is the perfecting of redemption; Heaven is absolute unselfishness; not the sacrifice of personality—for we shall each retain this for ever; Isaiah will always differ from Jeremiah, and Peter from

John—but the elimination of the evil selfish principle, which has been the cause and source of all our undoing.

The fall of Adam involved all his descendants in its consequences. He was the head and representative of the race. The human family stands in its father: the tree in its seed: the body in its head: and therefore the results of his sin have affected the whole of his children. There is not one unit or fragment of the entire family, whether dying within an hour of birth, or clouded with imbecility, or removed to the furthest extreme of time, on whom the consequences of that first sin have not fallen to some extent. Even the one sinless Man, who knew no sin, was wearied with his journeyings, and sighed in the sorrow of his stainless heart—and all because He was in the line of Adam's race (Matt. i. 1-16).

The unity of the race is recognised by even those modern thinkers who vaunt their independence of the statements of Scripture, and discourse learnedly of "the solidarity of mankind." It is, also, strongly insisted on as fundamental by the Apostle, to whom, under the teaching of the Holy Spirit, we owe so much of our insight into the mysteries of God. He tells us, for instance, that Adam was the figure of Christ, and as the Son of Man represents the race in one manner, so the first man must have done in another (Rom. v. 14). He tells us that when, through one man, sin entered into the world, "all sinned" (Rom. v. 12, R.V.), an expression which points to a definite past act, which could only be true if the race were represented in the definite past act of Adam, referred to in the words immediately preceding. He tells us, also, that by the trespass of the one, death reigned through the one, that through the one man's disobedience the many were made sinners, and that through one trespass, the judgment came unto all men to condemnation (Rom. v. 17, 18, 19); and it is impossible to read these words without being convinced of the truth with which they are weighted: that there is not only a physical but a moral unity subsisting between Adam and his descendants, in virtue of which the first trespass of the one has sent its baneful influences and results forward to the furthest extremities of the whole race.

These baneful results may be divided into two: first, as to our guilt; and, secondly, as to our hereditary bias and predisposition to sin. There are others of which it would be impossible to treat within the limits that our space naturally assigns.

First, as to the guilt which is universally imputed from Adam's sin. That guilt is proved by the incidence of death on all men. "By the trespass of the one, the many died; Death passed unto all men; Death reigned from Adam to Moses" (Rom. v. 12, 14, 15). And we may add that every bead-drop of perspiration which stands on the brow, every weed which breaks the surface of the field, every travail-pang that elicits the cry of anguish, every disease that invades the fabric of the physical life, bears the same message—that "every mouth must be stopped, and all the world be brought under the judgment of God" (Rom. iii. 19).

Nothing can be clearer than the affirmation of the Apostle in this connection. He says, "Through one trespass, the judgment came unto all men to condemnation;" so that on account of that one trespass, you and I were justly condemned as guilty; and not we alone, but all men. The whole race was held to be guilty in the eye of the holy law of God. "Through the one man's disobedience the many were made sinners" (Rom. v. 19). Just as the oak was in the acorn, so each member of our race was in Adam; and as Levi paid tithes in Abraham, for he was in the loins of Abraham when Melchizedek met him, so each of Adam's race sinned in Adam, being in the loins of Adam when the serpent tempted him to his fall.

In addition, it must be borne in mind, that the law which brings us into connection with the sin of the first Adam, also brings us into connection with "the grace of the one Man, Jesus Christ." "As through one trespass the judgment came unto all men to condemnation; even so through one act of righteousness the free gift came unto all men to justification of life" (Rom. v. 18). But the Apostle goes further than that. According to the last quotation from that memorable paragraph, to which we are so largely indebted for our insight into the mystery of God, the free gift comes to all. But it might be objected that, though it is offered to all, it may fail to influence all, through its failure to win acceptance. Therefore, St. Paul takes a further step in his sublime argument, and asserts that, "as through the one man's disobedience the many were made sinners, even so through the obedience of the One shall the many be made righteous" (Rom. v. 19). From which we gather that the results of our Lord's obedience unto death are co-extensive with those of Adam's disobedience; that "the many" in each case stands for the same multitudes, i.e., the race; and that whatever guilt was imputed to the human family, by virtue of its union with the first Adam who fell, has been put away by the second Man, the Lord from heaven, who, as the Lamb of God, has put away the sin of the world, "for He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the whole world" (1 John ii. 2). In other words, no one shall at last be sent away into eternal punishment for his participation in the guilt of the first sin, since that has been put away by the Redeemer for us all. If we miss eternal life, it will be because of our own personal transgressions, and because (to use a modern expression) we have contracted ourselves out of the benefits of the work of our Lord's redemption (Matt. xviii. 21-35).

If it be asked, then, why babes still die, and the penal results of that first sin remain, it must be answered that, though the guilt accruing from Adam's transgression has been put away by Jesus Christ for the whole race, yet the penal results of that first sin still remain as a fatal heritage to us all. But, whensoever men receive the grace of the Spirit of God to lust against the flesh, so that they may not do the things that they would (Gal. v. 17), these penal consequences become transformed to blessings, and the Marah waters become sweet.

Second, as to the evil bias and propensity towards sin, which is the experience of each individual. It is a matter of universal experience that, to use the words of S. T. Coleridge, "an evil ground" has existed in our nature, previously to any given act, or assignable moment of time. That there is a tendency, drift, bias, or propensity towards evil, in the nature of the youngest child, which will surely manifest itself in overt acts of wrong-doing, is as distinctly acknowledged by heathen writers, such as Horace and Euripides, as by ourselves. "Even though," says Chalmers, "we have the outward exhibition alone, we have enough to justify us in inferring an inward tendency. We learn the quality of water from the stream, and need not dig into the spring. From the doings of the lower animals, we speak of the faithfulness of the dog, the ferocity of the tiger, the slyness of the fox. Similarly, if it be found true of every man that he is actually a sinner, that all who have grown old enough to be capable of revealing themselves, are transgressors, then there is something in the make of man's nature that tends to sin. To assert the quality of original sin is to do no more than assert the quality of the species. It is to reduce that which is true of every individual of our nature to an expression which is applicable to the whole of that nature."

The great theologian, Richard Watson, appeals to five facts to substantiate the same universal tendency and property of our nature: the great and general wickedness that has ever prevailed in nations; the strength of man's tendency to wickedness, as shown in crimes committed and restraints overcome; the seeds of vice discovered in children; the consciousness in every man of his liability to many evils; and the opposition of our passions and inclinations to all efforts for improvement, felt even by the renewed. These facts, he says, can only be accounted for by the innate and connate tendency to sin, which is the result of our connection with fallen man.

Jonathan Edwards says that we always infer tendency from facts. If a tree always produces one kind of fruit, and grows always in one way, we conclude that there is a tendency to produce such fruit, and to grow in such a way. Tendency, he says, is nothing but liability towards such and such results.

In Scripture this tendency, known as original sin, is proved by the universality of sin, as described in Romans i. and ii., and by its description of those internal movements of a corrupt nature of which David, in Psalm li., and Paul in Romans vii., furnish so accurate a description. "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (1 John i. 8). "We all once lived in the lusts of our flesh, doing the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature children of wrath, even as the rest" (Eph. ii. 3). "That which is born of the flesh is flesh" (John iii. 6. See 1 Cor. xv. 46-49).

This depravity, which as we have seen is an inherited tendency to selfishness, to self-gratification and self-indulgence, is total, because it vitiates and impairs our entire nature. It is lodged in the very fountain-head of our being, and poisons, more or less, all the streams. And there is only one corrective, in the power and grace of the Holy Spirit, who sheds abroad the love of God in the heart of the penitent and believing soul, reversing its selfishness, arresting its evil habits and tendencies, and enthroning the blessed Lord, so that we cry, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. To me to live is Christ."

And for those who become united by faith with Him who is the second Man, the Lord from heaven; and are born into his family by the second birth, as they were born into the family of Adam by their first birth—there is, indeed, a blessed reversal of all that they have lost in their first parent. They lost the fellowship of Eden, but they become one with God as the Son is. They lost the garden, they obtain a city. They lost the river and tree of life, but they find them again in connection with the throne of God and of the Lamb. Death is abolished, and they sleep in Jesus, or are caught up to meet Him in the air. Their bodies are changed into the likeness of his body of glory. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun strike upon them, nor any heat; for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall become their Shepherd, and shall guide them unto fountains of waters of life; and God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes." "And He that sitteth on the throne said, Behold, I make all things new" (Rev. vii. 16, 17, xxi. 5).

The Week of Prayer.

EXETER HALL.

ON Tuesday, the special services were continued, when Mr. JOHN PATON presided, and the address was given by Rev. Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE. Speaking on Micah v. 4-7, he pointed out the similarity between the position of Israel then and our own as a nation at present, self-assertive, yet hated by all around, and beset by two peculiar dangers — Assyria (type of infidelity) and Babylon (type of superstition). The prophets were nearly always inspired at times of national difficulty and distress; and were sent to speak not only of national sin, but of the assurance of the favour of God when repentance came. Where were they to find deliverance? "This Man (the Lord Jesus Christ) shall be the peace" (verse 5). The special topic of confession, praise, and prayer, for the day was "Our Own Land;" and besides the general view, particular mention was made of the approaching Simultaneous Mission of the Free Churches and of the Y.M.C.A.'s.

The subject for Wednesday was "Other Nations," and after reading John xvii. 13-26 and Ephesians iii. 14-21, Rev. F. B. MEYER called special attention to the second sub-topic of intercession, "For the power of the Holy Spirit in the purification of all Christian Churches, and in the wide adoption of simple evangelical religion, and for patience and steadfastness on the part of those persecuted for their faith." "We are," he said, from the Holy Spirit this year in connection with the Simultaneous Mission. When all is done that can be done, it seems so paltry; and unless God Himself moves, all our effort will be but the breaking of a bubble upon the ocean. It will not move London. When Jonah went to Nineveh there was the evident co-operation of God's Holy Spirit; and I look for his brooding over the city, so that men may be found leaving their tools to go out seeking the nearest Christian, women leaving their household duties to seek retirement with God, men being arrested in the midst of business by an uncontrollable impulse to pray. And I believe this will lead to that national righteousness of which our nation stands so much in need at the present time." On the invitation of the Chairman (Mr. W. H. SEAGRAM) many special requests for prayer were presented, praise being offered for improvement in the condition of Dr. Harry Guinness, with petitions on behalf of the health of Pastor Fuller Gooch and Surgeon-General Partridge.

"HOPING FOR A GREAT VISITATION

Thursday was devoted to "Heathen Lands." Colonel DOUGLAS JONES presided; and after the reading of Psa. xcviii., Rev. Dr. JOHN GRITTON called attention to the promise of the final and perfect victory of the kingdom of God, and showed that the order of its coming, the order of missionary enterprise, is to be found in Acts i. "The Church is sinning against the direction then given. It was then to wait for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost; but God has given that, and we continue to pray as if He had not given once and for all this indwelling power to do the mighty work. So in our unbelief we are waiting when we ought to be working. Another sin is that the Church will not praise. I go to the church, and we pray for a thousand things; then the minister says, 'Let us sing to the praise and glory of God,' and he gives out a hymn of prayer. Oh that we had another hour for confession! We will not praise. How can we go on doing when we have not counted up his mercies, and told Him of the great things He has done. Having thus spoken, and settled the order and power, the Lord Jesus Christ was seen stretching out his hands and giving a blessing. My heart is very heavy when I find Christians will not praise the Lord. I do not know how God is going to hear the rest of our prayers, or how we are to get the blessing if we do not praise Him."

AS IF PENTECOST HAD NOT BEEN,

"The Mohammedan World" was set down as the subject for Friday. After reading several extracts, showing the greatness of the task of carrying the Gospel to the followers of Islam, Rev. J. G. TRAIN read also a letter from a missionary in Egypt, who had seen the gracious working of the Spirit in that connection. Referring to Jeremiah xxxiii. 3, he encouraged his hearers to lay hold on the promise, "Call upon Me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not"; and explained that the word "mighty" (R.V. "difficult") is the same word by which the cities of the Amorites are described as "fenced and walled up," and may be taken as meaning "fortified." The Lord invites his people to ask power for things that appear insurmountable.

ALDERSGATE STREET Y.M.C.A.

The week of prayer was duly observed at Aldersgate Street, Mr. BASIL HEWER calling attention, day by day, to the specified topics. The feature of the week was a series of addresses on the Holy Ghost, by Rev. C. BRADSHAW FOY. At the outset Mr. Foy, in speaking from Matt. iii. 11, pointed out the need for, and some effects of, the baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire. Fire warms, softens, and purifies the heart. The baptism comes through faith in Jesus Christ, to the waiting, praying, desiring, prepared, and believing heart.

Some simple duties, the neglect of which goes far to account for the want of satisfaction which is the experience of so many Christians, were helpfully noted. Mr. Foy specified these duties as:—to get into direct communication with God by waiting upon Him in the morning; to dedicate ourselves to Him day by day, feeling that we have no property in ourselves but belong to God; to seek a daily anointing, which alone can fit the Christian for service; to get daily spiritual food, in order to meet the loss in spiritual wear and tear; and to seek, at the close of each day, the forgiveness of sins. We should gather our thoughts, meditate upon our sins of omission and commission, and seek cleansing through the precious blood of Christ. In his concluding address, Mr. Foy dwelt on the privilege of believers to enjoy abiding communion with God.

Footsteps of Truth.

"BEHOLD, I bring you tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke ii. 10, 11).

"Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for He shall save his people from their sins" (Matt. i. 21).

"He is not here; for He is risen as He said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay" (Matt. xxviii. 6).

"God raised Him from the dead. We declare unto you glad tidings" (Acts xiii. 30, 32).

"And they said one to another, did not our heart burn within us, while He talked with us by the way, and while He opened to us the Scriptures?" (Luke xxiv. 32).

"And when He had spoken these things, while they beheld, He was taken up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight" (Acts i. 9).

"This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven" (Acts i. 11).

"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations; and then shall the end come" (Matt. xxiv. 14).

"I go to prepare a place for you; and I will come again and receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John xiv. 2, 3).

"But of that day and hour knoweth no man" (Matt. xxiv. 36).

"Therefore, be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh" (Matt. xxiv. 44).

"I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope, for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him; and so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thess. iv. 13, 14, 17).

"This is our God; we have waited for Him and He will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for Him; we will be glad and rejoice in his Salvation" (Isaiah xxv. 9).

Marylebone Medical Mission.

THAT a medical mission may succeed in reaching people who are outside the influence of any other religious agency is well shown by the work of the Marylebone Medical Mission, which has been carried on for many years under the skilful direction of Dr. Robert Chambers.

The district of Lisson Grove, in which the Mission is situated, is one which TEEMS WITH HUMAN MISERY.

In some of the one-roomed homes into which Dr. Chambers and his helpers go on their errand of mercy, it is difficult for them to remain, on account of the closeness and stench. It is surprising, therefore, under the circumstances in which the patients live, that so many of them recover.

Perhaps the chief feature of this many-sided work is the treatment of patients at the Mission House. Three times a week the doors are open to all comers who need medical attention. Many are sick as a result of insufficient food or clothing, the most prevalent diseases being bronchitis, pleurisy, and affections of the lungs. Each case receives individual attention, the particulars are recorded, and medicine is prepared by the dispenser. The scene at the Gospel service, which is conducted for the patients, would form a fit subject for the brush of Herkomer, or any great painter skilled in depicting

THE SORROWS OF THE POOR.

A glance at these poor folk is sufficient to convince one that such a mission as this is a great boon, both in a spiritual and physical sense. Many of them would laugh at the idea of attending any regular place of worship whatever, and that not so much from prejudice or ill-will, but on account of their tattered and folorn condition. They would feel out of place in church, chapel, or mission-hall. Yet they gladly listen to the words of Dr. Chambers in the Dispensary services, and there are numerous instances in which men and women who were apparently hopeless, from a spiritual point of view, have received blessing.

The work, indeed, is essentially a religious one. There are Bible classes and prayer meetings and Gospel services during the week, and the Sunday evening meeting, which is of is well attended, not only by those who have found Christ, but also by many of the unconverted who have benefited by the medical treatment.

In the visitation work, relief is given to the most necessitous cases, and clothing is sold at less than half value. The evidence of changed lives is the best testimony to the soundness of the work. Dr. Chambers' address is 12, Bell Street, Lisson Grove, W.

For London Lads.

THE call to the Churches is loud and urgent from the youth of the slums and over-crowded poverty-stricken areas of our great city. Preventive philanthropy ought not to languish for want of funds when the demands upon its activity are so imperative, yet I fear many churches and institutions are lamenting that the Lord's stewards are not furnishing them with the means that would enable them to provide a cure for the disease all deplore. The Working Lads' Institute and Home, Whitechapel, has carried on this philanthropic and Christian service for the social and moral welfare of the poor lads of East London for nearly twenty-five years, and upwards of 7,000 lads have been in membership. The prospects for the future of our Institute and Home are brighter than at any previous period of its history, but to enable us to extend and increase its usefulness and blessing we require larger funds. On behalf of many of the poor lads of the East End who are in moral peril, and in the name of the Saviour who seeks to save them, I very earnestly appeal to the Lord's stewards for their prayers and assistance.

London Wesleyan Mission.

UNDER the direction of Rev. Peter Thompson, the Eastern branch of the London Wesleyan Mission continues to give evidence of increasing vitality. Glimpses of the variety and intensity of life in this congested district are given by workers from the different centres, in the annual report. Mr. Thompson says:—"We have the same exodus of the successful from our mean streets to the pleasant suburbs, the same steady and persistent influx of the destitute, the helpless, and the vicious. We have the same masses who never rise, and who cannot fall, swept back from street to street by the same resistless tide of Jews and foreigners. Above all, we have the same with strong drink. We have also the same glorious success as in past years, and continue to add daily to the Church such as are being saved."

A notable event of the year was the renovation of St. George's Chapel, and the re-opening services will stand out in the history of the Missionas remarkable occasions. Large numbers gathered to the services, especially on the Sundays. Many of them were men and women in the thraldom of drink. One man came to a service who had spent in drink and sin £200, which had been left to him by his mother two months before. That day he had taken the boots from the feet of his boy and sold them for drink. A woman, who declared she had not been sober for two months, signed the pledge. During these special meetings numbers of young people decided for Christ. Much of the general work of the Mission is done in the homes of the poorest and neediest, who live in small rooms and mean streets. Many of these are "more sinned against than sinning." From their infancy are arrayed against them, and their whole life is one long story of struggle and sorrow. Among these, much earnest and faithful work has been done. The Mission and Brass Band members hold open-air services throughout the year, thus bringing many outsiders within sound of the Gospel. The guilds for young men and women are much appreciated during the winter session, and the present attendance and zeal manifested are particularly encouraging. The Sunday schools, Children's Mission, Bands of Hope, and the Girls' Parlour, are conducted with gratifying success.

"Paddy's Goose" is one of the agencies which are steadily elevating the tone of Ratcliff Highway. The Mission Band here have laboured with much devotion. Special efforts are made to reach the children, in the hope that the boys and girls of drunkards will eventually become men and women to shun the drink which curses their homes to-day.

Day by day streams of people make their way to the Mission House of Stepney Temple, under every conceivable circumstance, and with innumerable requests. The daily task of the workers is to sift truth from falsehood, right from wrong, to rebuke the forward and win the wayward, to succour the helpless and to be gentle yet firm, to manifest the wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove, to bring Christ's good news, not in word only, but in deed to the throngs of anxious visitors. The visitation of the people is largely in the hands of ladies, and through their timely ministry many have been helped to nobler and higher lives. Much value is attached to Christian fellowship, and in the class meetings there are abundant signs of healthy, vigorous spiritual life. In one sits week by week a poor washerwoman, who can only spare this one hour between the Sundays, every other working moment be crowded with hard toil. She is a widow, and has to support an aged mother and three little children. She often tells of hard battles and fierce temptations, but rejoices in the keeping power of her Lord.

The Old Mahogany Bar has proved a sanctuary to weary and dispirited hearts. Many are the proofs of a deepened spiritual life and a generous spirit of self-denial. Numbers have been won from the paths of sin and have become "fishers of men;" and here, as at the other centres of the Mission, patient toil has been rewarded, and has borne an abundant harvest. A sum of £3,000 is required to meet current expenses and liabilities. The needs of the occasion form the strongest appeal which can be made for the support of much-needed and enterprising organization. The superintendent is Rev. Peter Thompson, 530, Commercial Road, London, E.

University Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

CAMBRIDGE.

CAMBRIDGE has sustained a great loss in the death of Mr. W. Hough, a gentleman well known in Christian and philanthropic circles, whose kindly interest encouraged other workers. At his funeral, which was largely attended, the Archdeacon of Norwich and the Master of Corpus Christi College officiated.

At the service for "men only," held in Holy Trinity Church last Sunday, 1,400 Motto cards were distributed. The church will not hold this large number, and many had to be turned away with only a Motto. The vicar, Rev. C. J. Proctor, preached, his text being "Fight the good fight, lay hold on eternal life." The men's services in other churches in Cambridge are being well attended also.

OXFORD.

Oxford is the poorer for the loss of Mr. B. Henry Baden-Powell, a distinguished member of a distinguished family. Like many other Oxford men, Mr. Baden-Powell passed a great part of his life in the Indian Civil Service, and returned still in vigorous health to throw himself into good works which specially commended themselves to him. Religious education had in him a zealous champion, and his personal generosity was well known.

The following extract from the late Sir Henry Acland's will is suggestive of the inner life of the man: "And now, with a deep sense of the mercy and goodness of God to me and mine, through parents, children, and friends, and by the saintly life of my dear wife gone before, I commit my soul to my heavenly Father, in the faith and love of Christ, and I pray that the faithful study of all nature may, in Oxford and elsewhere, lead men to the knowledge and love of God, to faith and to charity, and to the further prevention and relief of the bodily and mental sufferings of all races of mankind."

At a special service in the Cathedral on Sunday afternoon, Dean Paget gave a most helpful address. Speaking of the passing of the century, he said it was possible to make both too much and too little of such moments. Too much, in that we forgot the solemnity of ordinary life in every day of it, and too little in that we forgot that God had something specially to say at such seasons. He urged a look backward and then a look forward in three ways——as members of the Church of Christ, as members of the English nation, and as individually each for himself. He dwelt very solemnly on the sins of the Church and of the nation, and pleaded for a spirit of unworldliness and zeal for souls in the Church, and for a recognition of the great trust committed to us as a nation. "Disciplined," he said, "through all the anxiety and anguish of the year, may we go forward to do his will among the nations of the world."

Rev. J. Arkell, who has been rector of St. Ebbe's in the city for over twenty years, preached his farewell sermon on Sunday last. The incumbency has been offered to Mr. Filleul, late of Bath, and who is now working in Birmingham. Oxford would be glad to welcome so devoted an Evangelical worker as Mr. Filleul, and one who has been so signally blessed in his work. As St. Ebbe's is one of the few Evangelical Churches in Oxford, it is important a strong man should be appointed.

Rev. A. J. Carlyle, rector of the City Church, replying for the Nonconformist clergy at a large and influential meeting in the Corn Exchange on Sunday, paid a high tribute to their work in the country. He said that he wished to express the sense of respect and of obligation which, as a minister of the Established Church, he personally cherished towards the Nonconformist churches and the Nonconformist clergy. He rejoiced to have the opportunity of stating that a very large part of the religious life of this country was due to the work of the Nonconformist Churches. He instanced the influence of religion in public affairs, and said the Nonconformist clergy and churches set, in this respect, an example which the Church of England would do well to follow. The speech has created a very favourable impression.

Welsh Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

WE understand that the heads of the Salvation Army intend making a slight alteration in the method of carrying on their work in the Principality. Their new policy will be to send a larger number of Welsh-speaking officers to labour amongst their own countrymen. Even where the services are conducted in English it will probably be for the better that the local Army officers should be conversant with the language of the country.

For years past the annual collection for the Welsh Forward Movement has been made during the Week of Prayer. It is to be regretted that the latest published statement of the financial position of the Movement shows a deficit of £600. Owing to this some forty centres are deprived of grants for the months of December and January. In order to keep pace with the growing needs of the Movement, the contributions for the present year will have to exceed those of the preceding twelve months by fully £1,000.

The annual report of the Movement shows that, in spite of the existence in Wales of so many active and aggressive religious agencies, there still remains a population of nearly 800,000 people unreached. These, it appears, are not even occasional frequenters of any place of worship. To this mass of godless human souls Glamorganshire contributes the appalling quota of 500,000, while the other counties of Wales and Monmouthshire furnish the remainder.

The address written by the Bishop of St. David's for the commencement of the century, contains some timely and apposite remarks in regard to the future, and, more especially, the religious future of Wales. The Bishop pleads for sympathy with all that is good in new tendencies and movements. He anticipates serious difficulties before all the religious bodies of the Principality. The development of education, the Bishop considers, will be an important factor in securing fuller sympathy and co-operation between the different sections of the Christian Church in Wales.

Irish Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT,]

DR. ANNIE CRAWFORD, a member of the Presbyterian Church, at Portstewart, has been accepted for missionary work in India, and is about to proceed to that country.

The total amount paid to the Irish Methodist Twentieth Century Fund up to date is £33,264 3s. 3d. During last week £7,000 came into the hands of the treasurers in two days.

The Association for Promoting Christian Knowledge has been doing a good work in this country, and under its auspices over 1,600 boys and girls, in sixty-two intermediate schools throughout the country, have been examined in religious knowledge, and have thus been encouraged to study the Bible.

The Methodists are now everywhere preparing for their great Simultaneous Mission which is to be held during the last week of this month and the first week of the next. Special meetings of class leaders and Sunday school teachers have been held in Belfast, and special prayer meetings in various centres.

Under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance, united meetings for prayer were held last week in Belfast, Dublin, Cork, Limerick, and various other centres. At Limerick, the Bishop, Dr. Bunbury, warned the people against going to "dissenting" places of worship, and exhorted them to be loyal to the "Church;" but the people attended the meetings in large numbers notwithstanding.

The Belfast Women's Temperance Association have taken a site for a home for female inebriates, although they still need £1,000 to open the establishment free of debt. Last week the Recorder of Belfast committed a woman, who had been totally neglecting her children and her house, to the Government Home for Inebriates at Ennis for a year, with the hope that this may do her more good than sending her to prison. This case will be closely watched, as it was the first one of the kind thus sent forward from Belfast.

A striking article on the liquor traffic has appeared in The Leader, a Dublin Roman Catholic paper, in which it is said that during the last quarter of a century, "thanks to our Nationalist J.P.'s and them alone," public-houses have increased in many of our country towns from "twenty-five to fifty per cent.," and it adds: "Go into any town, even in the Orange North where Catholics may not amount to one-third of the population, and you find them conducting three-fourths or more of the spirit shops, and if north or south you come across a publican who restricts his business to a wholesale and family trade and will not sell for consumption on the premises when he can at all avoid it, it is the Protestant and not the Catholic that shows the good example in this respect."

Child Martyrs in China.

BY ALEX. R. SAUNDERS.

DURING our recent flight from P'ing-yao in Shansi to Hankow, we were fully impressed with the fact that children of even very few years can enter into the spirit of fellowship with Christ in suffering in a very real sense. Little can ever be written as to the spirit in which the children bore suffering, in such great massacres as that at T'ai-yuen-Fu, when none have been spared to tell the story.

Our children have ever looked for the return of our Lord Jesus as something very real, and which might take place at any moment. It was constantly referred to by them, and we can well remember once, while we were still at P'ing-yao, that one of them said, "Mother, perhaps we won't need to go to Chefoo, because Jesus may come before then." Preparations then being made for our two eldest children to go to the C.I.M. Schools at Chefoo in the following spring drew forth the remark. The two of our four children who succumbed to the fatigue and privation of the journey from P'ing-yao to Hankow were Jessie, seven and a half years old, and baby Isabel, one year and nine months. On July 28 Mr. Meyer voiced the hearts of God's children at Keswick in prayer for such as ourselves in China, who might at the time be bereaved; and in looking back we can see how wonderfully God has sustained us, for the previous evening (July 27) the spirit of our beloved Isabel had taken its flight, and we had laid the little body in a hastily-dug grave outside the walls of a city in Honan. We can now see that we were sustained in answer to the prayers of God's people. At an early stage of our journey, when we had been robbed of all, even of most of our clothing, Jessie said, "Mother, they took Jesus' clothes from Him too when they nailed Him to the cross, did they not?" When we were stoned from one village to another, she said, "Mother, they treated Jesus like that too; but they would not do it to us if they loved Jesus, would they?"

When we were without food and shelter for the night, she reminded us that Jesus sometimes had not where to lay his head. When we were being escorted through Honan, we were one day given an open stable to rest in, and we put the children into the stone mangers. After a little while Jessie said, "Mother, Jesus was born in a place like this."

Surely that child entered fully into fellowship with Christ in suffering, and has now entered into rest, joining the great number who, during the last few months, have suffered martyrdom in China. We realize more than ever we did that we are "Severed only till He come."

Stories of the Indian Famine.

A PENNYWORTH OF HAPPINESS.

I AM afraid those who have given their money to help the famine waifs will never know what a world of happiness they have brought to these poor, starving children, even by a gift of only one penny.

I have just been talking to a little orphan boy who used to stay his hunger by eating the grass seeds that he had swept up in the jungle. The day he arrived here he fell apparently dying upon our steps, but now with one of your pennies he gets quite a wonderful little dinner—and this is how he spends it. He first changes the penny for 350 little white shells. He then gives 120 of them for a small handful of rice; another forty for a bit of meat, the size of a walnut; then sixteen for salt, which he loves as much as sugar; and another sixteen for hot red chillies to make his mouth burn, sixteen more for an onion, and then the remaining shells for a little oil to make it rŭchi, i.e., tasty. All these he ties up in different parts of his trousers, which consist of a cloth cleverly wrapped round each leg, and fastened without a button and without a knot, and gathering a handful of green leaves and a few grass stalks, he creeps into his low little hut, makes a plate of the leaves, boils his purchases in a clay pot—the size of a baby's head—and in less than half an hour it is all cooked and eaten.

A SIXPENNY HOUSE, BUILT IN A DAY.

But you would wonder most of all at the queer little houses, for as the new-comers arrive, thin and weary, they are fed; and then they go off into the jungle with their wives and the little children, and the father seeks out a dozen long and thick sticks, whilst the others gather bundles of leafy boughs, which they heap upon their heads and then return to make their little home with its tiny mud fireplace for cooking, all to be finished ere the prayer bell rings, and costing only the sixpence, which is the daily wage for the whole famine-stricken family. Prayers over, they creep on hands and knees into the new little home, big enough for the whole family to cuddle up in, but too low for me to stand in. Then they close the marvellous little door with its wonderful little hinges and bolts all made of jungle grass; and soon after the evening meal is finished, you may go and see them gathered round a fire singing, whilst others are busy snoring. But you will say, Why do they make their houses so small? The answer is a very sad one. For the children are naked, save for a string round their waist, which is all that is left of their trousers, and often the mother and father have only a few rags between them; and now that the rains have come, they like the low little hut that leaves no room for the water and wind to get in.

A LAST GOOD-BYE.

In our crowded Children's Home there is a little lad whose mother carried him here, a mere skeleton, astride her hip, after the manner of Hindoo mothers. Every evening after prayers she used to seek him out, and kiss the little face that was growing so bright and chubby. One morning she kissed little Stephen, and then, with the big earthen water-pot upon her head, she went about her daily work. Suddenly, without a moment's warning, she fell down amid the bricks and mortar in violent spasms and convulsions of cholera. There was no need to ask what it was, for all sprang back terrified; and though she had at once all the help that Christian love and courage could afford, it was all soon over, and little Stephen had suffered this world's greatest loss; and, like so many more in our Children's Home, he can now only look to you, whose Christlike love has already saved him from a terrible death, to save him still. Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 20.

Abiding Influence (Heb. x. 4; Matt. xxvi. 13).

IN the Book of Kings it is recorded that a dead man was suddenly brought in contact with the bones of Elisha, the great prophet, and that so soon as the corpse touched the sacred relics it revived, and the man stood up on his feet (2 Kings xiii. 20, 21). This is an illustration of the thought which comes before us to-day of posthumous influence. What we have been lives after we have gone, and goes on for generations, blessing or cursing those that follow.

Take, for instance, the story of Abel. What myriads of eyes have read the story, and how perpetually simple faith in God's Word and obedience to God's command have brought light and teaching to penitent and obedient hearts! He has spoken and told us that the most beautiful and innocent life needs sacrifice; that without shedding of blood there is no remission; that it is necessary that the sinner should seek forgiveness and propitiation by looking through the sacrifice of blood to the mercy of God, and that we should stand true to our convictions at the risk of our life. Abel speaks to us and says that without faith it is impossible to please God, and the soul must rise above all outward symbols and emblems, beyond all rites and religious observances, into the presence of the Unseen and the Eternal. Abel speaks yet; amid all the voices that send their echoes through the world, his is not obliterated, and, as we compare his early death beneath the murderous hand of his brother, and remember how God has vindicated him, it is as though a voice speaks from every wind, bidding us not avenge ourselves, but to commit our cause to our Father, who will neither fail nor forsake, but will vindicate us.

1 Peter ii. 18-25.

Turning from Abel to Mary, we find another voice that has never ceased to go through the world. What myriads of souls have drawn near her act of love and received inspiration from it! Our Lord's anticipation has been verified. His Gospel has been preached throughout the whole world, and wherever it has gone this that Mary did has been told for a memorial of her, and wherever the story has been told it has incited others to go and do likewise. Like Mary, we must learn to sit at his feet, because out of those hours of quiet waiting and listening come the high moments when we see great ideals beckoning us, and resolve to put them into effect. From Mary we learn the worth of our love to Jesus. He said that hers was a good work, though she did not specially help the poor and promote any charitable object, but poured her treasured spice on the person of the Redeemer. From her we learn not to be abashed, though Judas should misread our act, and misrepresent it by biting sarcasm. From Mary we learn to forecast the coming time, and to prepare for it; only as she anticipated the Saviour's death, we have to anticipate and prepare for his second advent.

It is beautiful to see how lives leave their memorial behind them. For instance, Legh Richmond's "Dairyman's Daughter," Bonar's Life of M'Cheyne, and last, but not least, the biography of G. H. C. Macgregor. A grain of aromatic spice will retain its power for years, because it has drunk so deeply of the sunshine. You and I must bathe ourselves in the warm beams of Christ; these alone are the source of abiding influence. Remember the text which is engraved on Mr. Moody's gravestone, "He that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

Most helpful and inspiring meetings have been held by the Cleveland and South Durham Union at their seventh annual Convention. Mr. R. W. Davies, of Darlington, the president, pleaded with the young people to let the idea of personal evangelism take possession of them in the new year. Rev. J. D. Lamont, National President, and Rev. E. R. Barrett were also present, and spoke solemn, heart-searching words that brought the audience into that state of heart and mind that brought down a rich blessing on the Convention.

Liverpool Endeavourers held a special Praise Service on New Year's Day. Concerted Bible readings, moments of meditation or of silent thanksgiving for past and present mercies, interspersed with grand old hymns and chants, formed a true Endeavour service. Rev. R. Lewis, who presided, then spoke in his own tender, earnest way on Thanksgiving, followed by the Rev. R. Veitch, who spoke on Thanksliving. With burning eloquence Mr. Veitch sketched some of the possibilities lying before the youth of the day. A song-consecration service closed this bright day.

International S.S. Lesson.

January 27, 1901.

Christ Silences the Pharisees (Matt. xxii. 34-46).

Golden Text—"What think ye of Christ?" (Matt. xxii. 42).

Introduction.

READ up all the verses between the last lesson and this one, and you will see Christ had conversations with priests, elders (chap. xxi. 23), Herodians (chap. xxii. 16), Sadducees (23) and Pharisees. They all asked Him difficult questions that they might "entangle Him in his talk" (15), they try their best (34), "tempting Him" (35), but it is no good, they are foiled at every attempt by straight, simple, grand answers from Jesus (46), and they are obliged at last to give it up.

Key to Blackboard Plan.—Love in its two God-divided plan is the subject we have in hand. All laws written, all books, teachings, given us by the Great Author circle round this word "Love." God is Love Himself, and to lead a holy life pleasing to the God of Love, man must be filled with it, too, towards his Creator, as well as towards his fellow-beings.

1. A Great Subject—Love.

(34, 35) These keen Pharisees chose a clever man to ask Christ what they thought would be a clever question. A lawyer can reason and argue, and this great subject of the laws was one he thought himself well able to deal with. How little he or anyone understood the great mind they came in touch with (36). At once Jesus answers (37, 38), "Love," and "Love again." So simple, yet so difficult; just what these Pharisees did not do. Trace "Love" through the Bible. Begin with 1 John iv. 8, and carry it out from Genesis i. to Revelation xxii., and get saturated yourself with this greatest of all great subjects.

2. A Great Command: "Thou Shalt Love."

Yes, God loves you, and you shall love, too, if you would live to his glory (37, 40).

How far have we travelled into v. 37? Have we come to the end of the first "all" even?

(39) How far have we practised this command? It is "great" (36), so is (38) "great" also.

Let us each examine our own hearts before the great God of Love.

3. Two Great Words: "As," "All."

Two little words you say. Yes, even small infants can spell and write them, but they have large meanings (37). All heart, that is purpose and motives; all soul, that is spiritual faculties; all mind, that is intellect and brain; all strength (Mark xii. 30), that is energy and power; what a large programme, but before God worth more than many repeated "burnt offerings and sacrifices" (see Mark xii. 33).

It is said, "Man's will is the only thing God has not taken under his control;" then if our wills are our own let us lay them down at his feet in humble submission. This is how to sincerely love.

4. A Great Question: "What Think Ye of Christ?"

Notice all Christ's questions (42, 44, 45), but this one He asks us to-day is the greatest. "What think ye of Christ? (42). Oh! what shall the answer be? Before we answer it let us study his claims upon us, his character, his divinity, his humanity, his work, his teachings, his position as Saviour, King, Friend, &c., and then answer this most important question, "What think ye of this Christ?"

Tract Distribution.

EVANGELISTS who have been mightily used of God to the salvation of souls, have, in many cases, been great tract distributors. In the coming awakening, God may use the same ministry. I would suggest:—

1. That tract distributors should select tracts having good striking titles. Some titles are calculated to stir up opposition, rather than encourage acceptance and perusal.

2. Pictorial tracts make their way where others do not. The Gospel may be illustrated by well-executed pictures; such tracts are generally well received.

3. Biographical tracts are well suited for the aggressive work; they "take" well.

4. Booklets are often better than tracts, and if wisely presented are rarely refused. They are gladly accepted, read, preserved for further use, or passed on to others.

5. Tract distributors should know well the contents of tracts before handing them out.

6. God's blessing should be invoked upon every tract given away; it is better to give away six with God's blessing, than to scatter 100 in the energy of the flesh.

7. In handing a tract, let it be done graciously, and say, "Will you kindly accept this little book"—or paper.

8. In an omnibus or railway train select the person you think most likely to accept a tract. If the first person addressed accepts, all the others will be likely to follow suit.

YOUNG HELPERS' LEAGUE.

SELDOM if ever throughout the year does the Royal Albert Hall present a prettier or more impressive scene than on the occasion of the annual entertainment in aid of the funds of the Young Helpers' League. Not that the auditorium was resplendent with temporary decorations, but the bright young humanity who ministered to the enjoyment of the visitors was in itself sufficient to move the heart of the least emotional. In the centre of the platform in front of the immense organ, sat the brass band of Stepney Home, and their contributions to the programme were given with delightful spirit and precision. On each side was arranged the choir, which comprised 600 boys and girls from the Homes. Their singing was typical of the thorough training which marks every phase of industrial and educational life at the institutions. The whole of the arena was occupied by troupes of happy youngsters, but no longer bearing any trace of want and sorrow.

Their programme was a long one, and for two-and-a-half hours the audience was entertained with innocent frolic and amusement. One of the principal features was a naval and military display by a regiment of lads in khaki, and a naval brigade of small boys, who manipulated the large guns with surprising ability. The boys were, of course, warmly applauded, and were afterwards inspected in column by the Duke of Marlborough. "Little women" from the Girls' Village Home presented a charming appear-appearance. They were daintily attired in white dresses, with sashes of various colours, and went through a pretty musical drill with flags, afterwards performing with equal grace a "joyous tripping with jingling tambourines." Another pleasing item was an action song and chorus by little Japanese ladies from Ilford, who were clad in appropriate costumes. Canon Fleming contributed to an enjoyable programme two recitations, "The Song of the Shirt," and "Lest we Forget." There were numerous children's games, and a procession of boys from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, bearing trophies of their skill in various industries and badges of their craft.

There were, as usual, no speeches, but the pleaded far more eloquently than any words could have done for the work of the National Waifs' Association, and the limelight tour through slumland, with which the entertainment concluded, emphasized still more forcibly the squalid poverty and wretchedness from which so many have been rescued, and given a new start in life, either in the homeland or far-away Canada. The Young Helpers' League is a union of young people from all parts of the world. It assumes the maintenance of the most pathetic class of Dr. Barnardo's waif family, namely, incurable children. Many of these are deaf and dumb, blind from birth, or terribly malformed, and in constant suffering. These, let it be remembered, are admitted to the Homes freely, without voting, recommendation of subscribers, or promise of support. The various hospitals of the National Waifs' Association, (including Her Majesty's Hospital for Sick Waifs in Stepney Causeway, the Infirmary Cottages at the Girls' Village Home, and the Hospital at Babies Castle, with their 750 ailing and incurable inmates, come within the scope of the League's efforts. Last year saw the membership of the League rise to 25,818. These are grouped locally in habitations, each having its own officials and regular meetings for the transaction of business. Habitations, when large enough, are sub-divided into lodges, which also possess organizations of their own. Up to the present time 715 habitations and 471 lodges have been opened, which are now in active operation all over the whole civilized world; and one result of last Saturday's gathering must be a widening of the circle of adherents to this institution and its noble service in the interests of reclaimed childhood.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Charles Inglis at Nottingham.

OUR friend Mr. CHARLES INGLIS has been visiting Nottingham, where he was so greatly blessed on former visits. Since the closing Sunday of the old year, he has been preaching nightly. His messages have not only been stimulating to the Lord's people, but weary hearts have found rest in the Lord Jesus. One of the most cheering features in the mission was to see some, who were saved twenty years ago in the mission conducted by Mr. Inglis, now devoted workers in their Master's service. C.

Crown Theatre, Peckham.

The first of a series of Evangelistic services was conducted at the Crown Theatre, High Street, Peckham, on Sunday evening last, by Rev. G. THORN, of Clifton Congregational Church, assisted by the Nunhead Christian Band and a large choir. The huge building was crowded in every part, and so great was the crowd unable to gain admission that traffic was momentarily impeded, police having to be requisitioned to clear the roadway. The service was of a hearty character, and a glance round the building at once made it evident that a large proportion of the congregation was of the non-churchgoing character. At the close several made their way to the boxes which were used as inquiry rooms. The services continue for three months.

Metropolitan Theatre.

Mr. VAN DE VENTER began a three-weeks' mission at the Metropolitan Theatre on Sunday, January 6, amidst much promise, for the workers were in an expectant spirit. Some cases of conversion were seen at the small hall in the afternoon, and in the theatre in the evening. The week-nights began with a small attendance by reason of the weather, but have improved nightly, and souls are coming to Christ at the meetings, whilst letters of thanksgiving and praise are received daily. Others are testifying in the meetings, and asking the friends to return thanks for their salvation.

In most cases they have been awakened in Hyde Park or the Theatre in the past months, and are now deciding for Christ. The singing of Madame RYALL is wonderfully attractive, and the chalk talks to children much appreciated. CHARLES COOK.

Mr. Leonard Weaver at King's Weigh House Chapel.

The Evangelistic Mission in continuation of the London Tent Campaign, is still proceeding at the above chapel. During the past week the numbers increased nightly, but without a doubt it is a hard district to reach, and it is hoped that all who are interested in the work will not only pray, but rally round, and help us to reach the needy West End of London.

The addresses given by Mr. LEONARD WEAVER were powerful and soul-stirring, and there are signs of blessing in the near future. Already some have taken a decided stand, and Christians have been stimulated.

Meetings will continue during the coming week; Mr. Leonard Weaver will speak each evening. The times of services are 7.45 each night, and Sunday afternoons at 3 o'clock. The soloists, as last week, will be Mr. S. BRADBROOK and Miss EMILY ANGEL.

Jews and the Simultaneous Mission.

At a meeting of the committee of the Hebrew-Christian Prayer Union, it was suggested that some special effort should be made, during the London Simultaneous Mission, to influence those Jews who are not generally reached by any Jewish missionary agency, with the Gospel message. It is proposed to arrange for Jewish services, to be held in several churches in the neighbourhood of the Jewish quarters. These will be conducted chiefly by Hebrew Christians.

For visitation it is hoped that workers may be supplied with Gospel literature in Yiddish and English. For this about 100,000 or even 200,000 copies will be needed. Mr. M. Bergmann has been asked to supply this literature in Yiddish, and Rev. F. B. Meyer has kindly promised to help to defray part of the expense from the Mission Fund.

Mr. Bergmann, whose address is 222, Burdett Road, Bow, London, E., will be glad to hear from friends who feel able to help in the matter.

It is proposed to hold mission services in the Croydon Theatre, Church Street, Croydon, commencing on the last Sunday in February. Any friends who may be able to help, should communicate with Mr. Ernest A. GOODBAN, 2, Blaina Villas, Bandon Hill, Beddington, Surrey.

Morecambe Bay.

The Free Church Mission was arranged to begin at Morecambe on Saturday, January 12, as the missioner was engaged at Wimbledon at the Simultaneous date. The opening meeting at the Albert Hall was full, and blessing was seen at the close, specially among the young men. On Sunday afternoon the place was more than crowded, and again anxious souls were seeking the Saviour.

In the evening the meeting was adjourned to a building three times the size, which was full, and at the close of the address, without the least pressure, many young men entered the large inquiry room. Ministers' sons, young men from Bible classes, three young men from the choir of the Free Church of England, and many others, were on their knees seeking the Lord. All feel it is the work of the Holy Spirit. A spirit of conviction seems to pervade the meetings. The Lord Jesus is exalted, the Word of God honoured, man is in the background, and a real revival is here. "To God be the glory, great things He hath done." Brethren pray for us—and give thanks. The missioner is Mr. CHAS. COOK, of London.

An eight days' mission has been held for the convicts at H.M. Prison, Parkhurst, conducted by Mr. ARTHUR HANSON, prison missioner of the Church Army.

Special services have been held at the Clarendon Mission Hall, Clarendon Road, Notting Hill, conducted by the London City Mission male choir, under the leadership of Mr. A. WILLIAMS. A feature was the attendance of a number of men from the neighbouring lodging-houses. One man, who received blessing, had been twenty-one years in prison.

H. G. E.

Rev. A. C. JARVIS, of Birmingham (formerly of Macclesfield), conducted evangelistic services in the Bethel Baptist Chapel, Macclesfield, Jan. 6-9. The meetings throughout were of a soul-stirring nature, whilst the "Gospel in song" was effectively rendered in solos and duets by Mr. and Mrs. Jarvis. The visit proved to be the source of much blessing.

H. DEALL, Minister.

A week's mission has just been conducted at Providence Chapel, Pirbright, by Mr. JEREMIAH BROWN, of the Evangelization Society. The presence and power of the Lord was very manifest each evening. Many were convicted of sin, and several young people sought forgiveness. The messages given by the evangelist were helpful to God's own people, and impressed the unconverted. R. FIFIELD (Colporteur in charge).

Obituary.

MRS. GARRATT, GLENVAR, CO. DUBLIN.

THIS beloved handmaiden of the Lord has passed to be with the Lord. Her home-call came unexpectedly, for, though she had been ill some time previously, no immediate danger was apprehended. Previous to her marriage, Mrs. Garrett was gay and worldly, but at her conversion in 1859, under the ministry of the late Rev. J. Denham Smith, a great change took place. She gave away her finery, parted with her jewels, devoting the proceeds to the Lord's work, and came out boldly for Christ. Her friends and relatives thought her mad, and many said, "She will turn again;" but through the grace of God, having "put her hand to the plough," she never looked back. In Christ she found such joy and happiness, that her one desire henceforth was to follow Him, and be true to Him at any cost. All she possessed was consecrated to the Lord, and her home became a quiet resting-place for many a weary pilgrim and tired worker in the Lord's vineyard. She was in truth "a succourer of many." Her sorrowing children, and a large circle of friends, mourn their loss. Her mortal remains were laid beside those of her late beloved husband, in the Friends' Burial Ground, near Monkstown, co. Dublin, awaiting the coming of the Lord, and the resurrection of the just.

HIRA SINGH PURI.

Born a Sikh, and receiving a good education, this young man became a clerk in Government employment at Lahore. Through the instrumentality of Miss Thiede, a German lady, who was associated with the American Presbyterian Missionaries, he was led to Christ, and became desirous of himself being a missionary to his heathen countrymen. Coming to England for further instruction, he was enabled to enter the well-known Lady Huntingdon's Theological College at Cheshunt, and passed through the usual curriculum of study there in the time of the late eminent theologian Dr. Reynolds and his colleagues, and was ordained to the ministry of the Word. Soon after this, Hira Singh Puri was accepted by the London Missionary Society for their mission at Benares, but ultimately transferred his services to an American society, which employs, we understand, none but natives of India for mission work in that country. He was stationed at Meerut, and for two years laboured assiduously in that new sphere; latterly he was preaching to a congregation of forty-six native Christians, all of whom had been baptized by himself. A little while ago he was seized with severe illness, which developed into consumption, and he died in hospital at Lahore on November 24.

He was by nature of a bright, joyous, and affectionate temperament, tall and attractive in appearance, and greatly appreciated any little kindnesses bestowed upon him. He now is numbered with the blessed dead, who "rest from their labours; for their works follow with them" (Rev. xiv. 13, R.V.). J. E. M.

Protection of Children in India.—An increasing share of public attention has, during recent years, been directed to the wrongs of children in India. All forms of cruelty common to other parts of the world—as dictated by jealousy, hatred, passion, and selfish interest—are there aggravated by such special additions as branding, notably of child wives, and other practices arising from child marriage, as well as kidnapping for the vilest purposes. A Society for the Protection of Children has been formed in Calcutta, but experience has shown that little progress can be made without the appointment of a secretary who can devote his whole time. Such a worker, with long training, is ready to leave for the field; but to ensure success, a guarantee fund for three years is being raised. A sum of £400 has been raised, but £800 is still required, contributions towards which should be addressed to Rev. J. P. Ashton (of the London Mission, Calcutta), at 40, De Vere Gardens, Ilford.

Old Christmas Cards.—Persons desiring old Christmas cards for distribution among children and young people, may have a supply free by sending a postcard to F.P., care of Mr. Walter Wild, Secretary Y.M.C.A., 172, Queen's Road, Bayswater. Christian families who possess old Christmas or birthday cards, for which they have no further personal use, are invited to send them to above address. Such cards are very useful to Christian workers.

WORKING MEN'S LORD'S DAY REST ASSOCIATION.

Established 1857.—OBJECT.—To secure to the people their natural and Scriptural right to the rest of the Lord's Day. This Association unites all classes of society in important efforts to preserve the Sabbath Day. Its operations are extensive and vigorously conducted on thoroughly Scriptural and national grounds.

Contributions are earnestly solicited, and may be sent to The London and County Bank, 323, High Holborn, W.C., or to Mr. CHAS. HILL, Secretary Lord's Day Rest Association, 12, John Street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

Vice-Patrons—
CAPTAIN H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, R.N., K.G., and the FOUR ARCHBISHOPS.

Increased FUNDS are urgently NEEDED to meet the expenditure involved by the recent extensions of the operations of The Missions to Seamen to several ports abroad, where formerly the crews of British ships were destitute of religious ministrations.

To meet these important developments of the Society's work as well as the large expenditure involved in ministering to the 18,000 Merchant Seamen employed in the Transport Service to and from South Africa, an additional £5,000 is required at once; besides £43,000 for the ordinary annual expenditure on religious ministrations to Seamen, Fishermen, and Bargemen, at home and abroad.

The Society maintains 201 Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in 73 seaports in every part of the world.

Seventy-three Mission Steamers, Sailing Vessels, and Boats, and 97 Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in daily use, winter and summer.

Expenditure in 1899—£42,514 15s. 2d.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Offertories, Drawing-Room Meeting Collections, &c., are earnestly asked for to maintain the existing sailor work, and to extend it to other ports. They should be sent to—

Death of the Queen.

AN EMPIRE IN TEARS.

PEACEFUL PASSING.
1819-1901.

THIS week the British nation stands with bowed heads in the presence of a great common sorrow. From one end of the land to the other, indeed throughout the Empire, hearts are aching as for the loss of a very near and dear friend. Nor is the circle of mourners confined even to the English-speaking peoples. Many another nation besides is gathered with us in spirit round the mortal remains of our beloved Queen, for those who regarded her as a friend were practically as numerous as the civilized human race: personal enemies she had none.

Though, when the Princess ALEXANDRINA VICTORIA was born, in the year 1819, the thought of succession to the throne must have come up, as in connection with any member of the Royal House, the prospect seemed very remote indeed. In the providence of God a very striking course of events opened up the way, so that on the death of her uncle, William the Fourth, she was called upon to assume a burden and responsibility which seemed out of keeping with that fair girlish form. But the disposal of human events is of God. Looking back, men could then see that the quiet years spent at Kensington, with so much seclusion from the gaiety of Court life, had been the most fitting preparation for the great future that lay before. Most faithfully did the Duchess of Kent devote herself to the training of the future Queen, who, while yet an infant, was deprived of a father's loving care. That the Duchess was a woman of strong character, and ventured to differ from many advisers as to the upbringing of her child, the world has since had reason to thank God.

Amid homely and simple surroundings, habits of almost Spartan severity—though surrounded by deepest affection—were inculcated. We almost smile at the exact truthfulness brought out as we read of a governess who admitted that her pupil had been once "rather troublesome," being corrected by the little Princess herself with the words: "No, twice; don't you remember." Fortunately, her religious education was also well attended to. When her knowledge of the Bible at the age of eleven was mentioned as remarkable, the statement was no mere complimentary one; and that the teaching imparted had a spiritual side is borne out by one who tells how, "when visiting at the little village of Arreton, Isle of Wight, the grave of Elizabeth Wallbridge, heroine of Legh Richmond's 'Dairyman's Daughter,' he found seated beside it a lady and a young girl: the latter reading aloud, in a full melodious voice, the touching tale of the Christian maiden." On making inquiry, the narrator was told that his fellow pilgrims to the humble grave were the Duchess of Kent and Princess Victoria.

Though there may have been misgivings in some quarters, it proved to be a blessed day for our country when Queen Victoria ascended the throne. True indications of the woman's heart within, were given by her touching tenderness to the widowed Queen Adelaide, and by her insistence on reigning as simply "Victoria" (her mother's name), thereby causing the cancelling of many official documents which had been prepared in the name of "Alexandrina Victoria." The wise daughter who had made glad the heart of her mother, as a wise Queen has made glad the heart of her people; for the wisdom which marked her life has proved to be that which "is from above," and which "is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy." The reign, begun in prayer—for her first words in the grey of that morning to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who brought the news of the King's death, were, "I beg your Grace to pray for me"—has been one of rich blessing. The fact soon became evident that the new Sovereign was a humble disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Poor little Queen!" wrote Thomas Carlyle. "She is at an age when a girl can hardly be trusted to choose a bonnet for herself, yet a task has been laid upon her from which an archangel might shrink." But she was of the stuff of which heroes are made. From the signing of her first official documents, she has taken an actual oversight of the affairs of the nation, and has day by day done an amount of laborious work, of which few of her subjects had any idea. The beginnings of her reign were stormy and troublous. Poverty was still pressing hard on far too many of the nation's workers. Bread was dear; and the second year of the new reign saw the Chartist outbreaks all over the country. The Queen was never dismayed: her intention was to command the confidence of her subjects by deserving it. At that, and every subsequent time of distress, her heart went out to her suffering people, as that of a mother to her children.

The reign has seen grievous calamities and disasters. In the years 1845-47, a large proportion of the Irish peasantry were reduced to semi-starvation by the failure of the potato crop. Men were dying of hunger, and the Corn Laws made bread artificially dear; 1846 saw the repeal of the Acts, and a signal improvement in the condition of the masses of the people began. Great famines have once and again swept over our Indian dependency. In these, and indeed in every calamity that has befallen the empire, the womanly sympathy behind the Government has been evident to all the world. Calamitous wars have come upon the British arms, and her heart has been torn at the sufferings of the soldiers who have gone forth in her name. It is an open secret that her restraining influence has at times been the means of saving bloodshed, when to all appearance it seemed inevitable. The improvement in the standard of comfort enjoyed by the working classes has been very marked in the course of the reign. Food, covering, and shelter are now within the reach of the labouring classes in a measure which contrasts very strongly with the state of affairs in the earlier years.

The outstanding fact of the Queen's life which strengthened the bond between her and her people was her happy marriage with Prince Albert, and on the dark day when he was taken from her side, the love and tenderness which she had so freely lavished on others was repaid in double measure. A Christian family life, lived in a station so exalted, set an example of untold value before the world. From the day she ascended the throne the purity of the English Court exercised a widening influence throughout Europe, and set an example to all classes of our own people. The rigid exclusion from Court circles of all whose reputations had been justly tainted with the breath of scandal, was a rule to which no exceptions were made. The public acknowledgment of God on great occasions became more than a mere form.

Denied the individual freedom enjoyed by the meanest of her subjects, and amid the loneliness inseparable from her position, the Queen has left a deep and broad mark on the social and religious life of the country and the world. Her sympathies have ever been with the down-trodden and oppressed. In religious matters she has rejoiced in the growth of mission work at home and abroad. The Queen and Prince Consort were intimately identified with every evangelical movement of their time. Men like Dr. Chalmers in earlier years, and Mr. Moody in later days, have found members of the Royal Family among their hearers. The work of Christ is not to be patronized even by Royalty; but it is well when princes recognise the truth, which Andrew Melville uttered to King James the Sixth when he reminded him that there were "two Kings and two Kingdoms in Scotland;" that there was besides himself, "Christ Jesus, the Head of the Church, in whose Kingdom James the Sixth is not a king, nor a head, but a member."

A great and a good woman has gone from us; the mother of her people as we know, a child of God as we firmly believe. Failing health had been pressing on her for some time, and any lady of private position would, in similar circumstances, have been considered to have earned honoured retirement. For the Queen there was no rest. Political events have combined to render the past few months among the most anxious and trying of the long reign. Prayer on her behalf was universal during the closing days; yet in every case in our presence it was notable that while recovery was desired, "if it be thy will," the hearts of leaders yearned more for "a peaceful passing." The weary frame was worn out; and, amid the tears, multitudes have praised the King of kings and Lord of lords for the abundant entrance which He has ministered unto his servant into the everlasting Kingdom.

Notes & Comments

ON Saturday next the great Simultaneous Mission will commence in London, and will continue for ten days. The missioners are to meet in Exeter Hall at 4 o'clock for prayer and conference, afterwards proceeding to their various stations. The work of preparation—at least externally—has been thoroughly done, and thousands of hearts are looking to God for a mighty outpouring of blessing. Let all our readers unite to make the Mission a matter of daily earnest supplication. To touch London is to touch the country at its heart.

It will make a great difference whether we think of this Mission as of God or of men. Think of the fruitless efforts made for years to produce union or unity of various kinds, and of the present movement having sprung up—

> As effortless as woodland nooks
> Send violets up and paint them blue.

He who sent up the violets has sent this Simultaneous Mission of the Free Churches, in which many clergymen of the Establishment are also showing a lively and brotherly interest; in not a few cases extending to promised fellowship in the work.

All Evangelicals will be grateful to Dr. Nicoll for his remarkable and timely article—written in view of the coming Mission—on "The Sword Bathed in Heaven." He, with many others, regards the Mission as a great test as well as a great opportunity. He says:

> In the first place, it seems to us most hopeful that this Mission will compel so many evangelists, preachers and Christian workers, to see that they have a sword. A mission is a decisive test of belief. Have we any truth, any fact with which we can go to an indifferent, unbelieving multitude, and deliver it as a message of immediate peace and salvation? Have we a sword which can be used with faith and ardour? Have we a sword that we have proved? Have we misgivings as to the saving character of our message?

We hope these searching words will travel far. They are still needed. Above all things the message to be delivered must be definite. Vague exhortations to turn to God, or to be better, are so much waste breath. Those who preach must have a Gospel to preach, and it must be Christ's Gospel, not one of their own. The sword must be bathed in heaven.

There are abundant signs, happily, that the old vagueness is passing away from many. We hear much less of the vain boasters whose great virtue was to challenge Evangelical truth. The schemes to attract congregations, and to impose upon them "another Gospel," have obviously broken down in very many places, and there is a return to the old paths. For this we are grateful to God. It is only in proportion as men return to the great Foundation truths of the Gospel—of Sin—Repentance—the Atonement—the Deity of our Lord—and Faith in Him—that there can be a revival of religion. There is a feeling of weariness all round. Many ministers are weary of their failure, congregations of their coldness, and "outsiders" of their disappointed hopes. Now, then, is the time to proclaim, as never before, the Saviour's Divine invitation, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

By his new book, The Ancient Scriptures and the Modern Jew (6s. Hodder & Stoughton), Mr. David Baron places Bible students under renewed obligations. We heartily welcome the work, alike for its expositions of Holy Scripture, and for its explanations of Jewish affairs in their latest phases. To many who may claim to be both versed in Scripture and acquainted with profane history, the Jew is nevertheless a mystery. Just here Mr. Baron's book brings help. Being a Hebrew of the Hebrews, as well an able minister of the new testament, he deals with the Jewish problem in the light of the Divine Word, with its glorious outlook as well as its account of the actual situation. Those who are interested in the people "beloved for the fathers' sakes," will find much to instruct them in these pages.

If the numerical test be applied to the Holy Year pilgrimages to Rome which have just been completed, it is clear that the power of the Papacy and the craving for its "indulgences" and "pardons" is largely dying off. Instead of the three or four million pilgrims that were expected, the 163 pilgrimages made, added to all the pilgrims who came singly, scarcely numbered a quarter of a million, and of these, many were so poor that they were lodged and fed by the Vatican, and ate and drank when and where they could. The monetary results were somewhat better, these amounting to over £320,000; but this sum looks quite insignificant beside the Twentieth Century Funds of the Nonconformist bodies now in progress. The spread of intelligence and education, added to the reflected light of Protestantism (which unconsciously affects many Catholics who would scorn to acknowledge it), is proving too much for the superstitions and pretensions of Rome.

The recent call of several well-known ministers to other spheres of labour, leads a contemporary to remark upon the great strain which city ministers have to endure in preparing two and three sermons per week for the same congregation, and the suggestion is made that the appointment of two ministers, who should preach in turn, might meet the difficulty and lessen the strain. Rather than duplicating the ministers for a congregation, might there not be a wider adoption of the Methodist practice, by which two or more congregations might unite to have the benefit of an equal number of ministers in alternation? There is also need for a levelling-up of the congregations to the Scriptural idea of ministry. The object of the ministry is not to create a caste, but (as the Apostle declares) to create ministers among all Christians (Eph. iv. 11-12, R.V.).

The strain of preparing two and three sermons per week for the same people is unnecessary. There is far too little Bible study among our people, and if instead of so many sermons being prepared, with their subtleties of thought and felicities of expression, congregations were invited to study the Divine Word itself, the work of the teacher would become far more delightful, and congregations would be infinitely more profited than they are under many sermons. It is never a "strain" for a Christian teacher to speak of things which fill his own soul with joy. He who explores the gold mine of the Bible, giving out its treasures to his people, will never complain of the strain. It is an open question, indeed, whether the modern "sermon" is really the best vehicle for conveying the Divine thought to men.

Yet there must be study. Too much time may be given to comparatively unimportant matters of detail and organization, which could have been attended to just as well by a lay helper. A somewhat famous and very successful preacher of our acquaintance, who had many tasks out of the pulpit, used to meet the difficulty by early rising, and used to say that the richest dew fell in his study at 6 a.m. If there is to be success, prayer and study are imperative. "I prevented the dawning of the morning . . . mine eyes prevent the night watches that I might meditate in thy Word" (Psa. cxix. 147-8).

We are extremely sorry to see in a religious contemporary an article making light of the decline of family worship. There is no need, surely, for an acceleration of the decided trend of our young people towards indifferentism. It is a caricature of the old family worship to describe it as "intolerably irksome," and associated with "compulsory early rising, or with compulsory scurrying home in the evening and the obligation to go to bed immediately it was over." If this was the writer's experience then we are sorry for him, but he has no right to decry a holy institution because of an unhappy personal experience. The decline of family worship is due to very different causes from those adduced in the article referred to. If there is no recognition of God in the home, is it surprising that He is omitted from society? Since the family is the fountain which feeds the stream of the State, we must get back to the sanctification of the former if the latter is to be pure.

The following trenchant and timely utterance comes from the pen of the author of "Mark Rutherford":—

> I believe that the time is coming when it will be the duty of upright electors to ask themselves in the first place, not what the imperial politics of a candidate are, but whether he is honest. I do not mean whether he can be bribed with money—bribery with money is not fashionable now—but whether he can be trusted to obey his conscience, and do his duty to the people who send him to Parliament.
> A large and increasing minority of the House of Commons represents, and in many cases professedly, great corporations, or interests, as they are called, and combine in a solid phalanx whenever these interests are touched. This evil is growing, and if it continues to grow, the interests will be omnipotent, and the people will be bound hand and foot.

Having spent all his life in the Civil Service, and seen much of the inner side of the House of Commons, the writer speaks with the authority of a trained and honest observer of men and affairs.

There is a remarkable resemblance between the conditions of life against which the prophet Amos protested in the name of God, and those which prevail amongst us at the present hour. The luxury and covetousness and land grabbing which the prophet anathematized flourish in our midst. And the same warnings which he uttered in the name of the Lord need uttering by the servants of God at this moment. Indeed, with scarcely an alteration, the greater part of the Book of Amos might well be applied to our modern civilization.

Mr. Ritchie made it very plain to the deputation that waited upon him last week that the Government has no intention of promoting temperance legislation. A London daily, in a brilliant leader, caustically remarked—"The Government is convinced that temperance would turn them out, and that drink will keep them in." Of what use is it blandly to inform a deputation that "the drink evil is a very terrible one, and something should be done to diminish the curse of excessive drinking"? We all know that, but we expect a strong Government to do something practical in the way of grappling with the evil.

We are not forgetful of the enormous difficulties connected with the question of compensation—the bête noir of so many—but the country has had to face far graver difficulties than this. There is more than a touch of cowardice about this hesitation. Some definite action must be taken, and that speedily, unless we are prepared to welcome the publican as one of the chief factors in social and moral progress! We are sadly afraid, however, that the spirit which animated the last election is inimical to home reform.

The Wolverhampton magistrates have set a good example in sentencing to a month's imprisonment with hard labour a debased father, for having given his child intoxicating drink to such an extent that, according to the evidence, the child became "staggering drunk." Ought not something to have been done, however, in regard to the conduct of the two publicans who permitted such conduct in their licensed premises? Surely the "vested interests" of which we hear so much do not cover a case of this kind.

The report of the first year's working of the Inebriates Act of 1898, by which habitual drunkards may be compulsorily sent to a Home at the discretion of the authorities, is, on the whole, very satisfactory. Five Inebriates' Reformatories were founded during 1900, and several others, including one started by Lady Henry Somerset, have been duly licensed under the Act. Eighty-eight cases were received into these institutions, in all of which the conviction was for simple drunkenness, and there are marked instances of benefit received. Besides these, some excellent results are recorded of good done in the "voluntary" retreats previously established. Of 561 patients treated here in 1899, 183 are reported as "doing well," 41 had improved, and of the rest 102 had not been heard of. When the stay of patients is made compulsory still better results are to be hoped for. Many more reformatories, however, are needed, for to Holloway prison alone 11,000 women were committed last year, of which 4,000 were "habituals." Many of these would be glad to leave their evil ways, if their good resolutions were helped by proper medical treatment.

The report upon rowdyism and Hooliganism presented to the London County Council by the Council's Committee certainly seems to go to the root of the matter, in attributing the serious development of ruffianism to overcrowding, the irregular attendance at school of a large proportion of the children of the poorest class, the absence of opportunity for healthy exercise and amusement, the early age at which working-class girls and boys go out into the world and become wage-earners, and last, but by no means least, the atmosphere of vice and crime which surrounds a large proportion of the poorest class from infancy. We trust that the "Twentieth Century League," which it is proposed to organize at the Mansion House on the 30th instant, may be able to devise means of dealing with the causes rather than the effects, viz., the temptations and demoralizing influences at the foundation of our lower-class life.

To be able to do this to any extent effectually the League must include men who are not afraid to rank the drink traffic in its proper place, as the most potent factor in the production of poverty and vice and crime, and who believe that there can be no true and lasting reform effected unless Christ be lifted up as the Saviour of men.

The fact that there were nearly 3,000 arrests for drunkenness in Paris alone last year, is a striking illustration of the need for that legislation against alcohol which has just been so successfully inaugurated in the French Chamber. No doubt the new duties which have been imposed upon spirits will have the desired effect of reducing the consumption, for they are heavy enough to necessitate considerably increased charges at the drinking shops—in the case of some articles quite 50 per cent. This will strengthen the hands of the temperance reformers, military and otherwise, who are fighting against the drink curse, and it is to be regretted that we do not have similar wise legislation in England, which instead of that fosters the brewer and the distiller, and throws upon the steady and industrious citizen the heavy burden of providing for the poverty and the cost of the crime due to their handiwork.

Switzerland is furnishing an important object-lesson in temperance reform on a large scale. As many as 455 temperance restaurants have been erected in the principal towns. Refreshments are sold a little above cost price, the financial results of the experiment being guaranteed by a company of wealthy people interested in the movement. The poorer classes find these restaurants a great boon, and are commencing to forsake the cafes in their favour. In Zurich there is also a splendidly successful temperance hotel, "entirely managed by Swiss ladies determined to fight the hotel-keepers on their own ground." The Government is encouraging the scheme by granting free licences to temperance establishments, and not taxing the beverages. Where the authorities join with enlightened public opinion in a needed reform, the conditions exist which command success.

The question whether Christianity is declining in this country and in America, is one that has been often discussed, with diverse results. The latest treatment of the question, so far as the States are concerned, is from the pen of Dr. Daniel Dorchester, who is described as the chief authority on the subject, and who deals with facts running back for the last century. His conclusion, so far as numbers go, is distinctly encouraging. In 1800, there were in America 3,030 churches of all creeds, with 364,872 communicants. There are now 172,406 churches, with 17,784,475 communicants. This is a greater increase than that of the population, for in 1800, it meant that there was one communicant in 14·5 inhabitants, and now there is one in every 4·2 inhabitants. Protestants have increased out of proportion to Catholics, in spite of so much said to the contrary, most of the latter being by immigration from Catholic countries.

Of course, these figures only deal with the externalities of the question. Profession is not religion at any time, and there are times when it gives scarcely any indication of the spiritual state of the community. The standards of church fellowship vary greatly in the different churches, and from one generation to another. What is wanted just now, it seems to us, is not an increase in the numbers of professed Christians, but a raising of the tone of Christian life as a whole. Not those that say "Lord, Lord," but those who "do the will of God" are the true disciples; and just as a blunt knife loses substance when it is sharpened, so it may be needful that the true Church should lose in numbers before it can be improved in quality. There is no question more necessary to face at the beginning of this century than this—What is the actual standard of Christian living amongst us, and how far does it represent that of the New Testament?

According to an expert who writes in the Nineteenth Century and After, the recrudescence of juvenile crime and brutality is not due, as many have alleged, to the reflex action of the reformatory system. On the contrary, the writer proves by statistics that the great majority of those who have been discharged from reformatories and industrial schools have become good citizens, colonists, soldiers, and sailors. Only the few relapse. The discipline of these institutions acts in a most salutary manner upon the untrained and the badly trained youths who are ordered thither.

We are quite in agreement with the suggestion that all false sentiment should be put away in dealing with young criminals, and that it is the profoundest mistake to send back to criminal haunts youths and girls who have come within the working of the law. When it is remembered that more than one-third of the burglars in the country are under twenty-one years of age, and that one-third of all the crimes against morals are committed by youths between sixteen and twenty-one, surely it is for their interests as well as for the interests of the community, that they should be placed under the rigid discipline which the aforementioned institutions supply.

A very remarkable document has been published in Japan, purporting to be an appeal from the heads of all sections of the Buddhist faith in that country addressed to those who are engaged in missionary work in China. They appeal to us to make it clear to the Chinese that we have no political and mercenary motives in sending missionaries to them, and to commend our religion in the most gentle, conciliatory, and loving manner. We do not know why Buddhists should manifest this friendly interest in the work of evangelizing a sister nation; but such a document is indicative, at any rate, of the breaking down of prejudices against Christianity in quarters that have hitherto shown strong hostility to it as a "rival" religion. It suggests as much hope for the Buddhists of Japan, as it points a wise moral to missionaries in China. It is at least a cheering sign of the times.

The Pope and the Temporal Power.

By Rev. ALEX. ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

THE whole Press of Italy is up in arms against the Duke of Norfolk, because of his recent address to the Pope. Some express surprise that an Englishman could be found so forgetful of every sense of decency as to come to Rome to insult a friendly Sovereign and people. Others treat him as a fanatic. Others, again, have demanded a Government inquiry, and his expulsion from Italian soil. It will be noticed that he did depart somewhat quickly. The speech contained three evils on which I would like briefly to touch. (1) It was an act of treason in the sight of Italian law. (2) It calumniated Protestant Christian workers, and their work in Rome and Italy. (3) It breathed a spirit of intolerance worthy of the Spanish Inquisition.

(1) By certain clauses in the new penal code, anyone favouring the return of the temporal power of the Pope is guilty of treason, for practically that carries with it a desire for the overthrow of the Sovereign and the House of Savoy, and the disintegration of the Kingdom of Italy. As is well known, Italy's unity as a kingdom, with Rome for its capital, was brought about by Victor Emmanuel's troops entering the Eternal City on September 20, 1870—an ever-memorable day; and from that date till now the country has made unparalleled progress in everything that relates to the well-being of a people—materially, intellectually, morally, and spiritually. The return of the Pope's temporal power would bring with it the return of a state of things that no right thinking man can contemplate without a shudder. It would mean the return of a reign of despotism, of cruelty, of ignorance, of poverty, of misery, of squalor, of sin and crime.

Under the temporal power of the Popes, eighty per cent. of the population in Rome could neither read nor write; there was no liberty, all were confined to their houses between sunset and sunrise; there was no lighting, lamps and candles were forbidden lest people might meet to form plans for freedom; there were no newspapers, no sanitation, no law and justice.

PEOPLE WERE IMPRISONED

at the nod of a priest, and lay without trial in prison cells to die. Spies were everywhere. The sbirri (hired assassins) were in the employ of the Church. The brigands went regularly to Rome for absolution, for which they paid heavily, thus practically sharing their spoils of robbery and murder with the Pope. Medical advice was denied to the sick who did not first see a priest, and all wills were cancelled which did not convey legacies to the Church. Pope-and-priest rule means simply the rule of the Prince of Darkness, only something worse, for he, I daresay, knows how to govern, but as Metternich, fighting for the Pope, said, the Church does not. Yet this is the state of matters the Duke of Norfolk desires to see re-established.

(2) The Duke of Norfolk calumniated Protestant workers in Italy. He said that their teaching corrupted the young and the poor in the land. Protestants teach the Word of God, and they instil into the young mind the precepts and example of Jesus Christ. But evidently the Bible, and the Word and Life of our Lord, are engines of corruption in the estimation of the Duke and the Church which he represents. Of course such teaching, when received, invariably causes its recipients to break with the Roman Catholic Church. Such teaching leads to conversion, to regeneration of heart and of life; but when that takes place, the hope of the Church's gains is gone, for the Church trades and traffics in sin. It, practically, offers to all, for so much hard cash, salvation in a life of sin. It teaches one to confess, to pay for absolution, and, as Italians have said often to me, "in order that we may go off and sin again and pay again." It is, as Professor Mariano has said, "A kind of assurance society for those whose hearts are not touched by God's grace." It is, as Mr. Ruskin calls it, "The Church of the unholy." That is why sin and ignorance, and vice and crime abound in all lands where the Papal Church has power. One can understand how an institution of this kind fears the teaching of Protestants, and the proclamation of the mission of Jesus Christ as being "to save his people from their sins." If teaching the young to be holy in heart and life is to corrupt them, then Protestant Christian workers in Rome and Italy confess to the Duke of Norfolk's charge. The Papal Church shows how men can be brought to call light darkness, and darkness light, put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter.

(3) The Duke's speech was intolerant in the last degree. It lamented the liberty which Protestant workers enjoy under the Constitutional Government of Italy to spread the truth as it is in Jesus. He would have that liberty taken away. He would like to see again, I suppose, the horrors of the Inquisition set up in Rome and in other parts of Italy. The Papal Church and its fanatics, although they are not all so intolerant as the Duke, is semper eadem. Protestants are not murdered, simply because the Church

HAS NOT THE POWER TO DO SO.

And then, in the same breath in which the Duke laments the Church's lack of power to persecute Protestants, he thanks God for the liberty the Roman Catholic Church enjoys in Protestant England! "Give us liberty, for it is in accordance with your principles; we give you none, for it is in accordance with ours." We believe in religious liberty, but let us never forget that the Papal Church is a political conspiracy and an engine of demoralization, and that, therefore, so far as it is concerned, "A Free Church in a Free State" means a Church free to damage that State.

Daybreak in Livingstonia.

DURING the closing years of the nineteenth century missionary literature reached a higher level than had been possible before. Notable books have appeared from time to time since men and women began to carry abroad the glad tidings of salvation; and to those who had ears to hear many an annual report spoke with power. But the passing years have brought us to a new point of view, and in books like Daybreak in Livingstonia (5s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier), by James W. Jack, M.A., we have not a mere résumé of what has been done during a number of years, but a summing up of the experience gained, and a pointing out of the leading and teaching of God, well worthy of an honoured place in English literature. We are presented with a brief narrative of the work of Dr. Livingstone, followed by an account of the movement which led up to the foundation of this great memorial. The preparation of the first expedition, with its perils by sea and land, are described in most interesting fashion, and the reader will be made of stern stuff indeed whose heart is not touched by the thought of the singing of that Psalm of praise, on October 12, 1875, as the Ilala steamed out of the River Shiré into Lake Nyassa.

"We cannot be too thankful for the friendly welcome accorded to the first band of Livingstonia missionaries." It is indeed a great contrast to the early experience of the Universities Mission in the same region; but it is worthy of note that the founders of the Mission were actually indebted for this to the memory treasured by the natives of the doings of the great explorer himself in 1859.

Events have marched so rapidly that it is almost with surprise we read of the restrictions laid down by the British Government at first, one of which prevented active interference with the slave trade. We can well understand Dr. Laws' righteous indignation on hearing that several of his young workmen had been seized, and were already on their way in chains to the coast. The long struggle with the slave traders is recounted, with its many vicissitudes. Few at home have realized how often the lives of the missionaries have been in imminent danger, and the Mission threatened with total extinction. The greatness of the evil forces arrayed against them is shown, and we can see clearly the working of the good hand of their God ensuring victory in the end.

Many heroes of the field live before the reader, with Dr. Laws at the head of the list, side by side with Dr. Stewart (of Lovedale), both of whom saw the beginning, and "remain to this present." Some have now gone to their reward—among them Mr. E. D. Young (whose heroic efforts at the outset can never be forgotten), Dr. Black, Mr. James Stewart, C.E.; Rev. J. Alexander Bain, Dr. George Henry, Dr. George Steele, Dr. Roby Fletcher, and many more who counted not their lives too dear to be given for the Gospel's sake. Among those who are still bearing the heat and burden of day we read of Dr. Elmslie, Rev. A. G. McAlpine, Rev. Alexander Dewar, Rev. Donald Fraser.

The serious nature of the language difficulty is brought out by a mere enumeration of the tongues spoken in the district, and of the separate books translated into them. It is satisfactory to read of the effort now being made to bring out "a common Nyanja Bible, based upon the most useful form of the language, and suitable to all the missions in British Central Africa where Njanja tribes are found." High testimony has been borne by H. B. M. Commissioner to the extent and value of the linguistic work accomplished.

Great things have been attempted in faith, and the results have been marvellous. The makings of an empire have been added to the British dominions; better than all, the foundations have been laid of a great native Church, with that self-propagating power which gives promise of the evangelization of what our fathers knew as the Dark Continent.

Soldiers in South Africa.

IN a recent letter, Mrs. M. S. Osborn Howe says:—"We should like to thank your readers for all the help we have received from them for the Camp Homes, which are even more needed now than they were at the beginning of the campaign. Of the twenty-four which we opened during the past year, eight are still centres of activity and blessing. There is no diminution of interest in the meetings, and not a few have expressed their thankfulness when ordered to a camp where a Home exists.

"A gift of Marked Testaments was very valuable. They were distributed between the Home at Springfontein, near the Orange River, and the one at Pretoria, at the smaller camps, where the men have no spiritual help.

"A non-commissioned officer, who has received blessing at one of the Homes, told us that when he was leaving England his wife said, 'I should like to put up a Bible with your kit.' "If you do, I shall throw it overboard," was his reply. He had his last walk with her, holding the hand of his little daughter, who sang again and again the verse, John iii. 16, and said to him, "The world did not love God, father, but God loved the world." This thought greatly impressed him, and on coming amongst us, a hospital orderly gave him a copy of the Marked Testament. The advertisement sheet dropped out. On picking it up, he found that very verse that had been a voice to him, met his eye, so striking, within its circle of red. He was arrested by it, and began to come regularly to our meetings. The love of God has conquered, and he is now a happy Christian.

"Desperate fighting is going on some fifteen miles from us, and the wounded are being brought into camp. For some time past we have had skirmishes not far out, and around us. Mr. Howe and myself are again starting for the Transvaal, to spend a few weeks at our Homes there."

Cherchell, Algeria.—Mr. H. Duval Day has been giving much time to the rendering of St. Matthew into Colloquial Arabic, as he did with St. John a few years ago—for use among uneducated natives, who are able to read a little, and yet cannot understand the Syrian Arabic version of the Scriptures.

"A New Reformation" in France.

A remarkable article on the Protestant movement in Auvergne recently appeared in the French paper Le Siècle. It was headed, "Let us Break with Rome." We give a translation of the substance of the article.

JUST now there is going on in several of our provinces, which have hitherto been considered the most devoted to the Romish religion, a series of events so unexpected, and of such a nature, that we may well ask, Are we not looking on at a new Reformation, and will not the twentieth century witness another and important secession from Roman Catholicism? We have already indicated the progress which Protestantism is making in Italy, particularly among the Waldensians, who have, in Calabria alone, increased tenfold in the last ten years. And in Austria-Hungary, a few months ago, a whole village of 12,000 souls, headed by their priests, went over to the Greek Church. The Bohemians are abandoning the old faith by thousands, with the cry, "Let us break free from Rome." But what is most remarkable in the French movement is, that it is springing up in different places—about Paris, in Picardy, in the Limousin, and in Auvergne. The people seem waking up, and many who were conconsidered incapable of such an effort give proof of a remarkable energy in ridding themselves once for all of clerical domination.

In La Corrèze, Auvergne, the religious movement is most intense. It began a few years ago in the department of Puy-le-Dome, by the conversion to Protestantism of two communes. That of Madranges, a village of La Corrèze, made a great sensation, and loud were the lamentations made by the Roman Catholic Press over the event. Other villages followed its example, and the Bishop of Tulle warned his clergy that they were confronted by a danger which

MENACED THE WHOLE OF FRANCE.

But in spite of their efforts, the Protestant movement still continues, and is gaining steadily on the villages, towns, and hamlets of La Corrèze. Five pastors have already settled there, and others are arriving. Two have taken up their residence at Tulle and Brive, and, besides these two places, have the duty of Denhiac, Vignols, and Concèze.

Four places around Madranges have just called in the pastor, M. Creissel, recently installed in that town. At Mercial there is a school of about thirty children, and a great many adults attend the meetings. Similar results have occurred at Marcillon. Both places invited a pastor a year and a half ago; and at Saint-Jai, the mayor himself called in M. Creissel, who has a congregation there of 500.

Besides the places above mentioned, and their immediate neighbourhood, who are all following the movement, there is Treignac, the capital of a province and seat of a college, where Evangelical Protestant worship has recently been established, and where last week a most enthusiastic crowd filled a hall to hear a lecture on the Protestant Church, which existed at Treignac in the seventeenth century. The example of Treignac was followed by Pradines, which, with its municipal council, invited the pastor, who held his meeting in the mayor's house. Gourdon did likewise, and Chambéret, which manifested great eagerness to have the new form of worship. These four places have the same minister. In short, during the last few months, have been thrown open to Protestantism in the department of La Corrèze alone. The movement is strongest in the northern part, but all the surrounding neighbourhood are ready to accept Protestantism. There is no check anywhere; on the contrary, the Protestant pastors are overwhelmed with invitations to extend their work, and need help, as they are quite unable to respond to the appeals they receive daily. The impulse is spreading. The inhabitants of one village hear of the religious discussions going on in the next, and want to have a meeting of their own.

SIXTEEN TOWNS AND VILLAGES

And it must be acknowledged that certain social as well as moral benefits attend the movement, and may account for some of this ardour. At Madranges, before this reformation took place, no child attending the communal school could pass an examination or take a certificate, but during the two years since it began four pupils in 1899 and six in 1900 have done so. And the desire to see their children well educated is so great among these good people, that a woman of eighty has resumed the care of the sheep in order to allow her grand-daughter to attend school regularly and obtain her certificate.

Material prosperity has attended moral reform; religious conferences have been supplemented by those on political economy, agriculture and social matters. Societies have been founded, as for example that called "The Solidarity of Madranges." The fields having been better cultivated, the harvest increased threefold. The prosperity of the Protestant villages induces others to follow their example. Thus the Protestant movement continues to spread like a drop of oil, continually enlarging its circle.

Perils in Barotsiland.

ON Thursday evening, last week, Captain Alfred Bertrand, F.R.G.S., of the Swiss Federal Army, a well-known African explorer and traveller in South America and the Far East, delivered a lecture in the Swiss Church, London — many young men being present—on "A Meeting with Rev. F. Coillard in Barotsiland." The speaker gave a vivid account of his experiences with his friends Major A. St. Hill Gibbons and Mr. Percy Reid during their travels in 1895, when Barotsiland was unexplored, and almost unknown. By the difficulties they then encountered, thirst, wild beasts, and the character of the country and the people, he was able to estimate those overcome by the earliest missionaries. What astonished him first was to see the manual work (churches, buildings, &c.) accomplished by these men and women of the French Protestant Mission in a country where everything, absolutely everything, had to be made by their own hands from the raw material, and that was far from plentiful.

But, after living some weeks on a mission station, he was far more impressed by their moral conquests. In King Lewanika, known to him by report as he found a reverent worshipper and courteous host. Perfect order reigned in the schools, and the heir-apparent, Litia, is a consistent Christian. By the king's orders, witchburning, the trial by ordeal of poison or boiling water, infanticide and slave trading, had all been forbidden. What he saw and heard then showed him that foreign missions were, in the fullest sense, the apology for Christianity.

Many in these days doubted of Christianity. Let such ask themselves what power had accomplished these transformations in a space of ten years? What could seven men and women do in a country twice the size of the United Kingdom? He himself and his companions entered the country prepared, if need be, to sell their lives dearly. But M. and Mme. Coillard and their colleagues had lived there unarmed for years, exposed to every kind of threat and violence. Often they had been boycotted almost to starvation, and M. and Mme. Adolphe Jalla had risked being burnt to death, some miscreants having planned to set fire to their station in four places. What power had protected these defenceless people for so long?

He specially wished to bring home to people in Europe two things which missionaries could not and would not say for themselves, which only an impartial witness could say for them; namely, the heroic character of their enterprise, and the daily sufferings of their lives. Theirs was no dilettante work. He had witnessed it from day to day for months, and it seemed to him miraculous that men, and especially women, delicately brought up, could possibly work so hard, to say nothing of the privations they endured, and still worse, their moral sufferings in having to see every day, and all day, evils which civilization at least veils from our eyes. He and his companions, in crossing the Makarikari desert, well equipped, had suffered from torments of thirst, from lions who killed their horses, and from climate and other obstacles. Mme. Goy, after her husband's sudden death, having to return to her relatives in the South, had to cross this same desert, on foot, during three weeks, carrying a child of three in her arms, alone save for two heathen porters on their way to the mines, and without even a tent to shelter her at night. Husbands saw their wives die, wives their husbands, parents their children, for want of the things which we at home consider necessaries. Having seen with his own eyes what they were doing and suffering, he felt, when he came back to Europe, he must discover the most practical method to assure the continuance of the work; and this had been found in Zambesias, locally founded, the members of which agreed to pay annually a fixed sum into the Zambesi Fund of the Paris Evangelical Mission, besides what they give to other mission work. The work of missions must not be only that of a few men and women who go to the front; it must be the work of the whole body of Christians everywhere.

Captain Bertrand pleaded the cause of missions from four motives. (1) Duty. Evidently for Christians there could be no appeal from the command to "preach the Gospel through the whole world." (2) Compassion. The heathen are anything but happy. It is impossible to realize their misery when one has only lived in countries where laws and thoughts and customs are penetrated with Christianity. (3) Justice. The heathen know nothing of this. (4) Necessity. These countries have been opened up, and the white and black races mingle in constant intercourse. Many of these white men are opposed to mission work. Some of them, alas! are the proof of how much missions are needed. White men who do not try to raise the blacks sometimes sink to their level.

Captain Bertrand bespoke a cordial welcome for M. and Mme. A. Jalla on their approaching visit to England and Scotland to hold meetings during February and March.

Work in Argentina.

CHEERING news comes from Mr. and Mrs. Linton, who are labouring in San Pedro among Spanish-speaking people. In a booklet recently issued by the South American Evangelical Mission and Union of Prayer Circles some particulars are given of their work. A Sabbath school is carried on with an attendance of over fifty, a day school, and two night classes for Scripture study. All this, however, lessens the opportunities for mastering the Indian tongue, and Mr. Linton writes:—"As soon as the Master counts everything ready He will surely speak to some willing soul to come up here and give their life, and they will come and be blessed in coming. We shall stay on, and anyhow we learn some Chiriguano every day, and a lot of children are getting a thorough grounding in the Gospel. We can wait, as we wait on the Lord and not on man."

For some weeks Messrs. Garratt and Wilson have been carrying on their Bible selling and visitation work, from San Pedro as a base. Their latest journey was to Oran, 125 miles to the north, visiting during their seventeen days' absence some 600 families. A woman in one village bought a Testament on a previous trip, said to the priest when told to burn it, "If there is anything bad in it; but if not, no."

Mr. Wilson gives particulars of a mule ride undertaken by himself and another worker, covering a distance of 636 miles. "We visited about 1,520 homes, and read to the people from God's Word. In these homes we sold 140 Bibles, 166 Testaments, and 183 Gospels, besides distributing books and tracts. In one town, with a population of about 800 souls, and not more than two Bibles among all, we sold 102 copies of God's Word."

Islington Clerical Meeting.

THE PAST AND THE FUTURE.

EVANGELICAL clergy from all parts of the country, to the number of 800, assembled at the Islington Clerical Meeting on Tuesday of last week. It will be remembered that last year the choice of speakers was made from a wider sphere than usual—a more than doubtful experiment. This year a return was made to the old order of things, and the proceedings were thoroughly representative of the best Evangelical thought. The meeting having outgrown the accommodation of Islington Memorial Hall, the gatherings were held in Mildmay Conference Hall, and never have the faithful attendants of this annual assembly met in more congenial circumstances.

It was only natural and fitting that the first gathering of the New Century should be occupied with retrospect. There was much that was encouraging in the reviews of the past hundred years, and much to inspire Evangelical Churchmen to face the future with RENEWED HOPE AND ZEAL.

As usual, the meeting opened with an outline of the scope of the day's proceedings from the Chairman, the Vicar of Islington. Prebendary Barlow reminded his hearers that they had met to ask themselves, What was God's will concerning them and their work in the light of past history and present promise? The general subject for discussion was "The Old Century and the New—Experiences of the Past and Lessons for the Future," and its main divisions were touched upon by the Chairman, who, in reviewing the work of the Church during the century, found that much had been done in the right direction, but much more remained to be taken in hand. The condition of the masses in our large centres of population is still the cause of intense anxiety. Drunkenness, gambling, open vice, neglect of all that is virtuous and honourable, make a condition of things at which workers are almost heartbroken. Evangelistic effort is the supreme necessity of the time, and the resources of the Church must be made thoroughly available for the work to be done. The laity must have a recognised share in the work, their spiritual gifts being turned to full account, and their efforts guided to a more beneficial channel.

Touching reference was made by Dr. Barlow to the disaster which has overtaken missionary organizations in China, and a resolution of condolence with friends of the sufferers and societies affected was adopted, praying that God would "speedily avenge his slaughtered saints by mighty spiritual conquests in China for Himself."

PURITY OF DOCTRINE AND WORSHIP

was the title of the first paper, by Rev. N. Dimock, which recognised the deadness of the Church a hundred years ago—of formalism and dread of anything approaching living enthusiasm; and dealt with the great Evangelical revival, with its outcome of missionary energy at home and abroad. Mr. Dimock went on to describe the movement to close the open door of the New Covenant, in witness of which the Reformation martyrs laid down their lives. He pleaded fervently for more reality, depth, earnestness, and enthusiasm in spiritual life, and urged the need for counteracting the self-satisfaction which latitudinarianism and rationalism have produced.

The personal side of Christian life was dealt with by Rev. H. E. Fox, and his address was received with every token of appreciation.

"HOLINESS OF LIFE"

was Mr. Fox's subject, regarded more from the Divine than the human standpoint. It is not only a moral but essentially a spiritual quality; it is not only a series of actions, it is a character, a habit which governs mind and motive, word and deed; it is that harmony between the human and Divine will, which is the first condition of communion with God. The speaker referred to the personal influence and teaching of, among others, John Newton, who lived till 1807; Richard Cecil, who died in 1810; Thos. Scott in 1821. The continuity of their witness with that of the earlier Evangelicals was unbroken. Like them, they laid their foundations deep. They spoke plainly of the nature and consequences of sin, of the sinner's need both for reconciliation and regeneration. The Atonement and the New Birth, a free and full salvation by faith in the blood of Christ, were preached as fully and clearly as by those before them. They taught holiness because they were holy. By holiness they understood the practice and habit of a lifetime. Passing on to a later movement, Mr. Fox spoke of Conventions, which extend far beyond the bounds of the Church of England; and finally drew timely lessons from the past for the future.

POWER IN EVANGELIZATION.

To Rev. Canon Aitken was allotted the duty of dealing with the development and results of the revival movement and missions. The Canon recalled the time when evangelizing work of the kind with which we are now familiar had to be carried on almost surreptitiously, and created something akin to consternation in the sensitive hearts of the leading ecclesiastics of the period. He drew a contrast between the treatment of evangelists in the present and in the past, a cheering feature of the times, bearing witness as it does to the increased spiritual life of the Church and nation. His conviction that "there never were so many truly converted men and women in our Church as there are to-day," is doubtless the conviction of many others of less, but still wide, experience. The most wonderful spiritual phenomenon of the century, Canon Aitken maintained, was the visit to our shores of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in 1873, and the reaping time that followed. This was not a Church movement, but in those days Moody found in the clergy of the Church his most trusted and sympathetic fellow-workers, and his influence upon the preaching and the methods of the clergy remains to-day—a legacy of inestimable value. But mission work to-day is

NOT WITHOUT ITS DIFFICULTIES.

This phase of the question was commented upon also. The absolute indifference to things spiritual that is painfully characteristic of our times, is the most distressing feature of the case. This was deplored by the speaker, who remarked that while professed infidelity and atheism, nay even secularism, are not nearly so frequently met with, at any rate among the working classes, as they used to be—there is a half-unbelieving tone which pervades society, and is doing a more deadly work than was ever done by the open attacks of avowed scepticism.

Canon Aitken is far from thinking that the day for missions has gone by, and only wishes that they could have a chance given them, for it is obvious that this has never been accorded. After thirty years only the fringe of the work has been touched, particularly in rural districts, where the results of missions are much larger than in towns. The financial question must also be faced, and the poorer country clergy must be enabled to face the spiritual responsibilities of a mission without being worried by the thought of increased expenditure, when they are at their wits' end to know how existing liabilities are to be met. While being far from pessimistic on the subject of evangelistic work, the Canon asked, "Have our people—at least many of them—that yearning love for souls, that constraining force of grateful love to Christ, which led to so much self-denying effort, to so much in times gone by? If we are to attain to power in evangelizing work, it is here that we must begin; we need revival if we are to be successful in our missions. That word, discredited though perhaps it may have been by extravagances in the past, is the right word after all, though the word 'mission' is not a wrong one. Our missions are but a continuation of the mission of Him who was sent of the Father to bring salvation to a perishing world." A disposition has been observed to insist that the revival of the twentieth century must be ethical rather than emotional. Neither, the speaker urged, will meet the need of the age. There is only one kind of revival that deserves to be called a revival, and that is a spiritual one. It is only when the spirit of the son of man comes into touch with the Spirit of the living God; when the prayer and claim of faith, with holy, reverent boldness command the intervention of Omnipotence; when the cry, "Come, O Breath, breathe upon these slain, and they shall live," liberates the Divine energy, and gives to God his opportunity, that the dead are actually raised, and that is revival.

The last paper of the morning session was by the Bishop of Coventry on the EFFECTIVENESS OF ORGANIZATION.

It was read by Canon Sutton, who contended that the Church was often little more than a mission station, ministering to a small section compared with the multitudes unreached. These gaps, in which little or nothing is being done, are growing daily and becoming more conspicuous. Side by side with this he lamented the decrease of candidates for Holy Orders. These were circumstances that should cause serious searchings of heart, for he saw no reason to expect while they lasted that the Church would continue to hold its unique position; the logic of facts would deprive it of the claim to be national.

In the afternoon, the subject considered was

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND ABROAD.

Dr. Townsend sketched the work done by the various societies for the promotion of Christianity among the Jews; Canon Denton Thompson reviewed the operations of the Church among English colonists; and Rev. Grantley C. Martin dealt with missionary work among the heathen and Mohammedans, deploring the indifference of Churchmen, and want of zeal among clergymen towards missionary work. Mr. Martin dwelt upon the Church's duty, response, opportunity, and danger, and urged that if only the Church would rise to the task, she would become the great missionary Church of the West. "Then, and only then, will our nation be secure, for our foundations will be upon the holy hills." The final subject, was next taken up. It was approached on the part of speakers and listeners with a deep sense of solemnity, which could not but surround all thought of the other subjects with added impressiveness. The first speaker was Rev. Hubert Brooke, who affirmed that every fact revealed concerning the life of our Lord is intended to be a factor in the lives of his people; and if every past and present story of Christ is thus bound up with his people, the glorious climax of it all in his Second Coming must have its intended force and power for our lives also. Mr. Brooke then considered the subject in the light of Old Testament prophecy and the teaching of the New. The Epistles were taken in order, and the universality of reference to the subject, and the remarkable and wide diversity in the purpose and outcome of those references, was noted. The Church's attitude was fittingly summed up in the three words: Acceptation, Anticipation, and Acceleration.

THE SECOND ADVENT OF CHRIST,

Prebendary Webb-Peploe, in a characteristic and impressive address, spoke of the Second Advent as having a practical effect, a practical purpose, and a practical teaching; and asked with feeling and solemnity, "Is there one of the signs which the Master gave as precedent to his own return in the flesh which yet remains unfulfilled for those who study Scripture and history?" The speaker then dwelt upon the attitude of the Church, which should be one of waiting, watching, and working, and fervently prayed that the Master would so speak to all concerning this event that in one single instant, if they heard the trumpet or the voice that says: "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet Him," everyone might be enabled to say, "This is our God; we have waited for Him."

The tone of the meeting throughout was one of concord, and the most careful endeavour was made to refrain from the glorification of any one school of thought, in the strict application of true doctrine, and a right apprehension of personal holiness.

SUNDAY, January 27. Ezekiel xxiv.

THE date of this prophecy is the very day on which Nebuchadnezzar began his last siege of Jerusalem (2 Kings xxv. 1; Jer. xxxix. 1, lii. 4). The foundation of the prophecy seems to be the proverb which the people had used (xi. 3). The prophets quoted it to illustrate the awful punishment to be inflicted on the guilty city. As an empty caldron is burnt through by the fire, so the city would be destroyed by the Chaldeans, as well as the inhabitants.

Ezekiel had no sooner uttered this terrible judgment than he was called upon to suffer bereavement. The desire of his eyes suddenly died. All through the morning it is probable that he spoke with the shadow of this great eclipse darkening his spirit, but he flinched not from his appointed duty; and now that his wife was dead, he still obeyed the Divine behest which bade him not to mourn nor weep. The reason for this prohibition was probably intended as a token that when their city was destroyed, they would have no opportunity to lament their dead. But the point for us is to notice the entire absorption of the Lord's servant in his mission. The personal and affectional, the tender love which cries for expression, the eager desire that the beloved one should not be without the tribute that every other husband paid, were all put on one side, that God's will and work might be promoted. Let us always put the kingdom and righteousness first. Let us dare to subordinate everything to the call of duty. Let us remember the Master said that we were to prefer neither wife nor children before Himself.

In silence the prophet was told to wait until the tidings of the fall of Jerusalem had reached Babylon, then he would have new messages to deliver (v. 27).

MONDAY, January 28. Ezekiel xxv.

"The word of the Lord came again unto me." In wireless telegraphy there must be sympathy between the instrument which receives and that which transmits; the one must be attuned to the other, before the vibrations of the air can be registered. If there is the smallest want of sympathy between the two instruments, though the waves of the transmitter may beat around the receiver, they are lost. So the words of God are, possibly, constantly coming towards us, and encircling us. But if there is any disobedience, if we are under the dominion of the flesh, if we live in the midst of the crowd, and give the still small voice no opportunity, we shall fail to receive.

The message of the prophet was to be delivered against the heathen neighbours of the Jews. In the present chapter, four of them are marked out as objects of Divine vengeance, on account of their ungenerous triumph over the fall of Israel. The Ammonites rejoiced because God's sanctuary was profaned, therefore their land was to become a possession for the Midianites. Moab and Seir said that there was no difference between Israel and other nations, and that their God was no more able to preserve them than the gods of the heathen; therefore they would be obliterated among the nations. Edom had cherished an implacable resentment against Israel (Psa. cxxxvii. Obad i.); therefore it should know God's vengeance. A similar fate was to overtake Philistia. Each terrible prophecy closes with the same refrain, "Thou shalt know," (7, 11, 14, 17). The ungodly shall know God, if not in the way of grace, then in judgment.

TUESDAY, January 29. Ezekiel xxvi.

This and the two following chapters contain prophecies against Tyre. She is depicted in the earlier verses as rejoicing over the fall of Jerusalem. As the story of Jerusalem's desolation comes to the Tyrian merchants they congratulate themselves that the crowds that thronged the gates of Jerusalem will now be turned towards themselves, and that the traffic which enriched Mount Zion will now pour its fertilizing floods through the great maritime metropolis. Ah, vain boast! Tyre's destruction would be so absolute that nets might be spread on the sands which were once lined by her buildings and shipping.

These words were precisely realized. At the time of these predictions, Tyre was at the height of her prosperity. She had repelled a five years' siege by Shalmanezer, and a thirteen years' siege by Nebuchadnezzar. But she was destined to fall beneath the strategy of Alexander, who, in 1332, blocked the port, which became silted up with sand.

The paragraph from v. 7 refers to the destruction by Nebuchadnezzar of that part of Tyre which was situated on the mainland, separated from the impregnable islet part by a silver streak of water. Thus the great city passed away, and her nobles, "the princes of the sea," descended from their throne, and the "renowned city, which was strong in the sea, and a terror to those that haunt it," became desolate. Notice the magnificence of the closing words of the chapter, which describe her doom as she goes down to the pit, so that the story of her fate would be a terror to all who heard it.

A few broken ruins alone mark the site of Tyre, and as we wend our way amongst them, we are reminded that not one jot or tittle can pass from the word of God, but that all that He has said must be fulfilled.

WEDNESDAY, January 30. Ezekiel xxvii.

This chapter is wonderfully beautiful. Tyre is appropriately described as a vast ship, freighted with the combined produce of all the nations. Each part of the world is ransacked for its spoils, that they may be gathered for the enrichment and equipment of this magnificent vessel. Surely we may apply the prophet's conception to many a young life which ventures forth upon the high seas of the world, richly provided with the wealth of many lands and ages. Greece and Rome, India and America, the ancient and the modern world, the best thoughts of the noblest minds, science, art and music, all contribute to the storage of the mind.

The prophet depicts the ship, brought into great waters, and broken in the midst of the seas, to the distress of the mariners and pilots. And how often is this prophecy verified in the lives of young men and women, the sons and daughters of the highest and richest culture, whose compassions and whose passions conduct them into the heart of the great seas which are swept by destructive storms, before which such myriads have been broken? We need to pray to God that our youth should take on board the true Captain and Pilot of souls, who alone can steer them across the great ocean of life, and bring them safely into the desired harbour.

Art thou broken by the storms of life? Even now One stands amidst thy panic-stricken soul who has seemed to sleep, but whose voice shall bid winds and waves hush to stillness. Jesus is near. Call to Him. He is Master of wind and wave.

THURSDAY, January 31. Ezekiel xxviii.

Here the prophet turns directly to Tyre with words of upbraiding; but deep Bible students have always felt that he was in effect addressing an intelligent being, who lay hid behind the guise of the city, and even of the king, and might be spoken of as its prince and lord. Beyond this they have identified this being with Satan himself, of whom so many of these epithets are literally true. He was the anointed cherub, who was set in the midst of the mountain of God, and was perfect in his ways from the day of his creation until iniquity was found in him. The sin of Tyre and of Satan was identical—namely, the pride with which the heart was inflated and uplifted.

This parallel is extremely interesting, and it must be confessed to have much corroboration from the fact that the apostrophe addressed to Tyre is too deep and far-reaching, too intensive and extensive, to be wholly applicable to the Venice of the old world. Whilst no doubt every word is true, so far as it goes, of the literal city of the seas, there are touches of deeper application, which can only be accounted on the supposition referred to. And if this be granted, the chapter may be compared with Daniel x., as teaching that behind the great empires of the world, directing and controlling their operations, there are mighty and malign spirits; and that we have very literally to contend with the wicked spirits in the heavenlies. Oh, that God would hasten the hour when these shall be cast down, and the empire of the world be assumed by the Son of Man!

FRIDAY, February 1. Ezekiel xxix.

The prophet now turns to Egypt, which had so often been the resort of the chosen people (compare vv. 6, 7 with Isaiah xxxi.). Under the appropriate symbol of a stranded alligator, the land of Egypt is devoted to destruction (8, 9). But the destruction was to be temporary only (11). Afterwards the fortunes of the country would revive, though it would always be "a base kingdom" (14). What phrase could more exactly describe the condition of that nation throughout the intervening centuries? It has never exerted any strong influence on the history of the world; but has been at the mercy of every conqueror.

From the scenes of desolation, which Ezekiel describes, see how he turns often and lovingly to his own beloved country, so sure that no irremediable destruction could befal her, so confident that whatever her present condition might be, the future would be bright with a prosperity that should dazzle all beholders (21). So all Israel shall be saved, and their recovery shall bring to the rest of mankind life from the dead.

Let us take to heart the exceedingly precious promise of that closing verse: "I will give thee the opening of the mouth in the midst of them; and they shall know that I am the Lord." Does anyone read these words who dreads what the day may bring? Some message has to be delivered, some confession uttered, some sermon or address prepared, and it seems as though the power of utterance had fled. Let such trust in the name of the Lord, and stay themselves on God. He will open the mouth, and He will convict the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment.

SATURDAY, February 2. Ezekiel xxx.

With strong and vigorous denunciations, the prophet again sets himself to describe the impending fate of Egypt, and affirms that her dependencies shall suffer with her, none being exempted from the results of her terrible undoing (v. 5).

It seems as though in all these chapters we are standing by the great white throne of Divine judgment, on which the Son of Man sits, whilst before Him are gathered the nations of the world. Now is the judgment of this world; now the empires of men are receiving the awards of the Judge, with their Come and Depart; now Great Britain, and France, and Germany, and Russia, and many another, are occupying the very places occupied once by the nations of antiquity; and the angels can hear the sentences which are being pronounced.

What Nebuchadnezzar was in the old world, as the executor of God's decrees, Napoleon was in the new. Beneath his assault, the thrones of Europe—which reeked with crimes, with the injustice of the rich, and the anguish of the poor—reeled to a very hades, from which they have never been resuscitated. Where now are the Bourbons; where the descendants of Louis Philippe; where the petty and vile princedoms of Naples and other Italian States? And when his work was done, for the pride and arrogance of his heart, Napoleon himself was cast aside, and Waterloo was the execution of the Divine sentence against him. Let England know that she, too, is on her trial; and let it never be forgotten, that, as the wind which sweeps the forest, only levels trees which are already eaten through by the ravages of the borer-worm, so nations are not given over to destruction till the home-life is destroyed, and the cries of women and children and the poor appeal to God for vengeance.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—IV.

SIN—WHAT IT IS, AND WHAT IT DOES.

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A.

THERE is sin in the world. This is an undeniable fact, and next to the redemption that is in Christ Jesus it is the greatest fact in the world. Indeed, an understanding of the one is absolutely necessary to an appreciation of the other. So Christ's chosen forerunner was a plain preacher of righteousness, not a Socrates or an Aristotle. A sense of sin, not a training in metaphysics, is the first essential to a true knowledge of Christ. The man who ignores the sin which is in his own heart, can easily dispense with Christianity. The man who honestly faces it, cannot help feeling drawn to Jesus Christ. Those who have read the excellent biography of the late George Macgregor will remember that when in the midst of his theological studies all his faith was in danger of being shipwrecked, it was the sense of sin as a terrible fact in his own nature and life that drew him back little by little to the Bible teaching which he had received and loved from childhood. Christianity and modern infidelity, therefore, are in direct conflict as to the nature of sin. The question is of fundamental importance, and there is no issue where the truth of Scripture can be more plainly vindicated. Christianity is the only religion which gives a satisfactory explanation of sin.

SIN NEEDS EXPLANATION.

Familiar as we are with sin and its terrible consequences, we feel that it ought not to be. It is extra-natural; it is a horrible disease which we are bound to fight against. Its presence is foreign to man's true nature, and a fatal hindrance to his happiness and highest development. Sin presses upon us from every side. It is in society disgracing man's intercourse with his neighbour by serious crimes of violence and fraud. Society could not hold together but for the restraints placed by law upon these hideous developments of sin. But though reason and intelligence approve of these restraints, and the laws of every civilized community are founded on righteousness, no penalties or encouragements that man can devise are sufficient to keep men back from crime. An outward appearance of decency and uprightness may be preserved, and the stream of evil is kept from deluging the whole area of social life, but the source remains unchanged. "Out of the heart of man," Jesus said, "proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, murders, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies." As true of the twentieth century as of the first.

We meet also with sin in nature, both in creation and in our own physical being. Everywhere, both around and within, there is suffering, decay, death. There is the awful strife in nature, the inarticulate groans of the animal world as they prey upon one another and torture one another. There are the horrors of pestilence, famine, and war. There are the ravages of disease, the pains of child-birth, the awful violent rupture caused by man's last enemy, death. No intelligent observer can help seeing that some violent disruption has brought conflict and suffering into every department of the life that now is. "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain."

And the discord which rages without is reproduced within. The kingdom of man's own personality is full of strife; there is war in our own nature. Duty and inclination do not agree. Passion and appetite clamour for immediate indulgence. Self-respect and self-interest counsel restraint and patience. To our lower nature sin is pleasant. To our higher nature sin is bondage and degradation. Human life is inseparable from temptation. Every honest heart is burdened with a sense of conflict and failure. This is not a matter of theology. This presence of evil in physical nature, in society, in man's own heart, is the great fact of human life, a fact which casts a dark shadow over the whole course of our earthly sojourning, and makes men dread death and the world to come.

INFIDELITY AT FAULT.

Now in the explanation of this fact Infidelity Signally Fails. It has been suggested that sin is a necessary product of our sensuous nature. But some of the worst sins are against our bodies, and our animal nature protests against them. And such sins as pride are independent of the body. The body is a convenient avenue of temptation and a ready instrument of sin, but sin does not arise from the senses. The most holy life is compatible with a perfect development of all our senses.

Nor is sin due to the limitations of human nature. Finiteness is not incompatible with goodness, and the larger intellects are in no way free from sin; indeed, they are capable of the greater sins, so the weakness of our mortal nature is no explanation of sin. A well-whipped hound will follow at the master's heel, but "Uncle Tom" was only asserting his sovereignty as man when he said to the slave-owner, Lefroy, "Ah, massa, you may kill me, but you cannot make me sin!" We do not need to cease to be men in order to cease from sin.

And sin is not necessary to progress. It is the opposite of good, not an elementary stage of virtue. The theory of Moral Evolution—that man is emerging out of a savage state of ignorance and vice, and pursuing an upward path towards virtue and knowledge, is utterly false. It is untrue both to history and to the witness of man's own heart. The times of highest intellectual development have been the times of most unnatural and abominable vices.

Sin is not a matter of imperfect development. It is a terrible discord. Man's conduct is at variance with his creed. He has lost the power to be true to himself. Conscience and reason approve the better way, but appetite and desire draw him aside into evil. The supremacy of conscience is the witness to man's essential affinity to God. He has two sides to his being, the one akin to nature, the other akin to God. The two are in conflict, but the man knows which ought to rule. He was born a king, and in his sane moments he longs to recover his crown.

So while infidelity tries to explain sin away as the inevitable result of man's sensuous nature, or limited capacities, or imperfect development, conscience irresistibly witnesses that sin is a great catastrophe, a violent distortion of man's proper state, an evil foreign to man's true nature.

THE HISTORICAL ORIGIN.

Now, if sin is not essential to man's nature, it must have been introduced from outside. Sin as an historical fact needs an historical beginning. This Scripture gives us, in the story of man's first sin. Our instincts, which tell us that the poison which has infected our nature for some 6,000 years is a foreign element, are in accordance with God's Word written. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin."

The Bible explanation of sin is perfectly simple and sufficient: "An enemy hath done this." Man was created innocent and good. All his desires were upright and pure. He found his highest satisfaction in God. An involuntary attraction drew the heart of man as created, to the God who had made everything good. But it was necessary that this involuntary attraction should be raised from the plane of nature and instinct to the plane of moral choice. Man was required by an act of conscious will to choose the will of God.

But, beguiled by the tempter, man chose amiss. He allowed himself to suspect God's love. Eve, looking upon the forbidden tree, formed an independent judgment upon its qualities. She pronounced it to be good for food, pleasant to the sight, and a tree to be desired to make one wise. This was the beginning of the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of intellectual life. Now "the strength of sin is the law." There was no intrinsic poison in the forbidden fruit. God made all things good. It was Disobedience that made the first sin so fatally sinful. The one commandment, which was given to strengthen and elevate the character of man's obedience, became the occasion of distrust, disobedience, and rebellion against God.

"Sin, then, is lawlessness." It is the denial of the right of God to regulate the affairs of men. "Human governments," we are told, "derive their authority from the consent of the governed." But this is not the case with God's government. While as a rule conscience "consents unto the law that it is good," God's law is supreme, whether we approve of it or not. It is not the consent of our conscience that makes God's law binding. It is vain to say, "I see no harm in so-and-so," if you have reason to believe that God has forbidden it. This is simply opposing your finite and corrupt judgment against the judgment of God. Such pride is not only unbecoming, it is sinful. It is most ungrateful; for God's love has been so fully manifested that we ought gladly to take on trust a little while any law we cannot understand, any restriction which seems to us unnecessary. "The ways of the Lord are right," whatever they may seem to us at times.

Now, because God's laws are in harmony with man's true nature, man by transgressing them is involved in a Two-fold Evil—not only in guilt, but also in moral defilement. Sin brings us under the wrath of God, so that the sinner is guilty and condemned; it brings us under the power of corruption, so that the sinner is unclean and depraved.

These two aspects of sin have to be borne in mind: Sin as an offence, and sin as a disease. The sinner needs the double cure of cleansing from the guilt and power of sin. He needs Christ both as the Priest to absolve, and as the Physician to heal. And the battery of modern infidelity is directed against both these truths. The guilt of sin which makes atonement necessary and punishment certain is strenuously denied, and the moral disease of sin, with its crippling, contaminating influence upon man's whole being, is conveniently ignored or explained away.

(To be concluded.)

THE

Hon. Lord Provost Chisholm,

GLASGOW.

GLASGOW has been noted for its long succession of chief magistrates who have been closely associated with Evangelical Churches. Indeed, it has been hinted more than once that the elections turned on the amount of influence exercised in the Town Council by members of the respective denominations. Many good and noble men have filled the civic chair—the occupant of which is entitled during his term of office to the style of "honourable" — but no predecessor of the present Lord Provost, Mr. Samuel Chisholm, has brought to the position a more evident determination to use every opportunity afforded for the advancement of the Kingdom of Christ. Though always identified with the great Western city, Mr. Chisholm is a native of the Eastern slope of Scotland, having been born at Dalkeith, in the county of Mid-Lothian, nearly sixty-five years ago. He received his education and business training in the same district, and did not settle in Glasgow till he was about twenty-five years of age. As a young man, his sense of Christian duty was strong and definite, and his first action in his new sphere gave a clear indication of the loyal adherence to principle which marks him to-day. When he bought a grocery business, then in the market, it was found that his purchase included the good-will of a licence for the sale of alcoholic liquor; the certificate for this he at once relinquished, thus diminishing by one the number of licensed houses in the city at a time when the tendency was altogether in the opposite direction.

As a Christian worker, Mr. Chisholm's name first came prominently before the public in connection with the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society, which, notwithstanding the exclusive character apparently indicated by its name, is really an organization for providing "children's churches" for boys and girls of all classes and ages, not otherwise attending any place of worship. On account of the excellent accommodation, central situation, and other advantages, the City Hall Branch was long known as the largest meeting of the kind, not only in Glasgow, but in Scotland. Mr. Chisholm was for many years a leading helper in this work, and for eighteen years presided over it as chairman. The effort was a many-sided one. In addition to the instruction on Sabbath morning, there were regular visitation of the children in homes scattered over a wide area, instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic on week evenings, entertainments at other times; with the provision of clothing for those who were poorly clad, sometimes even of homes for those who were outcast. In every one of these departments, Mr. Chisholm took a deep and most practical interest. His lessons from the platform always contained the earnest presentation of the truth regarding sin and the need of a Mediator, joined with the loving invitation to receive the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour. Many were led into a personal experience of salvation who are now faithfully passing on the good news to others. In October last, a reunion was held of old members and friends of the meeting, when, in token of gratitude for blessing received, a cot was endowed in the Sick Children's Hospital, henceforth to be known as the "Samuel Chisholm Cot."

Mr. Chisholm is among the readiest to acknowledge that if he did anything at the City Hall, he received at least in the measure in which he gave. It was there he developed the facility of utterance which makes him the most popular speaker on any platform in the city to-day. The intimate acquaintance into which he was brought with young people of the poorest class, and familiarity with the poverty and squalor of their surroundings, did not in his case "breed contempt;" rather did it enlist all the sympathies of his intense nature on the social side of Christian work. Never losing sight of the quest for souls, he realized as few have done the numerous directions from which the attainment of that object can be helped forward. He was fully alive to the evils caused by drink; and so clearly has he ever kept these before him throughout his career, that, in certain gatherings of those on the other side, "the Chisholm party" is understood to sum up all who are arrayed against the drink traffic in every shape and form. Mr. Chisholm believes that the great hope for the future lies in the rising generation itself; and nothing delights him still, so much as to find himself face to face with a youthful audience, and to give them a lesson in Scripture truth, or in the principles of total abstinence. His personal love and reverence for the Lord's Day has been another outstanding feature of his character, and his example, as well as precept, in this direction has had great influence.

Mr. Chisholm was among the pioneers on the question of the housing of the poor, but he went deeper into the question than many. Knowing the real state of affairs in the congested central areas of the city, he recognised that any number of small schemes would but touch the fringe of the problem. It is no secret that long before the way was clear his ambition was to enter the Town Council, but only that he might do something to promote the highest interests of the suffering masses: in many cases the adults might be reaping the fruit of their own wrong-doing, but his heart bled for the children brought up under such conditions, who, indeed, seemed to the human eye to be deprived of all chance of doing well. The preaching of the Gospel was the atmosphere in which he lived, but hand and heart alike went out to the poor and needy.

Twelve years ago Mr. Chisholm was elected a member of the Town Council of Glasgow, and it was soon made patent to all who watched matters closely, that a new era had begun in municipal affairs. He had no "axe of his own to grind," his motives were pure, and his life above reproach. He took a special interest in the improvement schemes by which large numbers of the worst hovels in the city have been cleared away. More notable still has been the change in the attitude of the Corporation towards the licensing question. As soon as seniority permitted, Councillor Chisholm became Bailie Chisholm, with a seat on the licensing bench, and the members of "the trade" showed from the outset how well they understood what that meant for them. Every third year he was obliged to seek re-election by one of the wards, and no stone was left unturned to defeat his candidature, but always in vain. The citizens knew they had in him a true-hearted man, and loyally supported him. Step by step the principle was established that no additional licences were to be granted, and ultimately a tacit understanding was also come to, that wherever property acquired by the Corporation included licensed houses, these were to be suppressed, and no new licences were to be granted anywhere else in lieu of them. Whoever might be absent, Bailie Chisholm was always on the bench, from the opening to the close of the Court. His attitude was ever the same. Yet even his opponents admitted his fairness, and even generosity; they knew where they would find him, and were assured that, whatever tricks they might practise themselves, nothing of the kind would be found on the other side.

His election to the Lord Provostship in November, 1899, was a triumph for the temperance party, but it was also an event of deep interest to Christian workers all over the world. His first public appearance after his appointment was at one of Rev. John McNeill's evangelistic meetings for business men, in which he took a leading part. That the head of the municipality should be a man not only of Evangelical, but—if we may use the somewhat artificial modern distinction — of pronounced Evangelistic sympathies, was a great change indeed. Yet nothing of the nature of criticism or jealousy could withstand the charm of the life that he has lived during these fourteen months before the public. Even the tone of newspapers, in which previously his schemes and plans had been almost invariably condemned, is entirely changed. He has won the hearts of every section of the community.

Nor has this been accomplished by lowering his flag in any respect. He is still the same simple preacher of the everlasting Gospel. He is as much at home in the gatherings of the poor as in those of a more public or exalted character. Among the merchants and professional men alike, the one marvel is, the amount of work he is able to do. On one side the explanation lies in his phenomenally good health, on the other in the simple life he has lived all his days. He has never allowed his time to be engrossed by society engagements, and so has it all to give at the call of public duty. "Thank God," said a well-known preacher in our hearing a few weeks ago, "we have a Christian Lord Provost, and I expect soon to have him preaching the Gospel from this platform, as he has done before." He finds his rest and relaxation, not in idleness or personal gratification, but in a change of work.

Many times have we heard expressions of surprise at unexpected displays of the breadth of Mr. Chisholm's sympathies. They are as varied as the needs of the great community over which he presides, and his tolerance is wide enough to include everything that is not inherently wrong. No scheme for the promotion of the social well-being comes amiss to him; and it would not be too much to say that, in certain circles, his life and example have induced a respect for aggressive Christian work which was wanting before. He is eminently a man who commends the service of his Master, who lifts up Christ in his own life in such a way as to draw other men to Him. Never has a simpler faith been carried into high station. The fact cannot be overlooked that he is a Christian first of all. There are many ways of preaching Christ by such a man. The word in season is never withheld, and the beautiful unselfish life preaches even when the lips are silent. He was, for many years, a prominent elder of the United Presbyterian Church, and has shown deep sympathy with the Church Union accomplished last October.

On Sabbath, November 4, Mr. Chisholm's home was bereaved by the strikingly sudden death of his wife. She was a true help-meet in every department of his many Christian activities. Her heart went out to every good cause in home and foreign mission work, and on the day before she died she was showing her interest in one of the social schemes of the Corporation, when illness obliged her to return home. Rarely has such a tribute of heart-felt sympathy been shown. All knew that it was well with her, for she had been called to the higher service, but hearts ached at the thought of him who was stricken by the great loss in the midst of such a career of public usefulness.

The Half Not Told.

Tune—"Silchester."

The half hath not been told
Of our Redeemer's grace:
Only in part do we behold
The beauty of his face.

Fairer than sons of men,
More excellent by far:
The Father's well-beloved Son,
The Bright and Morning Star.

His wisdom knows no bound,
His love no tongue can tell;
His knowledge is a deep profound,
He doeth all things well.

The hungry He doth fill
With fare of great delight;
His riches are unsearchable,
And wondrous is his might.

Through his atoning blood,
And priesthood now in heaven,
Pardon for sin, sweet peace with God,
And endless life are given.

But when He doth appear
His glory we shall see,
His voice like many waters hear,
And in his presence be.

Then shall we sing his praise
In Zion's streets of gold,
And shout through everlasting days—
"The half was never told."

Lord's Day Rest Association.—An address issued by the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association conveys some idea of the success which has attended the efforts of the Society to preserve the sanctity of the Sabbath. Much useful information, and numerous interesting facts, are given in the address, copies of which will be sent free on application to Mr. Charles Hill, secretary, 12, John Street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

Scottish Notes.

A NEW branch of the Y.W.C.A. has just been formed for Logie parish.

The Quarterly Record of the National Bible Society of Scotland contains interesting information regarding two new versions: (1) The Palityan, already referred to in our columns by Dr. Moody; (2) A Luba version for circulation in connection with the Garenganze Mission, among a tribe living to the north-west of Nyassaland, Central Africa.

The annual report of the National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s tells of an increase of one in the number of associations, but of a serious drop in membership—from 24,080 to 23,022—which is confessedly difficult to account for. The Council have frankly put on record their belief "that a revival of Christian life is required before the membership will greatly improve."

The usual invitation has been issued by Dr. William Ferguson, of Kinmundy, for prayer and interest in connection with the Scottish National Christian Convention, to be held at Bridge of Allan, June 10-14, 1901. Among the speakers expected are Rev. H. Montgomery (Belfast), Rev. William Muir (Blairgowrie), Rev. Dr. John Smith (Edinburgh), Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. C. G. Moore, Rev. Thomas Brash (London), Mrs. J. Penn Lewis (Leicester). Mr. David Keith Murray, Kondoli, Crieff, is taking charge of the arrangements for special railway facilities.

It is signified that a Sunday Traders' Defence Association has been formed at Glasgow: (1) To oppose all legislative or magisterial interference with the liberty of trade; (2) to protect the interests of traders and employers of labour on Sundays, and to defend them when prosecuted or interfered with; (3) to oppose the passing of Acts of Parliament, Provisional Orders, bye-laws or other regulations interfering with the liberty of trade; (4) to educate public opinion on the subject, and for that purpose to establish branch associations throughout the country. It is being pointed out, as a justification of their position, that there has been no legislation in regard to Sunday trading for nearly 300 years.

It is matter for sincere regret that at the annual meeting last week of the Dundee Wine, Spirit and Beer Trade Association, Mr. H. G. Younger should have been able to say that, though during the past year "a large number of pinpricks in the shape of minor Parliamentary Bills had been directed against the trade," he thought they had been fairly successful in having overcome them. Fortunately there are many who do not hold it to have been "a pity" the Child Messenger Bill by an accident had been unanimously read a second time, "giving the teetotalers the right to say that that had been done." It is satisfactory to find him admitting that as to the future, he was afraid they had stormy times in front of them.

As Murtle Lecturer for the current year at the University of Aberdeen, Dr. John Smith (Edinburgh) chose as his subject last week "The Ascendency of the Spiritual in Recent Thought." During the last forty or fifty years, he said, the spiritual had been slowly, and by fresh movements in thought and life, vindicating its reality. Many could recall the tremor which passed through the intellectual world of Britain when, under cover of the magnificent theory of evolution, Spencer, Huxley, and others took up an attitude of agnosticism which denied all validity to the spiritual as it had hitherto been believed in, or any real communion with the divine through the spiritual faculties of man. It was very interesting to notice how the reaction came. Christ chose an entirely original platform from which to address mankind. He struck into the sphere of the personality that whole side of man which fronts God. He set Himself to stir in man the spiritual hunger of his being—the sense of imperfection, the passion for right, the instinct of dependence, the thirst for purity. He did not reason, but shone; till the half-meanings which men put upon their yearnings fell away, and they knew them to be thirst for God.

East-End Emigration Fund.—Through this agency, in the course of the twelve months ended September 30, 150 persons were assisted to emigrate. Of these 139 were sent to various parts of the British colonies, where employment was awaiting them. All but twenty-two of these emigrants went out to join friends, who in many instances provided much of the passage money, and in all cases had satisfied the committee that they were willing and able to receive the new arrivals hospitably, and to give them attention until they commenced work for themselves. In addition to these, eleven future settlers in the United States passed through the Society's books; these receive no pecuniary assistance, however, as the committee only aid British subjects who are emigrating to British Colonies. Communications may be addressed to the hon. secretaries of the Fund, 34, Newark Street, Stepney, E.

Welsh Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

A PROPOSAL is before the Prison Commissioners to close Her Majesty's Prisons at Brecon and Carmarthen. The reason for this step is the decrease of crime in West and Mid Wales.

A short time ago Lady Reade, of Carreglwyd, Anglesey, presented the parish of Llanfaethlu in that county with a temperance restaurant. Her ladyship has now given another proof of her sympathy with the cause of temperance, by the presentation of a similar gift to the parish of Bodedyrn.

One of the best-known of Welsh clergymen, Rev. Canon Thompson, D.D., of Cardiff, has had the high honour of being appointed preacher of Gray's Inn, London, in succession to the Rev. Joseph Hirst Lupton, D.D. Of the remaining Inns of Court, Canon Ainger is Master of the Temple, and Rev. Hastings Rashdall, D.C.L., is preacher of Lincoln's Inn.

The annual report of the Cardiff Prison-Gate Mission has just been published. The Mission employs an agent who waits at the prison gate every week day in the year. Last year nearly 700 discharged prisoners accepted the hospitality of the Mission. Out of this number over 400 were visited in their homes. Twenty-eight young lads and thirteen girls and women were restored to their parents and friends.

Irish Notes.

A SABBATH School Superintendents' Union has been formed in connection with the Presbytery of Belfast, for the purpose of encouraging and stimulating superintendents, and discovering the best methods of conducting Sabbath schools.

A public meeting in connection with the Belfast and District Branch of the Christian Endeavour Society has been held in Wellington Hall, Belfast, for the purpose of marking the beginning of the new century. Rev. Dr. Robertson presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Reddall, Jas. McGranahan, Jas. Cregan, and others.

At a conference held in Belfast last week on behalf of the Presbyterian Twentieth Century Fund, it was reported that £50,000 has been promised to the Fund, and that £100,000 is the amount aimed at. It was also urged that all Presbyterians at their next meeting should be asked to arrange for a thorough canvass of all non-contributors in their respective congregations.

A company is being formed in connection with Trinity College, Dublin, for the purpose of providing decent homes for a certain number of the poor of the metropolis, and for the sake of demonstrating that by good management tenement house property can be made a sound investment. Any profits which the company may make, after paying four per cent., are to go towards furthering the benevolent objects of the Society.

In a series of lantern mission tours during the last three months, the itinerant evangelists of the Irish Church Missions visited some of the Western counties of Ireland, and held 147 lantern services. In spite of many efforts on the part of the priests to prevent the attendance of Roman Catholics, the total estimated attendance of the latter was 4,795, and of Protestants, 5,934. The workers were greatly encouraged by the interest taken in their efforts.

Jews are increasing in Ireland. Ten or fifteen years ago there were very few, but now there are about 5,000, and of these about 3,000 live in Dublin. Many of them are marked by great indifference on religious subjects. To try and evangelize these, an Irish undenominational mission has been formed, with centres in Cork, Dublin, Belfast, and Londonderry. A meeting of the society was held last week in Dublin, and a fairly encouraging report presented.

Dublin City Mission.—For the thirty-ninth year the Dublin City Mission has issued its annual report. It is well known that the society in name and practice is undenominational, and the clergy and ministers of the city are warm in their appreciation of the arduous and devoted labours of the agents. The spiritual success of the society has been manifest in many directions. With the object of reaching the poorest with the Gospel, the agents may be seen visiting from house to house, and out of the dens and slums of the city converts have been secured. The report comprises numerous cases related by the workers, many of which are distinctly pathetic. The agents find access to the minds and hearts of the people easier as the years go by, and the opportunities for personal dealing more numerous. Every effort is made to get the people to attend places of worship, their children sent to school, and occupation found for the unemployed. The committee earnestly hope that no reduction in the staff of agents will be necessary owing to any lack of support. The hon. secretary is Mr. Thomas P. Law, Q.C., 48, St. Stephen's Green, Dublin.

The Howard Association.

AT home and abroad the Committee of the Howard Association have rendered aid in numerous matters relating to the methods of penal treatment, and the promotion of the best means of dealing with crime and criminals. By the collection and publication of facts and information concerning the existing state of things, and advocating legislation for their improvement, every opportunity has been taken for grappling with social evils.

The Association has at intervals kept before the public the importance of increased attention to the ancient principle of making the interests of the persons injured by crime a special object of legislative or administrative care. Mentioning this, the annual report says—"Modern public opinion has been apt too exclusively to ignore the rights of the victims of crime, and to bestow attention, and even sympathy, rather upon the offender. The reformation, or supposed reformation, of the latter has, in some cases, been allowed to eclipse the just claims both of the injured individual and of the endangered community. But the Bible, that great standard of the best models for national and social, as well as individual, government, points especially to the injured party as deserving the chief consideration at the hands of the lawgiver."

Two delegates represented the Association at the International Prisons Congress at Brussels, who took part in the discussion of questions affecting the training of the treatment of habitual offenders, the disciplinary, moral, and medical management of prisons and reformatories, the influence of intemperance upon crime, &c.

On several occasions during the year the Committee of the Association have had to make representations to the chief prison authorities in relation to numerous matters, including the treatment of criminals of unsound mind; and investigation has been made of the rules which govern the punishment of insane and epileptic prisoners, for misbehaviour in prison, with satisfactory results. Many of the various reforms urged by the Association have been adopted, and the protest made against the retrogressive step taken in the new Prison Act, which permitted conversation among prisoners, has been strikingly justified, and it is now officially stated that many prisoners refuse to avail themselves of the new permission.

Among minor British reforms advocated by the Association, as needful for the diminution of juvenile delinquency, is the appropriation of special courts, or the designation of special magistrates, to deal with school attendance cases, and with children's offences in general. It is pointed out that this has been adopted in Massachusetts, U.S.A., and partially in Australia. In the matter of the committee of the Association have throughout the year continued their endeavours to unite with others in promoting measures for the suppression of the drink traffic. Endeavours are made to bring the community to regard the evils of drunkenness, not merely in their physical, but also in their moral and spiritual relations, and to encourage local efforts in the advancement of temperance organization.

The significance of the Housing of the Poor question has been kept before the Association, particularly in its relation to crime and pauperism. From numerous sources, practical suggestions for reform in this direction have been collected and embodied in a comprehensive paper, which has been widely circulated, with the object of enlightening the public mind as to the actual conditions under which many of the poor are known to live.

It will thus be seen that the operations of the Howard Association are manifold and far-reaching, and it is evident from a perusal of the annual report that these are conducted with commendable economy. Any information may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. William Tallack, 5, Bishopsgate Street Without, E.C.

Bermondsey Settlement.

IN considering the general course of development of the Bermondsey Settlement, two features may be noted. In the first place the Settlement, as a community seeking to live in the spirit of brotherhood, ministers to manifold wants existing in the district to which it belongs. This ministry grows in extent and variety year by year, according both to the number and individuality of the residents and helpers, and to the appeals made to them as a result of the growing confidence of those in the district. Residents acquire, in course of time, a fulness of knowledge on social questions, a trained aptitude for dealing with them, and a means of co-operating with those who are facing the same difficulties elsewhere, which enable them and the Settlement to play an increasing part in the progressive efforts, not only of Bermondsey, but of London as a whole. This widening range and influence of the institution have been particularly marked during the year.

The second noticeable feature in the development of the undertaking is its

and the religious principles which form its vitality. If these are to give, in any full sense, command over human life, and embrace the whole range of human interests, and to affect all sorts and conditions of men, they must be not only Christian but catholic.

The Workers' Association has more than maintained its strength throughout the year, and the services of voluntary helpers have proved invaluable. The Bermondsey and Rotherhithe Free Church Council has its headquarters at the Settlement, and series of united evangelistic services have been held. The work of the past year has been on the whole encouraging and satisfactory. The several agencies have been successfully maintained, and there has been a considerable increase of church members.

The results of efforts made to advance the interests of local temperance organizations have been most encouraging, while in every branch of the educational work progress is reported. The University Extension Lectures, the Choral and Orchestral Union, elocution classes, and other societies are widely appreciated. The numerous clubs and similar institutions are a valuable influence upon boys particularly, who otherwise would be left to the streets. The Warden is Rev. J. Scott Lidgett, and the Settlement is situated in Farncombe Street, Jamaica Road, S.E.

Strangeways Refuges and Homes.

ON a bright morning, seventeen years ago, among a large company gathered on the deck of a Cunard liner at the Liverpool landing stage, was a group of twelve boys, cheery and hopeful, though bearing unmistakable traces of early sorrow and want. This was the first party of young emigrants from the Cheetham Hill Homes, who were being taken to the West by Mr. and Mrs. Shaw. In the latest issue of The Children's Haven, the organ of the Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Homes, Strangeways, some interesting particulars are given of each member of the party, showing how these once destitute lads, after receiving the careful training, and sharing the family life of the institutions, are making progress in useful and influential spheres. In the Homes and Refuges there are nearly 500 of the poor, suffering children, and this number is being added to week by week.

In the heart of the city, one of the most active branches of the work is to be found in the form of the Children's Shelter, a well-appointed house, whose door is open day and night, where all classes of child suffering, and young girls in grave moral danger, receive prompt care. At the fourteen other establishments at Strangeways and Cheetham Hill, immediate admission is given to any destitute child, and workshops provide employment for those able and willing to work. Communications may be addressed to the hon. secretary, Mr. L. K. Shaw, Broom Holm, Cheetham Hill.

Dublin Medical Mission.

THIS Mission, carried on by Dr. F. W. Pigott, has nearly completed its ninth year of work among "home heathen."

Among those for whose conversion he and Mrs. Pigott have been used are two sisters. Both had been living lives of sin and shame, one of them for five years. They are now leading changed lives, one in a situation, the other in a "Home" in England. Early and late, when not at his dispensary, Dr. Pigott may be found visiting his patients, in their miserable rooms, telling them by word and action of the love of Christ, and trying to relieve them every way in his power.

We have had much cause for thankfulness in the work recently, specially at our Sunday evening service—where several have professed faith in a risen Saviour, amongst them being a Protestant young man, who went home and told his Roman Catholic wife that he had decided for Christ, and urged her to accept the Saviour he had found. Great was his joy when, before a week had passed, she too accepted the Saviour! Their happy faces are enough to tell of the change wrought in their hearts.

Dr. Pigott's colleague, Dr. A. E. Clayton, recently returned from the C.M.S. Mission in Onitsha, W. Africa, is greatly impressed with the tremendous need for Medical Mission work in the city, and the splendid opportunities thus afforded for reaching the untouched masses of the people.

We are having crowded dispensaries, there is no lack of patients, but there is indeed lack of means. We are needing about £200 before the close of our financial year on February 28.

(Mrs.) E. EDITH FIGGIS, Hon. Secretary.
Hawthorn, Sidney Parade, Dublin.

Brighton Medical Mission.

POSSIBLY few of the crowds of visitors to Brighton are conscious of the existence in "London-on-Sea" of a Whitechapel and Seven Dials in type of locality if not in name. Yet within five minutes' walk of the magnificent "Front" may be found cramped and dilapidated streets, with crowded tenements, and attendant poverty and vice.

It is in this neighbourhood that the Brighton Medical Mission has for twenty-five years rendered beneficent service in ministering to the temporal and spiritual needs of the poor. The rule applied to all patients is that they shall be unable to pay medical fees, and during the last two years there has been an increase in the attendance of 1,300 patients.

Gospel services are held in the Dispensary Mission Hall, and at the branch Medical Mission, Connaught Institute, at the time the patients gather for treatment. There are also week-night meetings, and two weekly services for children, conducted by the Mission nurse, who is also dispenser. The nurse visits patients in their own homes, and is greatly aided by ladies who kindly undertake to visit certain districts, and also others who read and speak to the patients while waiting, or conduct Bible classes, &c.

Mr. W. W. Shrubshall, 100, Edward Street, Brighton, the medical superintendent of the Mission, will be glad to furnish copies of the yearly report.

The Case of the Hop-pickers.—The reason given for the discontinuance of the Society for the Improved Lodging and Conveyance of Hop-pickers is a satisfactory one, as it is claimed that the purpose has been effected for which the association was formed. The Society not only educated the public mind on the subject, but influenced the Local Government Board to introduce the needful byelaws, and the Urban Councils to see them carried out. In many ways it brought about a vast improvement in the surroundings and life of the hop-picker. In this work, too, as in almost every other department of Christian and philanthropic labour, the drink curse had to be reckoned with, and perhaps one of the best of the numerous details carried out by the Society was that of the arrangement of cheap trains by which at the conclusion of the harvest the hop-pickers were conveyed home before the village public-houses could swallow their earnings.

"Any" or "My"?

THE other day I was reading a book in which a misprint occurred in the text "I will lay down my life for thy sake" (John xiii. 37).

Instead of the word "my," the printer had put "any," and if you will write those two words on paper, you will see how easily the one might be mistaken for the other if the writing were not good.

If you look up the text, you will see that the words were used by Peter when assuring our Lord of his devotion, but I am afraid the printer's version would apply to most of us. We like to see other people make sacrifices for the sake of what is right. We would even be willing to make them on their behalf, but we hesitate when it comes to doing it ourselves.

Peter was not called upon to lay down "any" life (that is, not anyone else's) for Christ's sake, but he had to lay down his own.

Are we ready to say to Jesus, "I am willing to make my sacrifice for thy sake," and sometimes even to give up our own pleasure for Him? This is well pleasing in his sight. Uncle Tom.

Two Idle Shepherd Boys.

I WANT to tell you of two shepherd-boys. It was their duty to look after the sheep, and to see that the animals did not stray; but on the morning of which I am thinking, they both seemed more inclined to play than to work. They were sitting together on the grass under the shade of a rock; having made whistle-pipes of the wood of a sycamore tree, they were playing part of a familiar hymn. Then when they grew tired of that, they began to trim their hats with wreaths of wild flowers.

On all sides the birds were busy building their nests—the thrushes in the wood, and the sand-larks by the river. They put these two idle boys to shame by their industry. Hundreds of new-born lambs were on the rocks, and all Nature seemed to be rejoicing, only now and then a cry came up from the depth of a narrow valley called Dungeon-Ghyll, which the idle shepherd boys never heard.

They proposed having a race together. Walter, the elder of the two, pointed out to his friend James the stump of an old yew tree which was to be the goal, and whoever reached it first should have, as a prize, the two sycamore pipes. Away they flew, but when they came near the valley, Walter began to see that James would win, as he was already far in front. Walter did not wish to lose his sycamore pipe, and so he ordered James to stop.

Walter now challenged James to copy him in what he was about to do. Across Dungeon-Ghyll a large piece of rock had fallen which formed a bridge from one side to the other. This bridge was very narrow, and in the deep gulf beneath ran a waterfall. Walter, with his staff in his hand, had already got half way across the bridge when he heard a piteous moan. It sounded like the cry of a human being, and when he heard it his heart almost stopped beating for fear. His legs began to tremble, and his face grew very white, but when he looked down into the gulf he saw that the noise came from a little lamb. The tiny thing had slipped into the stream, and the waterfall had carried it into the gulf. When the lamb's mother saw what had happened she uttered a loud cry, and the poor lamb, swimming round and round in the black pool below, answered with another cry.

When Walter saw that the moaning came from a lamb, and not from a human being as he had at first thought, his courage came back, and telling James what he had seen, they both left off playing, and began to see what they could do to rescue the lamb. A man who had been walking in the direction of Dungeon-Ghyll, and had heard the lamb's cry, was quicker than the shepherd-boys in rescuing it, and they met him carrying it in his arms. It seemed to have got no hurt by its fall, and the boys carried it up the hill and placed it by its mother's side.

As the man left the boys, he gently reproved them for having neglected to look after the sheep, and told them to mind their work better another time.

This story teaches us that it is better to do our duty than to be idle. If, instead of playing, the boys had been looking after the sheep, the lamb would not have fallen into the gulf.

We have all duties to do, either small or great. The smallest duty faithfully done is as great as the taking of a city, or the winning of some great battle. You know the words of Christ, "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much."

Difficulties.

The people trembled by Jordan's tide,
"And how shall we bridge the flood?" they sighed,
How reach the Canaan on yonder side?
Ere the steps of the priests on its fringe could fall,
The waves rose up like a burnished wall,
The highway opened for each and all!

The women came to the garden lone,
Their spices mingled with tear and moan,
For "Who shall roll us away the stone?"
Behold a shining one calmed their dread,
"The Lord is risen, as He hath said,
Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

An angel traversed the dungeon floor,
And Peter followed him, free once more,
Safe past the keepers that kept the door;

And out through the first and the second ward,
But what of the iron gate, locked and barred?
It opened to them of its own accord!

And still, as our hindrances loom anon,
We, too, shall find, if we march straight on,
The highway open, the threatening gone.

When some dark barrier saith us nay,
How sweet to learn, at the dawn of day,
An angel hath rolled the stone away.

And when our Jordan, so cold and wide,
Shall overflow, in death's harvest-tide,
One going before shall its waves divide;

And where the steps of our Priest have trod,
In abundant peace we shall walk dryshod,
To the open gate of the City of God.

MISSIONS; RESOLUTIONS (Rom. i. 14-16).

THERE was no one that the Apostle Paul met to whom he did not feel indebted. It is easy to understand why he was deeply in debt to the Lord Jesus, who had forgiven him ten thousand talents, and when he asked of the Saviour how he could possibly repay Him, it was as though the Lord Jesus had answered: "I want nothing at your hand for Myself, but I want you to feel that you can repay your debt to Me in the person of every man for whom I died. I loved the race; I gave Myself a propitiation for the sins of the world; I tasted death for every man. Go, therefore, and every time you do an act of love to any human being reckon it as part payment of your debt to Me." Paul also felt himself to be the trustee of the Gospel for the whole world. As the Lord Jesus had commissioned him, so he desired to preach the Gospel to every creature, so that no fragment of the great human family might be without an invitation to the Marriage Supper. This thought lifted the Apostle out of the narrow confines of Judaism, and made him think of a great outer world divided between the Greeks and the barbarians, the wise and the unwise. The nearer we get to Christ the more our heart yearns over the world for which He died.

It was with a kind of awe that the Apostle contemplated unfolding the Gospel message in the heart of the metropolis of the world, where the golden milestone stood, from where the great roads radiated to the boundaries of the known world. Be sure in your life to study the importance of cities. Take the strategetic points of a country or continent. Sow your seed in the fountain of the waters that flow out through the world. To influence London, to move it for God, is to affect the furthest limits of mankind. As William Arthur says: "From London the world is constantly receiving illustrations of what we are. Ships are departing every day with cargoes indescribably various; but they all bear one commodity in common—they all carry to other lands a consignment of British morality. It depends entirely upon the state of our home population whether these injections of our morality shall be so many vials of miasma to infect and curse, or so much of the breath of Heaven's grace, to give health and blessing. It is unutterably important that London should be holy." It seemed as though a voice remonstrated with the Apostle for his audacity in taking the Gospel to Rome, the seat of science and knowledge, and he replies: "I am not ashamed, because the Gospel of Jesus Christ contains one unique prerogative—it is power." Other systems of truth may have a high ideal, but they have no dynamics to make it effective: the machinery is beautiful, but there is no driving force; the Gospel is power unto salvation from the power of the dominion of the sins which were eating out the heart of the Roman empire. This salvation was within the reach of everyone, and could be obtained on the simple condition of faith. Try it yourselves. Trust the living Christ. You will find his life-power streaming into your nature, delivering you from the law of sin and death. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

A third edition of "Advance Endeavour," the souvenir report of the World's Convention, is now published. The cost of the book is half-a-crown.

There are very few C.E. societies that are not doing something to reach the unsaved, whilst many are quietly accomplishing a surprising amount of solid work. One Baptist Society in Guildford, which has seventy-two members, held sixty evangelistic meetings during last year, and conducted a week's mission at a village church in its neighbourhood, with such success that it has been asked to supply the pulpit once a month for the future and taken charge of a monthly evangelistic service in its own church.

The many Christian Endeavourers who heard Bishop Creighton speak at the World's Convention last July, will now look back upon that meeting with feelings of especial thankfulness that they were privileged to be present. "It is eternally true," he said, "that we shall be judged more by our temper than by our objects, that what we feel, what we are, is more important than what we struggle for or what we attain. If we want, for instance, to bring peace into the world, how are we to do it? Our opinion will not affect any statesman or modify any object of our national ambition unless we proceed from the very beginning, unless we cultivate—that is to say—a pacific temper."

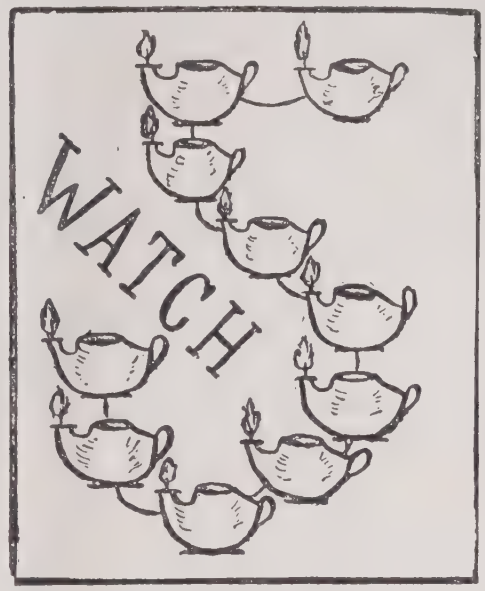
PARABLE OF THE TEN VIRGINS (Matt. xxv. 1-13).

GOLDEN TEXT—"Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day, nor the hour, wherein the Son of Man cometh" (Matt. xxv. 13).

INTRODUCTION.

"THE kingdom of heaven is like——" (1) Christ uses this sentence over and over again, and always with some great lesson in view. An Eastern wedding is the picture before us today. A procession of a bridegroom taking home his bride; of ten girls who are friends waiting by the wayside to join in the procession, which, being at night, needed lamps and torches to light up the way. This parable is recorded only by Matthew.



1.—THE TEN VIRGINS.

(1) All had lamps, all were young girls, all started with lamps lighted; but there was one vital difference. 4) All had little vessels for oil from which to replenish their lamps; five had filled these vessels before starting; five did not, their vessels were empty, with no oil in, they had made no preparation for the delay of the bridegroom (6-9). Therefore five were admitted to the wedding feast (10), and five were not.

Surely no one can mistake the deep but simple lesson Christ would impress upon our hearts. It is of so much importance, none can dare to read through this parable in a careless and indifferent spirit lest we should find ourselves "shut out" (10) like the foolish virgins.

All these young girls looked very much alike. So do members of a Christian Church, but it is to be feared some have a shallow surface, outside religion, that will not stand the test of the last day; while others have a real genuine love for the Lord Jesus, and would be ready to meet Him anywhere and at any time. We cannot see into each other's hearts, neither have we any right to judge others (Matt. vii. 1-5); but God can see if the vessel of the heart is full of the necessary oil. He knows, and He alone (1 Sam. xvi. 7); let us pray Psa. xxvi. 2.

2. THE ONE THING NEEDFUL.

(3, 4) "Oil." That was all, but it was absolutely necessary to have it to replenish the dying lamps (8, "going out," margin).

The oil is taken as meaning several things, but the clearest meaning, and one which all Christians agree to, is that a follower of Jesus must have the Holy Spirit.

We have a command in Eph. v. 18, "Be filled with the Spirit," and we find all through the New Testament He takes a prominent place in all teaching and advice with regard to pleasing God, living the Christ-life, and entrance into the heavenly Home See also 1 John iii. 24; Rom. viii. 9, 14, and the whole of the Book of the Acts, &c.

3. THE WARNING WORD.

(13) "Watch!" How often has this word come from the lips of Christ.

(10) To watch is to be ready. To watch is to go inside for fuller joy and happiness (Matt. xxv. 21, 23).

(11) Not to watch is to be shut out in the dark, to hear words that will strike misery into the heart: "I know you not" (12).

Oh! be warned in time. Prepare now (Amos iv. 12). Be wise (Matt. vii. 24-27), lest you hear those awful words, "Depart" (Matt. xxvi. 41), "I know you not."

Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

THE annual meetings of this Mission were this year held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, on the last day of the week of prayer. Mr. J. E. MATHIESON presided at the morning meeting, and briefly commented upon Isa. xxvi. and xxvii. Some time was spent in prayer for blessing upon the workers of the Mildmay and other missions to the Jews, for grace to be witnesses for Christ, and that the eyes of Israel may be opened. Praise was offered for the numerous mercies of the year, for Jews brought to Christ, and the deeper interest in the work manifested by Christians.

Rev. JOHN WILKINSON gave a summary of the operations at the Central Hall. The Medical Mission is carried on by three doctors and several qualified nurses. The total attendances of patients last year numbered over 23,000. At the Convalescent Home the Jews remain under Christian influence after they have been treated at the Medical Mission. In the Children's Home twenty-one Jewish boys and girls are under healthy instruction, and others who were trained there in early days are now adorning their Christian profession. The night school for Jewish children, opened at Wellclose Square in 1876 for fifteen children, is now held at the Central Hall, and numbers 150. The sewing class for women has between 200 and 300 members. Classes for young people and Sunday morning meetings are well attended, both by Christian Jews and seekers after the truth. Copies of the Scriptures are despatched nearly all over the world, over a million New Testaments in various languages having been distributed since the inauguration of the Mission. Itinerant work is carried on throughout the three kingdoms, and there are agents in Russia, North and South Africa, and Breslau.

At the evening gathering, Colonel MORTON requested prayer for several friends who were laid aside by sickness. Particulars of the Medical Mission were given by Dr. Dickson, who read some extracts from his diary on individual cases. He often wished he could put the Gospel so plainly that those who hear but once might then believe; but he found that it required precept upon precept, line upon line.

Home of Industry, 272, Bethnal Green Road, N.E.—Miss Annie Macpherson writes in terms of thankfulness on behalf of the poor women and children for whom friends have forwarded woollen and other garments. Packets of tea had also been received, and some Canadian friends sent cheeses. Some very distressing cases of poverty were relieved. Miss Macpherson adds a word on the need for temperance work, instancing a case in which, as a result of alcoholic indulgence, a wife deserted her husband and family, having sold even her husband's coat to buy strong drink.

Phœnix Home for Blind Women.—In spite of minor perplexities and anxieties, calling for much patience, thought, and discretion, the life and welfare of this institution at St. John's Wood continue to be maintained with happy results. The causes for thankfulness and hope are numerous, and exceed all drawbacks. The workers are constantly encouraged by the claims made upon their industry in the matter of knitting orders, which are undertaken and discharged with promptitude. A stock of knitted goods is kept at the Home for inspection and purchase. Numerous friends, by kindly visits, reading, or letter-writing, and various gifts, contribute to the happiness and comfort of these afflicted ones. Both committee and family appreciate the unfailing thoughtful consideration thus manifested. The hon. treasurer and secretary is Miss Morgan, 16, Elm Tree Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

The Simultaneous Mission.

A DAY OF PRAYER.

A SPIRIT of large expectancy evidently prevails among Christian people, in view of the Simultaneous Mission which opens in London this week; and the hopeful outlook seems to be fully justified by the way in which God is disposing those who serve Him to much earnest prayer. From eleven o'clock in the morning until nine at night, the hours of Monday were devoted to momentous business with heaven, on the part of those who came together from time to time for the purpose, in Queen's Hall.

It was encouraging to see so many present for the first hour.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN!

At the outset, Rev. F. B. Meyer laid before Almighty God the great sorrow which was upon all hearts in that the life of our beloved Queen seemed only a question of hours. All joined in prayer that a sense of the Divine presence and support must be realized by the departing one, and those who constitute the Royal Family gathered at Osborne House; that the tradition of Her Majesty's long, glorious, and virtuous life may influence the whole century; and that the tender associations of the Royal sick bed may have a softening influence upon the angry passions of men. Prayers in the same sense were frequent throughout the day.

After the reading of a few verses from John xvii., Rev. Dr. Thornton continued in prayer that a revived Church may tell upon a dead world; and the sense of God's presence was intensified in words of song by Miss Ada Rose, about being "Shut in with Thee." Further song ministry was given later by Miss Rose and by Rev. W. J. Mayers.

Rev. F. B. Meyer said that one sign of spiritual revival in connection with the Mission, is seen in the unity which prevails among all the ministers of our Free Churches; and it is pleasant to know that the Evangelical clergy of the Church of England are with the movement in sympathy, if not outwardly.

In taking conduct of the first hour, Rev. F. S. Webster said it was his duty and joy to help to the utmost of his power a movement which had led him months ago to arrange for a "New Century Mission" in his own church, to be held in some six weeks' time. From in Nehemiah's days, he enforced the necessity for spiritual building as well as for regenerative work, in view of the many breaches made by Satan in the walls of national character. "Are we going," said he, "to make London feel that we are tremendously in earnest? Let our ministry be founded upon the three truths, 'It is written,' 'It is finished,' and 'It is I'—a living Presence which shall make God's people equal to the spiritual need of London."

In response to a telegram telling of a relapse in the case of Dr. Harry Guinness, Rev. John McNeill remembered the sufferer in prayer. At the end of every hour, a hymn was sung to facilitate the quiet coming and going of the people.

Growing numbers marked the second hour, for which Rev. Dr. Horton counselled concentration of thought and prayer upon realization of the connection between of souls. Fervent desires in this sense, and expressions of entire dependence upon God for his own work, were voiced by Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson and others, interspersed with brief readings from those "Songs of degrees," which may be called fifteen steps up to Zion. "Lord, have mercy upon professional and business men, and upon all classes," was the burden of one cry; and numerous brief supplications of a personal nature followed from all parts of the hall.

As one speaker remarked, every vacant chair seemed to represent a holy soul in some part of the world who was pleading with God, in union with the spirit of this gathering. In the absence, through illness, of Rev. F. W. Bourne, who was to have conducted the next hour, Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant sought to encourage faith in a prayer-answering God. He asked intercession on behalf of men who are feeling the need of the anointing Spirit for the declaration of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. After he had mentioned some remarkable effects from the Spirit of conviction coming upon men in days gone by, several earnest prayers were made for an outpouring of a like blessing upon this great city. Remarking on God's world being white unto harvest, Mr. Sarjeant testified, from experience, that men everywhere, in every condition of life and development of sin, are asking where they may see Jesus. They who would satisfy this inquiry must be and filled by the Holy Ghost. If the family altar has been broken down, let it be rebuilt, and let us there remember this Mission before God.

Under the leading of Rev. Tolefree Parr, an hour was devoted to prayer specially on behalf of the young. He was followed by Rev. Silvester Horne, who directed the thoughts of his hearers to spiritual needs in connection with the business life of this city, exhorting to supplication touching those who are in peril of losing their souls in the worship of Mammon, and asking prayer that the influence of a purified city may be felt throughout the civilized world. "Have faith in God," not talk about it, was a message brought by Gipsy Smith, for the lifting heavenward of dark and sinful London.

Some "hearts' deepest desires," briefly expressed all over the meeting, covered, among other things, revival in order to rejoicing in God (Psa. lxxxv. 6), salvation of the fallen and outcast, a wider awakening of the Christian conscience in regard to the evils of the drink traffic, and the honouring of the Holy Ghost by larger expectation of blessing.

Rev. John McNeill conducted the next hour of prayer; and the story of blind Bartimæus, as told in the evangelist's inimitable way, was found to have many lessons for the coming Mission. In the case of the blind man, there was a bold crying out and dealing with God at first hand. Many charged Bartimæus that he should hold his peace; and alas! many to-day have nothing of the Saviour's spirit of love for the lost. May the Master make us in earnest about the salvation of men, though we stammer, stutter, and fail to put things nicely. "Lord, don't wait for us," said the speaker, "but let the selfish indifference of thy organized professing people, to perishing souls, rouse Thee once again."

"Just speak up, that we may pray for your dear ones," said Mr. McNeill, and many were the touching responses. Then Rev. F. B. Meyer urged that prayer be supplemented by personal pleading and effort in all such cases.

Other leaders of devotion were Revs. Drs. Geo. Hanson and Monro Gibson. Mr. Henry Varley spoke of revival in Bradford, Ontario, and the abounding need for one in London with its many forms of unblushing public sin. Simple but effective application of Bible circumstances and principles to modern times were mingled with prayers that Christ may expel from London the unclean spirit and all other embodiments of evil. National and social sins of ambition, avarice, cruelty, and linking of pleasure with vice were confessed by Dr. Newman Hall; and another petitioner asked God to end the spectacle of two professedly Christian races warring with one another, in the sight of the heathen.

At seven o'clock Lord Kinnaird took the chair; and succeeding speakers offered practical suggestions for the Mission. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes said that the efford needs that spirit of sympathy which has endeared the Queen to her people. The object is not any denominational or sectarian gain, but the winning to Christ, through of every soul for whom He died. Under God, the result depends upon the extent of our expectation. He asked for the singing of the Doxology, in the confidence that God will do unparalleled things for London.

From experience in Glasgow, Rev. John McNeill uttered a warning against breakdown through the failure of church members as regards loyalty to sectional arrangements. The principle of is as effective as it is simple; but the difficulty is that so few Christians act upon it. An excess of reserve breeds a spiritual chill.

"BRING ANOTHER WITH YOU,"

Rev. F. B. Meyer suggested that Christians who belong to no local cluster of churches shall invite neighbours to some room in their houses, and make that a centre of work for God.

In a closing address, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan expressed the conviction that this whole movement is of God; but He will only act through those upon whom his heart is set. Christ's compassionate view of the multitude came from the standpoint of communion with the Father; and He saw the Divine possibilities as well as the degradation of the people. When the Holy Ghost gives us that vision, He energises us for the service which it demands. God is moving over London; and it depends upon each one of his people, whether they are to have a personal share in the blessing.

NOTES AND MEMS.

DURING the Mission the daily prayer meeting held at Exeter Hall at 1 p.m. will be led by Rev. F. B. Meyer. Praise will be the prevailing note at the gathering on Monday, February 4.

Mr. W. R. Lane's mission at Regent's Park Chapel is fixed for February 2-11, and will thus fulfil an additional purpose in continuing and consolidating the work in that part of the Metropolis.

Rev. Thomas Waugh is to be the missioner at Devonshire Square, Hackney; the Weaver Brothers at Shoreditch Tabernacle; Mr. Henry Varley at Bloomsbury, and Rev. T. Ferrier Hulme, at Wesley's Chapel.

Following up the Mission, the workers of the London City Mission purpose, during February, March, and April, holding services of a like character in their various halls. Like all the work of this Society, the effort is intended to be auxiliary to the churches, and it is earnestly desired that the outcome may be to add many members to the latter.

Rev. J. Elanagan, minister of the flourishing Primitive Methodist Mission at St. George's Hall, S.E., takes the services at St. John's Square, E.C. (Rev. J. E. Wakerley's); Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, is planned for West Hampstead Congregational Church; Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross, at Regent Square Presbyterian Church; Dr. J. Monro Gibson at Allen Street Congregational Church, and Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, at East Finchley Congregational Church.

Among Rev. John McNeill's engagements are the following: January 24, at 7.30 p.m., Metropolitan Tabernacle; January 25, at midday, City Temple, at 8 p.m., Westminster Chapel; January 27, at 11, 3.30, and 7, St. James' Hall; January 28, at 1 p.m., Metropolitan Tabernacle, 3.30, Exeter Hall, and 7.30, City Temple; January 29 and 30, at noon, City Temple, 3.30, Exeter Hall, 7.30, City Temple; January 31, at 1 p.m., Metropolitan Tabernacle, 3.30, Exeter Hall, 7.30, City Temple.

Mr. Henry Varley has arrived in England from Australia and hopes to take part in the Mission. He may be addressed, to the care of Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C. Mr. Varley writes:—"In regard to my return, I have no doubt that I am in the will of my Lord. I could not bear the thought of not having some little part in the battle."

Rev. F. B. Meyer writes:—"There are many earnest Christian people who are not connected with the Free Church Mission centres, who would yet be glad to help in the attempt to bring the Gospel to the masses of London. I want to suggest, through you, that they should throw open their kitchens, parlours, and drawing rooms and invite their neighbours night after night by specially addressed letter. They could at least read aloud one of Mr. Moody's, Mr. Aitken's or Mr. Spurgeon's sermons. Many might be induced to come to a private house who would not enter a place of worship. And there are few homes where a solo or two could not be arranged. Let us try to give the message of the Gospel 'to every creature,' and place our upper rooms at the Lord's disposal."

Mr. Herbert Leng, of the City Police Institute, writes: "As it is difficult to arrange any special effort for policemen in connection with the mission, may I ask for prayer that ways may be opened for them to share in the blessing? We shall hold a prayer meeting daily during the week at the Institute, 5, Sussex Place, Leadenhall Street, at 12.30 p.m., at which Christian friends will be heartily welcomed."

Strenuous efforts are being put forth to influence South London. Mr. Gipsy Smith is at the Metropolitan Tabernacle as follows:—Jan. 26, 7.30 p.m., workers' meeting; Jan. 27-Feb. 4, Sundays, at 3 and 6.30, and week nights (except Saturday) at 7.30, mission meetings. In the same building, Revs. J. McNeill and H. Price Hughes conduct meetings at 1 p.m. daily, Jan. 28-Feb. 1, and Bible readings will be given on the same days at 4 p.m., by Rev. J. W. Ewing.

A correspondent writes, urging that Christians "should not sit under the preaching of the Gospel themselves without at least bringing some one unconverted soul with them, any or every time they go. The object of the Mission is, as some one has well expressed it, to 'catch sinners,' and not to 'cuddle saints;' and if all the seats are filled with those who are converted, obviously the Mission must fail in its results."

* * *

Writing on the subject of Preparation, a correspondent says: "Some of us are old enough to remember the labours of such men as the late Professor Finney, Rev. James Caughey, and others of similar spirit. These men of God, I believe, invariably began their missions by deep heart-searching addresses to the churches, seeking, under God, to awaken the slumbering and restore those who had backslidden; thus the church was quickened and prepared for efforts in the power of the Spirit for the conversion of the unsaved. Is not such a course the one most likely, with the Lord's blessing, to succeed to-day? Is it not well known that the chief hindrance to the church's progress to-day is her prevailing worldliness? Everywhere, alas, is this but too manifest. Surely this must first be dealt with."

The preparatory devotional meeting held on Saturday, January 19, in Regent Square Presbyterian Church, agreeably disappointed the fears of its organizers, a large audience and excellent spirit characterizing the gatherings. Complete arrangements have been made for addresses to all the Sunday school children within the area. In a preliminary sermon last Lord's Day morning—text, "Be not faithless but believing,"—Rev. Alexander Connell pled earnestly for a searching of hearts. "What do you believe? Do you believe that Jesus Christ is ALIVE." He showed that in the measure of their belief will be the usefulness of workers during the mission.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE labours of Mr. Swanston Smith, late secretary of the Camden Road Association, have received cordial recognition at the hands of the members and friends. Rev. J. M. Llewellyn Evans, secretary of the testimonial fund, was able to hand Mr. Smith a cheque for £45 5s.

Association work has been successfuly inaugurated at Dudley. The Mayor presided over a large public meeting, which was addressed by the Archdeacon of London. Already 150 young men have become members of the Association.

At the recent social gathering of members and friends of the Kingston-on-Thames and Surbiton Y.M.C.A. there was a large attendance. The assembly took place in the convenient and spacious new building recently presented to the Association by the president, Captain Cundy; and a helpful address on the Y.M.C.A. motto for 1901 was given by Rev. W. A. Challacombe, Vicar of New Malden.

Mr. Haley, President of the Wakefield Association, held a tea and reception to introduce the new secretary, Mr. Samuel Roberts, who has done excellent work both as member and secretary of the Cork Y.M.C.A. Hearty words of welcome were offered by several friends, and Mr. Roberts in reply gave evidence of his intention to maintain in the work a high spiritual tone, and to seek as his primary duty to win young men for Christ.

The Sheltering Homes.—Mrs. L. Birt writes from the Homes, Myrtle Street, Liverpool:—"We hope to establish an Emigration Home for boys and girls under the age of fifteen. We have about a thousand applications yearly in Canada from Christian families, who desire to take one of our training into their midst. The prospects of the young emigrants are great, compared with what would probably be their lot in England. This is shown by the prosperity which has attended those whom we have placed out."

Million Pledge Crusade.

IT is gratifying to note with what heartiness the Twentieth Century Million Pledge Crusade is being endorsed. It is growingly realized that the campaign against intemperance must find its home in the Churches. This was made evident at the Conference of representatives of various religious bodies and organizations, which was held at Craven Hall, W., on Monday morning. Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES presided, and in opening the Conference, found it difficult to speak or think of any other subject but the illness of our beloved and revered Sovereign. Yet he thought they could not render any greater expression of their sympathy in celebration of the longest, greatest, and best reign in the history of their country than by uniting enthusiastically in a movement which is calculated to promote the welfare of the people at large. Such a movement, he believed, would do a great deal upon which the hearts of Christian people were set. In the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches they had an organization ready to hand capable of carrying on the work of securing the million pledges. The work was one which should enlist all patriots, all lovers of humanity, and all professors of religion, and if only proper efforts were made the cause of intemperance would receive a blow from which it would never recover.

TO SECURE THAT LEGISLATION

Mr. JOHN HILTON moved a resolution, expressing the hearty sympathy of the Conference with the crusade, commending it to the co-operation of all the Free Churches and temperance organizations of the country, believing that this aggressive movement at the present time will be the most effective method of stimulating all departments of temperance work—legislative, social, and moral. The resolution was seconded by Rev. Dr. HORTON, and supported by Mr. MALINS, Chief Templar. A suggestion was made that the Church of England should be invited to co-operate, and a member of that Church present, replied that they had the question well in hand.

Helpful words were also spoken by Mr. W. S. CAINE, M.P., Rev. J. THORNLEY, Mr. J. T. SEARS, and others.

Mission Work in Dublin.

FIFTY years ago an effort was made by Revs. Alexander Dallas and F. C. MacCarthy, D.D., to introduce a systematic agency for the preaching of the Gospel, visiting from house to house, and holding classes and meetings specially for Roman Catholics, and establishing schools for their children. The progress and development of the work have given cause for much thanksgiving, for while many of the early promoters have passed away, it is still maintained amid many tokens of success. The Dublin Mission Homes and Schools are scattered throughout the city in its poorest districts.

The work for which the local committee is responsible requires £1,000 per month. The Homes and schools support 600 children, and assist with food and clothing 400 others attending the four free day schools of the Society for Irish Church Missions.

Mrs. Ellen Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam Street, Dublin, will gladly forward copies of the annual report to friends interested in this Protestant work among the poor Roman Catholics in Ireland.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.—On Wednesday, January 16, a large number of members and friends of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, assembled in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, to give thanks for the blessings of the past year and to seek wisdom and strength for days to come. Mrs. Maynard, of Wimbledon, presided during the first hour. Mrs. Campbell, of Streatham, during the second. Revs. H. Russell Wakefield (vicar of St. Mary's Bryanston Square), and J. P. Gledstone (Streatham Congregational Church) gave helpful addresses. The meeting was a source of stimulus to those who were privileged to attend.

Obituary.

MR. THOMAS NEWBERRY.

In the ninety-first year of his age, this beloved and devoted servant of Christ entered into rest on Wednesday last week, at Weston-super-Mare. Well known and highly esteemed, especially as the editor of "The Englishman's Bible," his removal will be deeply felt by a wide circle of friends in many lands, by whom this, the greatest work of his life, is much valued. In his joy, however, we must rejoice, as we glorify God in him.

While for some months, after a severe illness last spring, he was obliged, owing to declining strength, to forego all public service, our aged brother was able to continue his regular Bible Reading in his own house on Tuesday mornings up to within a week of Christmas, when it was "suspended," the proposal being to resume on January 15, but the Lord's disposal was otherwise, and "far better" for him, who was then to be on the very threshold of the Home for which he longed. The subject of his last reading was 2 Cor. v., and now for him whom we shall greatly miss it is "absent from the body, at home with the Lord."

For some days Mr. Newberry suffered much—with perfect patience—from acute bronchitis, and the resultant strain on an already weak heart, but towards the end all this had gone, and it was a gentle falling on sleep. For many years his eyes—sacrificed to the service of the Lord on behalf of his people—were closed to all earthly sights. What a joy at last to see—to "see the King in his beauty!"

The mortal remains were laid to rest on Monday, where many other loved ones sleep, in the Weston Cemetery, there to await the full joy and glory of the Resurrection Morn, when Jesus comes to claim his own. Much that is precious fell from the lips of our departed brother during his illness. Let one gem suffice:

"With long life will I satisfy Him, and show Him my salvation. I am thoroughly satisfied. I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with 'thy likeness.' Not his glory, but HIMSELF."

Personalia.

The COUNTESS SCHIMMELMANN expects to be in England about the middle of March, probably to hold evangelistic meetings.

DR. HARRY GUINNESS, we regret to say, has had another relapse, causing anxiety to his friends. There was a slight improvement reported on Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. JOHN ODLING, after twenty years' service, has resigned his post as secretary to Dr. Barnardo's Homes. It will interest many to know that the severance has been made on the best of terms; after many years of stress Mr. Odling needs rest. By and by he will be seeking less exacting work.

The Growth of Vivisection.—It is very gratifying to find that punishment by fine and reprimand has been inflicted upon a German professor at one of the universities in that country for carrying out unlawful experiments upon the child patients in a hospital. Possibly this will help to put a stop to that brutal vivisection of the human being which in certain quarters appears to have followed as a natural consequence that legalized torturing of animals which is a disgrace to our civilization. There is reason to fear that at one large London hospital at least ground has been given for the belief that the poor patients are not safe from the knife or the virus of the prying scientist; but it is, we fear, too much to hope that the example given by the German Government may be followed in this country.

Friendless and Fallen.—On Tuesday last week the annual united prayer meeting in connection with the Homes and Open-all-Night Refuge, was held in the Council Room of Exeter Hall. Nearly 150 friends were present. Rev. E. A. Stuart delivered a searching and yet inspiring address, which will long be remembered by those who heard it. Much prayer was offered for a blessing upon the preaching of the Gospel in the homes, as well as praise for the success which has attended the work in the past. During last year 524 young women and girls were sheltered at the Open-all-Night Refuge (the Ever Open Door), while 185 were admitted to the benefits of the Homes and underwent a course of careful training in household duties so as to fit them for future positions of usefulness in life. The total number benefited since 1857, when the Homes were founded, is 37,093.

Evangelistic.

King's Weigh House Chapel.

DURING the last week this large West End Chapel has been the scene of a revival. The stirring addresses of Mr. Leonard Weaver have not only been used to the salvation of sinners, but the whole church has been roused. It has given the workers great joy to see both old and young, rich and poor, taking their stand for Christ.

At first the congregations were small, but each night there have been seekers, and incidents of a pathetic nature have taken place in the after-meetings. The Mission will continue during the coming week; Mr. Leonard Weaver will again be the speaker, and the soloists will be Mr. R. S. Bradbrook and Miss Emily Angel.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Chatham.

A ten days' mission was held by Mr. W. R. Lane from January 5 to 14 in connection with the Rochester, Chatham, and New Brompton Free Churches. The meetings were held in the Town Hall, Chatham. On the Saturday a large number of workers met to welcome the missioner. The first Sunday afternoon service was for young people, and the second for men only, when a great crowd listened with marked interest and attention to an impassioned and solemn appeal. The interest, attendance, and blessing increased as the mission went on. Mr. Lane has a warm heart and a manly style. His addresses were sound in doctrine, full of Scripture, forcible in argument, and pathetic in appeal. One most pleasing feature of the mission was the number of young men who decided for Christ.

The closing meeting of the mission was a remarkable one. Mr. Lane told the deeply interesting story of his conversion. The hall was crowded, and hundreds vainly sought admittance. Mr. Lane's visit will live long in the memories of the people, and the results will abide in the quickened spiritual life of Christians, and in the hearts of many who commenced a new life during the mission.

W. W. B., President of Council.

Mr. Charles Cook at Morecambe.

The mission in this northern watering place, which began on Saturday, January 12, in the Albert Hall, is unique from the fact that for the first time in the history of the town, all the Free Churches have combined for evangelistic work. From the outset of the first meeting the power of the Holy Ghost rested upon the assembly, and before the meeting closed some bright young men had clearly testified to their acceptance of Christ. The Sunday afternoon congregation crowded the building, and so many were turned from the doors that it was imperative to secure increased accommodation. The evening service was therefore announced for the large Wesleyan Chapel, Green Street. Here an impressive sermon was preached, and about a dozen young men sought the inquiry room. Among these was the son of one of the ministers, and the father's touching prayer of thanksgiving was most affecting. The afternoon Bible readings have brought out from 200 to 250 persons, and have been very profitable.

The inquirers range from Sunday scholars to men and women of over fifty—an unusual proportion being young men. In one family we hear of four inquirers, in several others two. A mother and daughter rose side by side. A glad father, with his lad, caught hold of Mr. Cook and cried, "This is my son," and they wept and prayed together. Wednesday's night meeting was memorable. In response to the appeal, many rose in the hall and later walked down, some from the gallery, to the front of the platform, to receive words of counsel. Many have sought salvation during the delivery of the addresses, handing in their names later. On Thursday night, January 17, the manifestations of power, joy, and blessing, were most remarkable, and the whole town appears moved—perhaps as never before. To Him be the praise!

H. C.

Mr. Thomas Payne has conducted a nine-days' mission at the Free Gospel Hall, Upper Park Road, Hampstead. Believers were quickened, and souls won for Christ.

Mr. J. H. Thompson has conducted an eight days' mission in connection with the Mariners' Friend Society, Old Gravel Lane, E. There were a number of seekers.

Mr. William Forbes has been holding meetings for women engaged in the pantomimes, in Leeds, Bradford, and Liverpool. He is this week in Edinburgh. He has also been preaching in Blackpool and Stirling.

A correspondent writes: "Rev. D. T. Patterson, of Heywood, has conducted a series of special services at Ogden Baptist Chapel. The preached Word has been accompanied by the blessing of God."

The Cotelingam Brothers have conducted a nine days' mission at York, holding the Sunday services in the theatre, and the week-night gatherings in the various chapels of the city. Their addresses were earnest and telling, and large audiences heard them with interest and profit.

Mr. James Eyres is holding a Gospel mission in connection with the Y.M.C.A., Llanelly. Large audiences have come together, and manifest tokens of blessing have been given. Owing to the crowded state of the hall, a much larger building was secured for the second Sunday's gatherings.

Blessing has been given in Mr. Samuel Levermore's meetings in Edinburgh. A larger hall was taken, and the mission was prolonged. This week Mr. Levermore is giving addresses at the mid-day meeting at Carrubbers Close.

J. C. A.

Rev. F. C. Spurr and Mr. Henry Kearns have just concluded a ten days' mission at Rugby—arranged by the Rugby and District Free Church Council. Bible readings were given in the Wesleyan Church, and the evening meetings were held in the Congregational Church. On Sunday evening the building was crowded.

An eight days' mission was recently conducted by Mr. Frank Hewitt, of Caterham Valley, at the Gospel Hall, Oxted, Surrey. Praise is given for much blessing to believers. In answer to prayer, toward the end of the mission, the unsaved came in to hear the Gospel. Many who were afraid to come in, stood outside to listen.

A fortnight's mission has been conducted at the Sailors' Institute, King's Lynn, by Mr. D. Abba, of Hull, who holds short meetings for Norwegians, speaking and singing in their own language, prior to giving addresses in English. The congregations and the interest increased as the mission proceeded, and there were several cases of blessing.

Sergeant Pullinger and Mr. J. C. Gray, of the Open-Air Mission, have concluded an eight days' mission, of high spiritual tone, in Gravesend Ragged School. Blessing must follow the earnest addresses and Gospel solos. Open-air meetings were also held in the streets and courts in the neighbourhood, and short services conducted in the lodging houses.

F. W. Crowhurst.

Prayer was asked for a Gospel meeting in Hotel Continental, Paris. Those who prayed will be thankful to know their prayers were abundantly answered. Several Russians and well-known Roman Catholics helped to get the people in. At the close the Lord's presence was so realized, that in the "one Spirit" we all knelt in silent worship. Prayer is asked for another meeting at the same place on Tuesday, February 8, at 8.45 p.m.

R.

The Bourne Free Church Council were unable to hold their mission services at the time fixed by the National Federation, so the services were held from January 5 to 14. It has been a time of real spiritual awakening. Every night the different churches of the town have been crowded with eager, anxious listeners, and over 150 persons have openly testified to their acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. Mr. Henry Thorne was the missioner, and his appeals have been richly blessed.

Mr. Alex. Holmes writes from 70, Gough Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham:—"During the past four months my wife and I have been privileged to hold evangelistic services in connection with a Bible van in and around Birmingham, and to spread pure literature. The Gospel has proved to be the power of God unto salvation in not a few cases. A great many pledges have been taken, and house-to-house visitation has been undertaken. Upwards of 20,000 tracts and books have been given away. The Gospel in song has been the means of winning many."

Our friend, Mr. James Wharton, to whom we recently referred, writes us more fully about his mission among the coloured people in the Southern States. After successful meetings at Washington (D.C.), Greensboro, Hillsboro, and Raleigh (N.C.), special blessing was experienced at Lowell, where there were over forty conversions from Sunday till Friday, nearly all adults. From King's Mountain he writes: "The spiritual tone and influence of this academy is far-reaching. Any who come to it unsaved are soon made subjects of prayer. Quite a number have been converted, and the result is that nearly all of the 120 young men and women boarders are now professing Christians."

Miss Glover, evangelist, of Edinburgh, has been conducting services at Cage Lane Mission Hall, Plumstead. Although the weather was inclement and so many of the men at the Woolwich Arsenal were on overtime, the meetings have been wonderfully attended. They have steadily increased also in spiritual power. Souls have been born into the Kingdom, and believers quickened. The hall was crowded on Sunday evening, many coming from long distances. A solemn address was given on the words, "When thou art spoiled, what wilt thou do?" (Jer. iv. 30). Miss Glover commences on Sunday, 27th inst., a fortnight's mission in North Leith United Free Church, Edinburgh, thereafter returning to England to take part in the United Mission. She will greatly value the prayers of the readers of The Christian.

Mr. Barry Wake.—Jan. 26-Feb. 4 (Simul. Mission), Uxbridge.

Rev. J. T. Vine.—Till Jan. 25, Westbourne Grove; 26-Feb. 3, Peckham (Simul. Mission).

Rev. Frank M. Wells, B.A. (late Chaplain with the American forces in the Philippines), is coming to England. He will remain in this country during the Simultaneous Mission, and will be at liberty to conduct evangelistic services. Engagements in America will compel him to return at the close of the Mission. Mr. Wells may be addressed, care of Mr. F. Spencer Johnson, 49, London Road, London, S.E.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on the work of a missionary returning to work among Mahommedans.

For blessing on the work of Evangelists labouring with a Gospel car in Derbyshire villages.

For the Evangelists of the Evangelization Society, that much blessing may rest upon their many missions.

For blessing on an eight-days' mission for young people being held at the Gospel Mission Hall, Moss Grove, Kingswinford.

For a United Mission at Coleford, Gloucester, February 10-18, by Rev. A. T. Jones, Newport, Mon.

Notes & Comments

WITH the death of our late revered Sovereign, the last of the great figures of the nineteenth century has passed away, and of them all she was the greatest in the loftiness of her character, the purity of her aims, the quality of her influence. It would seem as though a leaf had been turned over in the great Book of Days, and that the world, with the first days of the twentieth century, were facing a new era without the stay and guidance to which it had grown accustomed. Humanly speaking, this is so; and it is well to acknowledge it. There may be darkness and storm ahead before the nations; we are at least being led by a way that we know not. Will this solemn sense of apprehension with which the future is being faced by so many, quicken the world's desire for a higher than human guidance, and deepen the conviction that there is a Divine hand shaping the world's destinies, and that God rules? "The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice!"

One of the great qualities which time discovered in the character of Queen Victoria was her serenity under misunderstanding during the early years of her reign. Patiently and quietly she did her duty, and waited for the appreciation of her people. This did not by any means come at once as regards her personal worth; and her genius for statesmanship was not acknowledged for a still longer period. Meanwhile, as wife, mother, and Queen, she filled her functions with a cheery whole-heartedness and a loving devotion untouched by bitterness. When at last her worth was discovered, and the love and loyalty of her people were lavished upon her in an unceasing flood, this in nowise disturbed her self-possession, but she retained to the end her unconsciousness of merit and her love of simplicity. This wonderful poise and steadiness of character was only possible because Queen Victoria did not look to man but to God, for her standard of conduct, and for appreciation and judgment. In this she has left a noble example to her successors and her people.

"As I get older," our good Queen once said to Archbishop Benson, "I cannot understand the world. I cannot comprehend its littleness. When I look at its frivolities and littlenesses, it seems to me as if they were all a little mad." Such a judgment, uttered soberly as the ripe experience of one of the acutest observers and healthiest minds of the century, and yet with a charity not always shown by the censors of the great world's ways and manners, comes back to us with a fresh weight and emphasis now that the august speaker has passed whither "beyond these voices there is peace." The world's feverish pursuit of pleasure, of earthly aims that vanish with their attainment; its pettiness, jealousies, unmeaning resentments; its oblivion of "the things that really matter:"—is it not a species of madness? And is not the first step towards the true life that suggested in the Prodigal's story in the words, "When he came to himself"?

Curiously enough the last King Edward who reigned in England found himself in the afterwash of a great sacerdotal controversy, and out of it all issued the Prayer Books of Edward VI., the chief thing associated with his name. The compromise of that time in the matter of the Prayer Book has really been the chief source of unhappy controversy in the Church of England to the present time. The retention of Popish names and expressions has furnished the Ritualists with some sort of handle. Is it too much to hope that the long demanded revision of the Prayer Book will take place during the reign of the new Edward? Nothing less than a rigorous revision will suffice.

In the universal sympathy shown by French officials and the French press towards this country in the time of our national sorrow, we may fairly read the true feeling of the French people towards ourselves. The Paris Figaro remarked last Wednesday that the English people may now appraise the alleged Anglophobia of the French people at its proper value. The heart of France is with us, as also that of Germany. The spontaneous outburst of affectionate feeling in all parts of Europe is a most gratifying sign. In it alone we must hear the inner voice of the nations, and pay no attention to the discordant notes struck by obscure papers and individuals.

Rev. F. B. Meyer writes to suggest that the great crowds which may be expected to gather on Saturday next, to witness the procession at the funeral of Queen Victoria, will present an unusual opportunity for the distribution of Gospels, Gospel appeals, &c.; and that Christian Endeavourers and others should organize bands of workers for this purpose.

The people are under an extraordinary impression; a woman who refused to receive one of our visitors three weeks ago treated her civilly last week, and took her invitation, saying, "The Queen has died since you were here, and I may be next."

It is also suggested that Free Church District Councils should endeavour to obtain the use of theatres and music halls for Saturday evening, when the ordinary entertainments will be suspended, and make special efforts to fill them.

The officials of the National Free Church Council have issued a letter calling attention to the need for generous help in defraying the expenses of the Simultaneous Mission.

The organizing of this great united and unprecedented campaign for rousing the churches and reaching the outside masses, has necessarily meant a very large expenditure of money, which cannot be met by the ordinary funds of the Council.

A special fund has been opened, under the care of Mr. Evan Spicer, and contributions have already been received from several leaders of the movement, but much more is needed. It is felt that the facts of the case only require to be made known to Christians throughout the country, in order to secure a hearty and liberal response.

The Church Times thus delivers itself upon the Simultaneous Mission:—

We cannot but deplore the proposed dissenting campaign, in which it is the plan of action to sow dissension in every parish of the land . . . a campaign of wholesale proselytism.

From the first, this prejudiced organ has spoken after this manner. Its assertion is utterly untrue. We do not suppose that a single word will be uttered in the course of this Mission possessing the remotest flavour of proselytism. In view of the terrible godlessness prevalent in England, we should have thought that even a High Church journal would have been grateful for any effort to bring the people to think about eternal realities. As of old, the priest and Levite still pass by the plundered and wounded man, and at the same time object to the action of the Good Samaritan.

In contrast, a meeting was recently held at Newcastle-on-Tyne under the presidency of the Bishop. It was the outcome of an attempt made at the Church Congress to establish a real living bond of union between the Anglican and Free Churches. A society was formed bearing the name of the "Northern Christian Union." After speaking of the various ways in which both Anglicans and Free Churchmen could really unite in religious and social work, the Bishop went on to say that

He also felt the awfulness of the fact that the great masses of the people are outside all the Churches even in England, and when one looked at the heathen world the facts were still more terrible.

This seemed to him to be the great reason for a real Christian Union between believers. Such attempts as these are most praiseworthy, and they ought to be far more common than they are. There are vast numbers of believers in this country who have real essential oneness on all vital matters; and in the present state of things it is their duty, as far as possible, to unite their forces in common work. We hope that some practical way will yet be found for securing the united and continuous efforts of Evangelical Anglicans and Free Churchmen. At present, much effort is wasted for want of such a combination.

The Times, which has during the recent Church crisis, taken a strongly Protestant attitude, both towards the Romish Church and towards the Ritualistic party in the Anglican Church, refers to the Pope's recent Latin poem on the "Omens of the New Century," in these weighty words:—

There is something pathetic in the spectacle of this aged man, from his so-called prison in the Vatican, selecting for blame in the century just expired some of the very features which to most men are its title to honour; and looking forward to the reassertion, in the coming century, of a power that in many eyes has been a blight upon knowledge and a hindrance to progress.

Among the saddest features of the time in the Pope's eyes are the principle of religious liberty and the right of private judgment, which are the cherished heirlooms of the great race to which we belong, and to the reverent use of which we owe what is great and progressive in our national history since the Reformation. Truly, the hand of Rome is the hand of bondage.

Ever since the case of Dr. St. John Mivart, it has been clear that there is in this country a great unrest amongst educated Roman Catholics concerning the intolerable Papal claims. The Duke of Norfolk's recent speech at Rome has evoked a newspaper correspondence in certain London papers, in which some leading Roman Catholics express themselves with extraordinary frankness about the claim to Temporal Power. For example, one writer, referring to the attempt of Cardinal Vaughan to enforce Ultramontane views upon his co-religionists, says :—

The recent letter of rebuke to Catholic laymen from the Cardinal Archbishop and the English episcopate is out of date. To try to put back the clock for five or six centuries is as futile as anything that could be attempted. Their lordships will do well to remember that they have not to deal with the "dumb driven cattle" of mediæval times. We who claim to be Catholics boast also that we are free men, and as our pastors are not sparing of criticism of their flocks (of which we do not complain) we maintain the right—and shall exercise it—to reply in kind.

Not so long ago, the man who dared to write such an epistle, would speedily have found himself in the hands of the Inquisition. Everywhere the Papacy seems losing its grip.

The full text of the German Emperor's sermon on board the Hohenzollern, on the eve of the departure of the German detachment to China, has been translated into English. Shorn of a touch of military ardour difficult to dissociate from the occasion, this discourse is an earnest and masterly treatment of the value and need of prayer in all the affairs of life. The following illustration is full of truth as well as beauty :—

Far away in the Taunus mountains some remarkable bells are hung on the summit of the peaks. No hand ever rings them. Silent, dumb, they hang there in the sunshine. But when the storm-wind comes, they begin to swing, and then to peal, and then their chimes are heard far below, down in the valley. God, the Lord, has hung in every heart a praying bell. Yet how often in the sunshine it is silent and dumb! But when the storm-wind of trouble comes, it begins to ring. . . . Necessity teaches prayer!

It would be hard to put a much-needed fact into truer or more forcible words. "Necessity teaches prayer." But should men wait for the necessity of sorrow before they lift up "holy hands" to God? The need of prayer is perpetual, and is as great in the sunshine as in the storm.

Trouble is to us what we make of it. To such as receive it rebelliously and bitterly, or who faint beneath it, or who harden their hearts under its discipline, it is a savour of death unto death. But those who so receive it have only themselves to blame for the result. Its purpose is for quickening, not discouragement; for uplifting, not downfalling; for growth in all that is holy and true and sweet in character, not for degeneration and discouragement. The noblest men and women are what they are through the discipline and chastening of sorrow, and difficulty, and even failure. The "fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for tried gold." How true are the words of Jean Paul Richter:

The burden of suffering seems a tombstone round our neck, while in reality it is only the weight which is necessary to keep down the diver while he is hunting for pearls.

Canon Driver, it appears from a recent address upon The Old Testament in the Light of To-day, has recently urged that the principles of the so-called Higher Criticism should be taught to the children, or, in other words, that we should seek to make the young people critics rather than Christians. As well might we try to substitute the light of a half-penny candle for that of the sun (if we may judge from the gloom in which most of the Higher Critics themselves are floundering). In his edition of "The Book of Daniel, Introduction and Notes," Dr. Driver disputes the accuracy of the traditional date of the book because, he says, no Greek words could have found their way to Babylon in the sixth century B.C. Yet it is known that there were Greek colonies in Asia Minor, and that Herodotus himself visited the city about the middle of that century, and that musical instruments with Greek names were in common use there!

In some suggestive notes on "The Deeper Christian Life," that are appearing in the Evangelical Magazine, Dr. Douglas Mackenzie speaks wisely as to the conditions under which we may look for the gift of the Holy Spirit in our lives. He strongly denounces the idea that the soul needs no habits or times of devotion for his perpetual indwelling. The Spirit in a church can be quenched; the Spirit in the individual can be grieved; and He is grieved when He is neglected. The great saints whose lives have been filled, as a chalice, with the perpetual wine of the Divine presence, have always been distinguished for their regularly maintained habits of devotion, and prayer, and meditation. Such men as William Law, Richard Baxter, Jonathan Edwards, Murray McCheyne, and others, were remarkable for nothing more than for the systematic observance of religious method in their own approaches to God, and in the conduct of that secret walk with Him which the Spirit came to make possible.

We are glad to receive the following appreciation from a subscriber of long standing. May his kindly wishes in every respect be fulfilled :—

I want to congratulate you in completing another year of faithful testimony—just as much so as you did more than forty years ago. I do not know anything apart from the Word of God and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, that does me so much good as the dear old Christian. May it long live to testify clearly after you and I are gone! I wish it were in many more homes. It certainly fills up a want. Never before this moment has the thought entered my mind—"How much I would miss The Christian were its publication to cease!"

The custom of baring the head at funerals, whatever the weather may be, is one "more honoured in the breach than the observance," and we are glad to find that many thoughtful and kind-hearted families now request that it should be ignored at the graveside of their friends. This was done, by request, it is well known, at the grave of Mr. Spurgeon, and recently at Dr. Cave's funeral. So many grievous results have come about through this custom, which, of course, arose from tender regard for the dead and deep sympathy with the living, that if with the new century it could be dropped by common consent it would be a great boon. A kindly suggestion on the part of mourners would soon secure this end.

Christians anxious to avoid complicity in the sorrow and sin consequent upon "cruel cheapness," have from time to time written to us asking for information as to ways by which they might keep clear from the responsibility. To all such who may apply to her, Miss Chandler, the Rectory, Poplar, E., will gladly send details of the Goodwill Outfitting Society, which has been started with the object of giving employment to some of the women and girls in the East End, "who are at present employed as machinists and dressmakers for terribly long hours and at disgracefully low wages." As the society pays a fair wage for a fair day's work, and the workers share the profits, and work in perfectly satisfactory surroundings, the movement deserves the support of those who are interested in the temporal and spiritual well-being of their less fortunate sisters.

Rev. James Mountain's Memorial Hymn, "Sleep, Noble Queen!" has been graciously accepted and acknowledged by His Majesty the King in the following letter:—

The Private Secretary is commanded by the King to express His Majesty's thanks to you for your kind and loyal letter of sympathy, and for the accompanying Hymn.

The Hymn has also been accepted with kind acknowledgment by Her Majesty the Queen and other members of the Royal Family.

We are very glad that the London County Council has had the courage to abandon the public-house licences which it has acquired in the Holborn to Strand improvement. Of course it means a sacrifice of money, but it is a great gain to morals. The overwhelming majority that voted for this measure is proof that we have men of the right sort looking after London's affairs. More power to their arm! We wish the Council would do the same with the licences of the Alexandra Palace.

When the president of the Playgoers' Club thinks it necessary to protest against the tendencies of modern plays, we may reasonably conclude that the strictures which we, with other Christian journals, have been compelled to pass upon the stage, are justified. Last week this gentleman addressed the members of the Club and expressed his views on the modern play in no measured terms. He told his audience that Instead of the airy sweetness of former days, they were asked to inhale fœtid gas from the nation's social sewage.

He went on to say that the worst sort of pessimism was openly taught upon the stage. But it is a question of demand and supply. The reign of "realism" in latter-day novels has corrupted the public mind and given it a taste for the unclean; and the theatre panders to the depraved taste. And yet, despite the growing criticism, even of theatrical critics themselves, we are still told that the modern theatre is a great school of morals, and that the abuses of the past are swept away!

To those who are praying and working for the good government and the Christianizing of India, Mr. Vincent Nash's new book, The Great Famine and its Causes, will prove very painful reading. The writer exposes ruthlessly the miserable, cheese paring policy which insisted on the collection of the revenue from the unfortunate famine-stricken ryots, adopted a stonebreaking test, and gave minimum rations, seventy per cent. below that of the convicts. The results were sufficiently terrible, as we all know; but what would they have been if private people in Britain had not taken up the financial burden which should have been promptly borne by the State?

Just as we go to press we receive The Call of God, a series of addresses by the leading preachers of the Simultaneous Mission. (3s. 6d. Thos. Law, Memorial Hall, E.C.)

Yesterday, To-day, and To-morrow.

My yesterday was Christ upon the tree,
Who bore the condemnation due to me.
To-day I journey on, and He shall lead,
He knows the journey, and He knows the need.
To-morrow is not; but his wisdom plans,
So leave my future in his loving hands.
Full well I know those hands all worlds upbear,
The hands that hold the stars shall hold my care.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—IV.

SIN—WHAT IT IS, AND WHAT IT DOES.—2.

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A.

THE MORAL ASPECT.

TO take the moral aspect of sin first. Sin comes before us and arrests our attention first of all as an incident. We have made a mistake; we yielded when we ought to have resisted, we prevaricated or lied when we ought to have told the truth. We committed a fault. We regret it, but it was an error if not an accident, and we must be more careful in the future. But we find these unpleasant incidents recur. We cannot honestly regard them as a series of isolated acts. They are rather the outcome of evil dispositions. As such, each incidental manifestation of the evil tendency increases its strength within us. Each lie makes us more careless about truth. Each self-indulgence makes us more selfish. Our wills cease to be neutral factors in the moral conflict. They seem to gain character from these acts of sin, and our hearts become more and more prone to evil, more ready to give way to temptation, more slow to confess, more quick to excuse our wrong-doings.

So, as we learn to diagnose sin more carefully, we learn that it is not a local but a Constitutional Disorder. A man may be short-sighted, and yet in perfect health. The shortsight is a purely local defect which can be adjusted by means of a local and mechanical appliance. But it is not so with sin. A hasty temper, a tendency to deceit or untruthfulness, a lazy disposition, an impure imagination, cannot be dealt with by any local application. We cannot remedy faults in character as we would correct bad taste in painting or a defective ear in music. In whatever particular direction the evil stream flows, it proceeds out of the heart within. The disease is constitutional; the whole man is disordered, and the whole man must be put right if any particular sin is to be effectually checked.

This is what we mean when we speak of the Total Depravity of man. We do not mean that every man is so wicked that he could not possibly be worse; but that every part of his nature is morally, or rather immorally, infected by sin. All his affections are contaminated, his whole understanding is vitiated, his entire will is weakened and distorted. We are not built in watertight compartments. Once the infection of sin is admitted, it spreads through every part of our nature. The corruption is entire, it extends throughout the totality of man's inner being, though its development and strength may be greater or less in different directions for different people.

The existence of this moral disorder is so obvious that it is useless to attempt to deny it. But instead of regarding it as an incentive to prayer, an argument for the necessity of Divine grace, men treat it as a justification for wrong-doing, and seek to throw the blame upon God. This is done by an exaggeration of the Doctrine of Heredity. It is most true that no man liveth to himself. And the law of influence affects not only the men of our generation who cross our pathway, but also any whom we may be the means of bringing into the world. Parents do transmit to their children not only certain physical features but also certain moral tendencies and characteristics. Now we cannot choose our parents, and therefore we are not responsible for the evil tastes and tendencies which we inherit.

But while heredity fixes our trial, it does not fix our fate. It settles for us to a great extent in what directions we shall be most tempted, but it leaves us still free to use or to neglect the grace of God, by which those temptations can be successfully met. The very fact that moral consciousness remains, even in the most depraved, shows that the inheritance of evil which results from our physical relationship has not destroyed our potential spiritual relationship to God. This is the way Ezekiel met this excuse when brought before him under the proverb, "The parents have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." "Thus saith the Lord," he answered, "all souls are mine; the soul that sinneth, it shall die."

Our relationship to God is not severed by an earthly parentage. We have, whatever our inheritance of moral disease, a right of direct access to the Father of All Souls. The horizontal tendencies to evil which we bring into the world may be checked or overcome at any time by the omnipotent grace which descends direct from God Himself. No man is condemned for his father's sins until he has made them his own. The colour of your hair you are not responsible for—God's grace will not alter that. Your character you are responsible for, since whatever evil bias you inherit, God's Holy Spirit is offered you with infinite powers of repair and renewal. This we know to be true. No man ever yet put his own sins down to his father's account with a good conscience.

But whatever our antecedents, such is our condition of moral disease that Self-Recovery is Impossible; we cannot make any real recovery apart from the grace of God. Man is capable by himself of certain great improvements in his moral condition. There are certain amiable instincts which we can develop of our own powers, and which bear some resemblance to holiness. In the same way, there are social virtues for which unregenerate men are sometimes conspicuous.

The pagan teachers could appreciate patriotism and good citizenship; and ever since "the leaves of the Tree" have been "for the healing of the nations," philanthropy has been found to adorn the lives of many who do not profess allegiance to Jesus Christ. During the interval of the absence of the unclean spirit in the parable, the house was "empty, swept, and garnished." A moral reformation, admirable and beautiful so far as it went, resulted. "But the last state of that man was worse than the first." A moral reformation which leaves the heart "empty" of the grace of God, is no defence against the very worst forms of Satanic possession. The unclean spirit sometimes deems it politic to retire before the influences of civilization and education, so that the man who had been vile and dissipated may exercise self-restraint, and become a decent and respectable member of society. There are restraining forces which make for righteousness apart from regenerating grace. But for all that, "they that are in the flesh cannot please God." "The carnal mind is enmity against God;" and "except a man be born again," though he may do much to win approval amongst men, "he cannot see the Kingdom of God."

Unregenerate men may exhibit estimable qualities, but they are as incapable of serving God with a free service of love as dead men are of following their ordinary avocations. The moral collapse of man through sin is complete. "The strength of sin is the law." Man is hopelessly guilty.

THE GUILT OF SIN.

Sin brings us in guilty under God's Holy Law. Nothing we can do can cancel the guilt of past sin. We cannot undo the past; we cannot guarantee the future; and certainly we cannot mortgage the future to make up for the past. There is no overtime with God. No amendment, however excellent, can make amends for sin. The sinner feels that he has to answer to Divine law for his offence. A sense of guilt begets a sense of fear. That fear is not false or groundless. "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men," not in the Old Testament only, but in "the Gospel," which "is the power of God unto salvation." It is not an illusion that we have to answer to God for what we have done. The wrath of God is an objective reality to which conscience bears a true though inadequate testimony. "He that obeyeth (R.V.) not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

The "redemption that is in Christ Jesus" only increases our guilt if we obey not the Gospel of Christ. We are Without Excuse. Jesus said of the Jews, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin, but now they have no excuse for their sin." So the sin of refusing to hear the voice of the Son of Man, is infinitely greater than any transgression of the moral law. Again, Jesus said, "Everyone that is of the truth heareth my voice." Men sin wilfully and fatally against their own consciences when they reject the Son of Man. Thus a new and terrible element is added to the guilt of the ungodly now that the Son of God has come.

There are two ways in which men try to turn the edge of this sense of guilt: By teaching that our fear is groundless; and by declaring that all such fear is without moral value. Christ came, they say, to teach us that God is our Father, and that all our fear of his anger is a mistake. This is the wrong way of putting it. Christ certainly came to manifest more fully the Father's love by making an atonement for man's sin. But the Cross does not show that our thoughts of God's anger against sin are mistaken. On the contrary, it is at the Cross that we best gain an adequate sense of the terrible and relentless character of that holy anger. It shows us Love triumphing over Wrath, and providing a perfectly just ground for the exercise of mercy. But the wrath still remains for those who will not accept the atonement. "The wrath of God abideth" on him who obeyeth not the Son. Yea, the Son, who knew perfectly the Father's love, said, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

Nor is it true to say that fear is without moral value. The love of virtue for its own sake, and the hatred of sin for its own sake, are doubtless the principal elements in ideal holiness. But fallen men are not capable of ideal holiness, nor are they under a government designed for ideal men. "He that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him." "Doubtless there is a reward for the righteous; verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth."

This specious teaching about loving God, without any thought of gaining heaven or avoiding hell, tends to make God unreal. A real God must reward and punish. It is immoral, it tends to laxity and moral obliquity, if good and evil are not continually recognized, as that which God loves and that which God hates, as that which leads to the heaven of eternal blessedness with God, and that which leads to the hell of eternal punishment without God. The connection between Ethics and Eschatology is close and direct." The problem that disturbed the mind of the psalmist, in Psalm lxxiii., paralyzes all strenuous endeavour after holiness, if once the poison, "Tush, God doth not care," infects the mind. The answer given in vv. 17-20 is the only solution. It assumes a future and final judgment. Without this doctrine of final judgment, God's government becomes inexplicable, and the history of men is incapable of moral construction. We do not wonder that "resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment" are amongst the foundation truths in Heb. vi. A belief in resurrection and eternal judgment is necessary to real faith in God.

REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS.

Any attempt to minimize the Bible teaching on eternal judgment leads of necessity to a minimizing of the evil of sin. Everlasting Life and Everlasting Punishment are the Bible definitions of the result of the believing and the rejecting of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. This is simply giving expression to a law, the operation of which can be observed in daily life, viz., that moral decisions have a tendency towards fixed and irrevocable results.

"We sow an act, and reap a habit. We sow a habit, and reap a character. We sow a character, and reap a destiny." And once the character is stamped with the final rejection of Jesus Christ, the destiny is one of irremediable loss. We can, with confidence, leave the application of this law of retribution in the hands of the God of Infinite Love, who sacrificed his only Son to save us from its relentless grasp; but we cannot afford, either to confuse the eternal and radical difference between good and evil, or to rob man of his immortality, or to lessen the intensely solemn character of this time of probation, this life in the body, by supposing "another chance" after death. "After death the judgment" is the plain teaching of Scripture; this is the sting of death to all who have not found salvation in Jesus Christ.

But while guilty fears should be awakened by the preaching of the Law, and appealed to as a testimony to future judgment, we shall never bludgeon men into an acceptance of the Gospel.

A sinner is a sacred thing,
The Holy Ghost has made him so.

Yes, no man feels himself a sinner until the Holy Ghost has convicted him of sin. There is a superficial knowledge of sin which all men possess, but it does not lead them to confess themselves guilty before God. They are bent on covering their offences with excuses, and on justifying themselves, even if it leads them to condemn God. The unregenerate man always thinks himself something less than ruined and something less than lost.

But while we depend upon the Holy Spirit to convict men "of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment," we must remember that the Holy Spirit uses God's truth for this purpose, and if the Church is not faithful to the Bible teaching concerning sin, if she gives in to the extenuating, milder views which are so popular amongst men, regarding sin more as our misfortune than as our fault, then the work of the Spirit is sadly hindered. A good deal of modern teaching concerning sin would come sadly short if tested by the inspired dicta of St. Paul: "The strength of sin is the law;" "The sting of death is sin."

The Simultaneous Mission.

PRELIMINARY MEETINGS.

Thursday.

OUR national sorrow has made the Christian heart very tender; and the crowded gathering in the City Temple at noon last Thursday, seemed to be a putting into action of the Psalmist's words, "I will hear what God the Lord will speak." Every corner of the auditorium was occupied, and hundreds of would-be hearers had to go away disappointed. Dr. Parker's voice broke the solemn hush with the comforting words, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me." Then, in a brief prayer, he reverentially laid the wreath of love upon a long and vivid memory of many virtues in the departed Queen. "We cannot empty our hearts in a moment," said he; "yet we can all say, 'God save the King. The Lord's blessing be round about him, and be the canopy of his throne, the man of his counsel, and the guide of his feet.'"

Dr. Parker said he knew why many of his hearers were there specially that day. He had anticipated their feeling, and would endeavour to respond to it after his exposition of God's Word. The subject of discourse was Paul's demand (Acts. xxvi. 8), that the doubter shall give a reason why the Christian faith is not in him. It is not only faith that is called upon to explain its position; and recognition of this fact opens a wide field of observation and profitable comment. That far outnumber those of faith was ably shown by the preacher, in the course of extended argument and illustration. There is a mystery of light as well as a mystery of darkness, and we prefer the former. The atheist talks much of reason, but he is not the spokesman of the sum total thereof. The man who comes to preach his doubts should be in the congregation and not in the pulpit. Faith is the higher, translated, inspired, and glorified reason; and after all these years of public ministry, the preacher felt stronger in faith than ever before.

Miss Edith Nutter sang, "The Lord is mindful of his own"; and then Dr. Parker spoke hopefully about the Simultaneous Mission. It seemed to him that the recent sad event would open the hearts of the people to receive some tidings of the abiding Kingdom. He had never known the Queen's name received in any Nonconformist assembly except with spontaneous and enthusiastic homage. The new King has great opportunities before him. England was never so politically and religiously sensitive as it is to-day; and the King can make the Empire his own in a double and an enduring sense. For his mother's sake, we bid him welcome; and for his own sake and his wife's sake, we wish him well. The speaker then called upon those assembled to rise and sing and this was done very heartily. The benediction was pronounced, and the great audience remained standing while the organ gave further expression to their intense feeling in the "Dead March." Thus closed a service which must be memorable to all who were privileged to be present.

The same evening, Rev. John McNeill spoke in the Metropolitan Tabernacle to a vast assembly of Christian workers and others from all parts of London. Pastor Thos. Spurgeon sat among others on the platform, the latter and its staircase being draped in black. Mr. McNeill's stirring addresses at this and other places during the week have been of an encouraging as well as searching kind; and a profound impression was evidently made upon his hearers.

Echoes of the opening hymn, "Revive thy work, O Lord," were heard in the prayer offered by Rev. W. J. Mills, of Walworth Road. He prayed for a great turning to the Lord in the city of London, and expressed the desire, on behalf of the meeting, to lay at God's feet all that would hinder spiritual work. Mr. McAusland sang about

Beautiful hands, beckoning hands,
Calling their dear ones to heavenly lands; and Mr. McNeill observed that they might all take courage from the rising tide of interest in the Mission, which he had found in his journeys about London. He trusted there would come upon those present a baptism of hope, courage, and personal consecration. In his prayer, he touched upon sparing mercy to the Prince of Wales, in days gone by, and asked that England's King may seek with all his heart unto his mother's Saviour and his father's God. The address dealt with

THE FEEDING OF THE MULTITUDE

(Matt. xiv. 15-21). The Lord's only difficulty here was with his disciples, who came to Him with advice and blocked his way. If Christ gets his people to take their right place, He will soon reach those who are spiritually starving through lack of the bread of life. "The morsel of that bread which keeps me alive, will increase and sweeten if shared with another." Let us not degrade the Gospel into a selfish guzzle; and let the sinner himself remember that what the mouth is to natural bread, that faith is to Jesus Christ, speaking in his Word. In a closing prayer, Gipsy Smith asked that all the outward machinery of this great movement may be under the sway of the Holy Spirit, without which it would come to naught.

Friday.

"John McNeill will speak here to-day at twelve o'clock" was the notice seen on the gate of the City Temple last Friday morning; and again a vast throng was seen within the building, hungering for the weighty counsels of the man who longs to see God mightily using believers for the salvation of their fellow-men. "Oh, for a springtime for thy Church!" said he, addressing himself to the throne of grace. "As the people turn to their new Sovereign, whom God long preserve and bless! may they turn, with new repentance and obedience, to the Lord Himself." A solo and hymns followed; and then the evangelist requested that helpers make an effort to gather into the City Temple services this week the non-resident people who find their business in the neighbourhood, especially young men and women employed in the warehouses.

The preacher said that he regarded the story of Gideon's fight with the Midianites (Judges vii.) as "the day of the Lord" (judgment) upon all tabulation of results regarding religious work. The army of 32,000 had to be reduced to 300 in order to bring the force up to its fighting strength. Oh, that Jesus Christ had in London for this campaign! The ten thousand no more meant fight than the others who were speeding on their way home. Men and women who profess godliness are "difficult to know" by their fellows; for the human heart is deceitful and desperately wicked. The Heart Searcher is in pulpit and pew to-day. May He go through the ranks before the Mission begins; for there is no ethical development in God—if He did a thing in the days of Joshua and Judges, He will do the same now. It was an awful day when our heavenly Gideon, Jesus Christ, won the fight, single-handed and alone, against our great adversary. After that, will He allow his ranks to be filled with sham empties? Perish the deadly delusion out of all our hearts.

On Friday evening Mr. McNeill addressed a large gathering in Westminster Chapel. Rev. R. Westrope, pastor of the church, led in prayer. "Jesus, Saviour, pilot me," was the uplifting and helpful solo by Mr. McAusland.

A most encouraging exhortation was delivered from the words: "For at that time day by day there came to David to help him, until it was a great host, like the host of God" (1 Chron. xii. 22). He showed that all centre in Jesus Christ as God's anointed King. There is still a Saul, in the god of this world, who heads its rebellion and godlessness; and the mass of mankind still seem to be solid for him; but they are all doomed men if they stay on that side.

THE DIVINE PURPOSES OF MERCY

Though we would not ignore the dark side of things, let us look into the face of Him who sits upon the heavenly throne; and the palest lips will begin to mutter "Hosanna to the Son of David." The Lord can do nothing with discouraged workers. Our faith is no mere sentiment; it has the conqueror's shout in it. Let it sing at our hearts, every day next week, "I am a helper of Jesus Christ." They are coming! Our ranks are growing all the time. Let us be filled with a holy enthusiasm, a passion to bring men and women to Jesus Christ.

Sunday's Meetings.

Scarcely an empty seat was to be seen in St. James' Hall on Sunday morning, when a few minutes to eleven Rev. JOHN MCNEILL, in company with Lord Kinnaird and Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, made his way to the platform. Lord Kinnaird, in offering prayer, petitioned that this solemn time in the nation's history might be used of the Holy Spirit in bringing many to realize the uncertainty and significance of life. Mr. Mark Guy Pearse read the Scripture and offered prayer, pleading for the bereaved comfort, and for those who had risen to authority the guidance and wisdom of Heaven.

Mr. McNeill's sermon was a homely yet forcible exposition of Christ stilling the tempest, dwelling particularly upon the query—What manner of Man is this? To answer the question, the speaker proceeded to "walk through the story from beginning to end." It was a study to observe the anxious and attentive listeners as Mr. McNeill demonstrated once more that the most searching, uplifting, and powerful preaching consists in the simple unfolding and applying of the plain inner meaning of the text of God's Word.

In the afternoon Mr. McNeill again preached, taking for his subject the cleansing of the leper. Though leprosy was generally used as a type of sin, it probably did not come home strongly to many people, because they had never seen a leper. He once of Robbin Island, near Cape Town, and when he had seen those men with the corruption of the grave rotting in their flesh, and yet not dead and buried, he realised more vividly what was meant by the comparison of sin, the corruption of the soul, with leprosy. The leper who came to Christ to be healed, found that Christ not only could, but would heal each one. If every unsaved sinner, beleaguered by the forces of death and hell, could open his eyes and see his danger, he would flee to Christ as a refuge, and there would have a Fortress that would never crumble away. The speaker pleaded for decision for Christ, and urged all not to wait for "the right feelings"; feelings do not constitute a guarantee of salvation.

On Sunday evening a vast crowd assembled at the doors of the City Temple long before the time for opening. The people waited patiently through a tempest of wind and rain, and then filled the church to overflowing. Even the aisles were filled, and as seat-holders' places were reserved, very many outsiders were unable to gain admission. The preacher, Rev. J. McNeill, gave a characteristic address on Psa. cxix. 59 and 60, "I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies. I made haste to keep thy commandments."

Notwithstanding the stormy character of the weather an excellent beginning was made with the mission at Regent Square Presbyterian Church, where the preacher is Rev. A. Johnstone Ross (Westbourne Grove). At the outset, he explained that by the grace of God the Free Churches were embarking on an enterprise without a parallel in the history of England. In this enterprise, he said, they had two main desires: (1) To declare to the world the essential unity that lies behind external and

SUPERFICIAL DENOMINATIONAL DIFFERENCES;

(2) To lead persons who have been listening to the Gospel of the grace of God, but who have not accepted fully the life that is in Jesus Christ, to a full, happy, and thankful acceptance; as well as to lead to it also those who are outside the churches, and who have been suffering from the widely prevailing misunderstanding of the religious life of the day. His own purpose would be to preach the "unsearchable riches of Christ," and he would seek to tell them how wide and varied the Gospel is. Choosing as his opening subject "The Manifold Grace of God" (1 Peter iv. 10), he sought chiefly to meet the difficulty felt by many who, he believed, have listened with half-open ears to the preaching of the Gospel, have passed through some spiritual experience, but who have been disappointed with its moral effects upon their character. Mr. Charles Inglis, who was at Bath Street Chapel, Poplar, reports a remarkable season of revival on Sunday last. In the evening, especially, the service was of a deeply impressive character. Many wept in tears of repentance, and 120 names were taken in the inquiry rooms. At Harlesden, too, the consequences of sin, the need for repentance, and the sacrificial work of the Lord Jesus were powerfully set forth, and there was much blessing.

Monday.

DR. PARKER AT THE GUILDHALL.

The inaugural service of the Mission proper was held at the Guildhall at noon on Monday. The historic building was, as everybody expected, crowded both in the area and galleries, and many had reluctantly to be refused admission. The Lord Mayor and Sheriffs were in attendance, with other officials. The whole of the service was conducted by Dr. PARKER, who at the outset cordially thanked the Lord Mayor and the civic authorities for permitting the ancient hall to be used for a distinctively religious service. The environment on the occasion was unique; unparalleled in the religious history of Imperial England. What was that environment? A new century, a new King, and a new service in the Guildhall of the sovereign city of the Empire. It would be the fault of the preachers, and their fault alone, if that hospitality should never be renewed. They were there to uphold the true genius of religious catholicity.

In his prayer, Dr. Parker pleaded for the City of London, "the miracle and mystery of cities," lest she become pestilent as Sodom, and have inflicted upon her the vengeance of eternal fire; and that God would prosper the agencies at work for her regeneration. The subject of the sermon was personal service—service which aimed at real knowledge of the world, with all its sin, misery, and vice. The text was Matt. ix. 36—"And when He saw the multitudes He was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd."

To realize what the world is, and the work that has to be done for its regeneration, one must visit and and slums of the city. Great city men may meet around a table in Lombard Street, and determine to send missioners to the dark places of the city. That is an easy thing to do. But how vain! The Lombard Street magnates should go themselves! Mission work is a personal work, in which it is the duty of all Christians to take part. It is the work in which our Saviour Himself engaged when He went about among the people in his mission of healing, instructing, and saving. Ministers of the Gospel must look the facts in the face, and deal with them as they find them. The God-sent man could not be put down. Whom God had sent, He would bring back again with sheaves and rejoicing. The first essential of the minister who would reach his hearers, is pity. He had heard a young man address his hearers as "Ye men of science," when there was not a man of science within a mile of the chapel. If he had said, "Ye broken hearts, ye struggling lives, ye crushed and broken fellow-pilgrims," he would have reached their hearts. In conclusion, the doctor referred to the undertaking upon which the Free Churches were entering. His heart was with it as he knew were those of his hearers. It was not for them to add up results. He cared nothing for schedules and statistics in such matters. They would not take a census of impressions, resolutions, emotions, prayers. In such work, there is small place for the statistician. But God sees all.

REV. JOHN MCNEILL'S MEETINGS.

Boys and girls from the Stockwell Orphanage, their dress betokening a share in the national sorrow, sang bright songs of faith, peace, and hope while the people were coming in for Rev. John McNeill's meeting at Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon. Interest in the preacher's outspoken message was indicated by a full attendance in the body of the Large Hall. "God save the people," said Mr. T. A. DENNY in his earnest opening prayer. "Save us from the evil one and from ourselves in this untoward generation. The nation has tried to do without Thee, but it cannot; and we are coming back." A solo by Miss ADA ROSE, "The world is full of singing," voiced the soul-music which gladdens those who confide and abide in Christ.

It was a searching time, for saved and for unsaved alike, as the evangelist made pointed application of the story in 1 Chron. xiii., with its fitful lights and shadows. The ark brought from Kirjath-jearim, and lodged in the house of Obed-edom, was the symbol of the Divine presence. God is still either a rock of offence or a blessing to us, every time we go out and come in. Behind the shouting of an enthusiastic religious movement, are we all really looking to God, making Him our way and our end? Or, as far as some of us are concerned, is this mission a thing which has gone from mouth to mouth, so that none like to say "No," and all find it easier to say "Yes"? It is a bad procession where man is first, and God brings up the rear.

All the trouble lay in not seeking God in the proper way—see chap. xv. 12, 13. We must from which He is inseparable; and apart from stiffness and coldness in our approach to Him, there must be reverence on our part towards Him and his expressed will. The idea of the new cart was borrowed from the Philistines; and Christians too often make worldly compromises regarding what is spiritual and eternal. God's grace and his Word are the only means of deliverance from all that is specious and showy, from all that rings hollow and false.

Christianity frightens some and offends others, because of the Dead Man in the road; men quarrel with the Cross of Christ. According to the flabby sentimental preaching, which pleases some men, the disciples, Nero, the Sultan, and his victims, are all embraced by a God who is all love; but our souls revolt from such an idea. In the house of Obed-edom, the ark harmed none, but brought blessing to all. If we humble ourselves before God, take his Word and act upon it, He will be light unto us, not lightning.

The City Temple service on Monday night also attracted a large congregation. LORD KINNAIRD led in prayer to the God whose name is love, and whose nature is holy; and there was hearty singing of the hymn "My God, I am thine," with its prayerful refrain, "Revive us again." Mr. McAusland helped with a solo, touching the blessed work which makes us to shine as the stars for ever and ever. It was announced that there is to be a memorial service in the City Temple on Saturday, while the Queen's funeral is taking place elsewhere.

The subject of Mr. McNeill's address, with its wealth of plain speaking, simple but forcible expression, telling personal reminiscences and engaging sympathy, was: Decision for Christ, as illustrated in three men (Luke ix.), who doubtless have their counterparts in every audience such as this.

The meetings on Tuesday were very largely attended. We propose giving notes of the proceedings day by day in our next issue.

Worldliness.—III.

By Rev. F. C. SPURR, Lewisham.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 John ii. 15).

IT is manifest, then, that the clear duty of every Christian man and woman is to assume a position of uncompromising hostility towards this "world" which Jesus Christ has placed under his ban. In the triple character of witnesses, pilgrims, and "lights," it is the only possible thing for Christians to do. We are witnesses for Christ, which means also that we witness against everything that is opposed to Christ. We are pilgrims and strangers, therefore we dare not act as do those who believe that the present only is their home. We are lights shining in a dark place, at once to guide the lost into safety, and to expose all the falseness which lurks in the darkness. This triple character makes

COMPROMISE AN IMPOSSIBILITY.

But here a grave difficulty presents itself. We belong to a race from which we cannot dissociate ourselves. We are compelled to mix with all sorts and conditions of men. In a thousand different ways the Church and the world touch each other. The conditions of living do not permit the worldly to be ranked together and confined to their proper sphere, and the unworldly to be confined to their own sphere. The Christian is commanded to be courteous and to be pitiful, and often he exercises courtesy towards those from whose worldliness his heart revolts. Further, he is compelled to use those very things which are the chief weapons of worldlings, such as journals, art, music, and other things which are associated with out-and-out worldliness.

The difficulty, then, is to know how to live in the midst of a mixed society—to be true to life, to be courteous, and yet to remain unworldly.

This end cannot be gained by a withdrawal from society. The word of our Lord is explicit upon this point. "I pray not that Thou shouldest take the mout of the world" (John xvii. 15). Yet some very good men, in the course of the ages, have retired from ordinary life and formed themselves into exclusive societies. They have always failed of their purpose. Others have habited themselves in a distinctive dress—plain and conspicuous, emphasizing thereby their contempt for the pride of the world. This also has failed, and history has clearly demonstrated that a has lurked behind the most modest attire. Sharp distinctions of this kind, affected by many, do not touch the real heart of the question before us.

Nor will it do to make certain narrow definitions, and to regard these as the rule of what is worldly and what is unworldly. One draws the line at the theatre, another at card playing, another at public entertainments, another at the turf. It is perfectly true that with regard to certain obviously worldly things the Christian must draw a distinct line, which may never be crossed. But with regard to the doubtful things of life, we must go much deeper than many go, and get down to the bed rock of principle, if we are to be intelligently determined upon the matter of worldliness.

Now the bed rock of principle upon which the entire Christian life is built, is expressed to us in the words of St. Paul: "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor. x. 31). Here is the infallible foundation of life and action. Anything which can honestly be built upon this foundation is right; anything which cannot is worldly. Instead of asking whether this or that has the support or the opposition of great names, let us be more radical and ask—

Do these doubtful things contradict the will and the glory of God? Will these doubtful things, if performed by me, distinctly enhance the glory of God—that glory which my life as a creature exists to set forth? Again we must ask, in view of our personal life and relationship, Will this thing militate against our highest life?

WILL IT DISTINCTLY ADVANCE THAT LIFE?

Still further, we must remember our relationship and our responsibility towards others. It is an awful thing, says St. Paul, when any man exercises his personal liberty to such an extent that he causes persons weaker than himself to go astray. The strong exhibit an example which the weak may not emulate, save at the expense of their soul's fall. Christianity imposes upon men not only love of God, but also love of their brethren, and everywhere the strong are warned against acting in such a manner as to stumble the weak. Hence the generous Apostle declares that if so simple a matter as the eating of meat causes another to stumble, "I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to stumble" (1 Cor. viii. 13). A thing then that may be innocent for myself considered as a single person, becomes improper if, through me, it acts unfavourably upon my brother.

There is a final consideration—in determining the worldliness of a thing; we cannot exclude the question of association. If a thing, innocent in itself, has become permanently associated with what is sinister and hateful, it is impossible, by the force of things, to separate the two in such a way as to say, "I will perform the act in the presence of others, but I will attach my own meaning to it." It cannot be done. The laws of life do not permit

TRICKERY OF THAT KIND.

When the act is accomplished, the association is immediately suggested to others, if not to the actor himself.

Along these lines of radical principles, and along these lines only, can the doubtful matters of life be determined satisfactorily.

This is the ideal—the thing that should be. But when we turn from it to the actual facts of life, what a spectacle confronts us! In place of professors of religion referring all things to the glory of God, we find vast numbers of them, whose avowed rule is to pursue that line in life which is most agreeable to themselves. Even in Christian congregations things are permitted which even the most brazen person would not dare to claim as distinctly enhancing God's glory, or as furthering the higher life, or as avoiding a stumbling-block in the way of others.

Excluding all personal opinions and predilections, and rigorously confining ourselves to those radical principles which have just passed before us, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the worldliness which Jesus has so mercilessly condemned, is nevertheless acceptable to many of his professed followers. It is not uncharitable to say this; anyone who can apply a principle to an action may see it for himself.

We are always discussing the reason why the Church makes so little headway—why conversions are so few—why "outsiders" are not interested in us. For a great number of people the reason of all this is that they are too much entangled with the world to influence it and to save it. In order to lift a weight, it is necessary to be outside of it, and to possess greater force than it possesses. A worldly Christian can have no real influence with worldly men; they do not believe in him—they despise him. He is not wholly with them, nor wholly with Christ. There is ONLY ONE CURE FOR WORLDLINESS.

Paul shows us the open secret of it. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind" (Rom. xii. 2). An inner transfiguration means that our spirit is so penetrated with Divine force and love as to leave no place whatever for the opposite qualities. Where God is all, the world is nothing. If God were all to us we should have an extraordinarily contemptuous opinion of the "world"—just as Jesus had, and we should treat it as He did. The trouble with us is that God is so little in our thought and heart; otherwise we could not treat Him with such scant courtesy as we often do.

We must choose between the love of the Father and the love of the world. We are not permitted to be friends of both. "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever" (1 John ii. 17). Passeth! like a stream swiftly moving to the sea of eternity. Passeth! like a panorama illuminated for an hour, but to be plunged into the final darkness. Passeth! like a rainbow whose colours enchant for one moment, but which disappear immediately.

All is passing—the world, with its veneer and falseness, its honours and its hatred.

But he who does the will of God abides for ever. For ever! The final shock which will ruin the world, will leave him untouched. He will be God's, for evermore. What a compensation! And then, in that eternal embrace, the one thing we shall never regret will be that in this time of our earthly life we lived for God and loved Him, and while others patronized or hated Him, we, by his grace, remained true to Him, and offered Him all the space in our little hearts.

That I May Know Him.

(Phil. iii. 10.)

"That I may know Him!"
My soul, are not thy silent yearnings vain?
Can the dim taper of the finite mind
Pierce the high mystery of the Infinite?
Has not the world's whole wisdom strained each nerve
To pass the borders of the Unknowable?
Man's flickering lights have only paled and died
The further borne into the aye-deeper night.
Ah, me! must then my inmost need remain
Unsatisfied for ever? Must hope die?

Be still, my soul; there soars to heaven a voice:
"I thank Thee, Father,
Lord of heaven and earth
That Thou hast hid these things
From the wise and prudent,
And hast revealed them unto babes."

The Guiding Star has risen; Christ is life's Light:
Fear not to climb the stair to Eternity
With such a flame to shine upon the steps.
E'en in the darkest cloud that overtakes
The ascending soul upon the mountain's side,
Shines brighter still the vision, "Jesus only."
And on the mountain-top, with Christ the Lord,
All darkness is transfigured into light,
And heaven's self opens to the soul's full gaze;
For Christ, the Crucified, reveals—HIMSELF.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, February 3. Ezekiel xxxi.

THE fate of Assyria is quoted as a warning to Egypt. The Assyrian Empire is compared to a noble cedar. The cedars of Lebanon often reach 80ft. in height, and the space covered by the boughs is still greater. Nourished by the waters of the Tigris the tree attained its full development; and all the fowls of heaven made their nests under its shadow. But a mighty one came against the great city of Nineveh in the person of Nebuchadnezzar, and beneath his mighty strokes the great tree was felled to the earth (11, 12). The consternation of the forest is graphically depicted, and even the deep is beautifully pictured as grieving for the fall of the magnificent tree, restraining its streams, whose only use seemed to be to nourish it (13-15). But the conquered nations are only too glad to witness the destruction of their rival and mistress (15, 16). And if such a fate overtook Nineveh, what could Egypt look for (18)?

There is only one tree which never fades, and whose trunk does not yield to the woodman's blows. Compare v. 6 with Matt. xiii. 32. Amid the crash of empires, one empire is indestructible. In the presence of the death of the greatest of this earth, there is one who does not die. "In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw also the Lord, high and lifted up, and his train filled the Temple." Since He spake to the ear of his beloved and adoring servant on the isle that is called Patmos, the voice of our King has never ceased to ring out through the centuries: "I am He that liveth, and I was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore." He is with us, beloved, in life and death. He is the tree of life. We may sit under his shadow with great delight. We may dwell under his shadow in the midst of the heathen (17). We may anticipate the day, when it shall be given us to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God.

MONDAY, February 4. Ezekiel xxxii.

There are two prophecies against Egypt in this chapter, delivered within a fortnight of each other. In the first (1-16) Pharaoh is depicted as a lion on dry land, and a crocodile in the waters, i.e., an object of terror everywhere. But a limit would henceforth be imposed upon his power. As a fish, drawn out of the water, loses all its strength, so the King of Egypt would become absolutely powerless: he would no longer overwhelm the nation as by a flood of waters, and indeed the tides of his power should subside (make deep, v. 14), and their turbulent fury would be smooth and soft as oil.

How often does God interpose on our behalf! Be patient, and hope to the end for the grace to be brought unto thee. Thou shalt see all thine enemies dead upon the sea-shore.

In verses 17-32 the Egyptian monarch is represented as being conducted to the mouth of a vast pit, which had been opened to receive the carcases of those who had been vanquished and slain in battle. He is compelled to witness the fate of other ancient nations, once famous, but now consigned to oblivion, such as Elam (24), Meshech (26), Edom (29), Zidon (30). Beautiful and great though his kingdom had been, it would be no more than other nations in its utter destruction. His only comfort would be that he was not without companions in his desolation. To all of us there is coming an inevitable end. To the lowliest cottage as to the greatest palace, death comes with equal foot. Let us live in memory of our latter end, that there may be no shame on our faces as we go to meet the King.

TUESDAY, February 5. Ezekiel xxxiii.

It is supposed that the revelation and discourse of the earlier verses of this chapter took place on the eve of the arrival of the messenger who brought the tidings of the Fall of Jerusalem (21). It should be noticed that up to this point his words had been full of threatening and denunciation; but henceforward, the fall of the Holy City having filled the cup of bitterness to the full, the tone of conciliation and comfort greatly preponderates.

The servant of God is a watchman (1-9). It is for us to watch the approach of evil, stealing in on the community of which we form a part, as the outposts of the foe steal nearer to the beleaguered city. And we must give the alarm, or be held traitorous to the souls around.

Have we warned our nearest and dearest of their inevitable fate? As requests for prayer pour into a prayer-meeting, one is often disposed to ask whether those who are so deeply concerned about their relatives and friends have done their utmost to put them on their guard against the consequences of neglect. Are our hands clear of blood? Can we repeat the words of the great Apostle, addressed to the little group of Ephesian elders, gathered on the shore for a last farewell (Acts xx. 26, 27)?

Our commission is one of reconciliation (10-20). A cry of despair arose from the lips of the Jews. It seemed as though the accumulated sin of their nation had reached a point, so aggravated and excessive, that there was no use in repentance and faith. "Surely," they cried, "nothing that we can do now will avail to alter our doom." So the prophet begins to unfold God's infinite love and yearning pity, asseverated with the most solemn assurances (11).

Men often are lulled to ruin under our words (21-33). That is a terrible picture, with which the chapter closes, of how far men may go in admiration of the form in which a message is delivered, whilst they miss the point of the message itself. Let us speak with strong, rugged, heaven-weighted words, compelling men to awake and be saved.

WEDNESDAY, February 6. Ezekiel xxxiv.

Throughout this chapter the shepherds are not the prophets and priests, but the princes and rulers of Israel, who had misused their position, and had to be removed, as preparatory to the rising-up of the true Shepherd. But what is said of them is equally applicable to all who are called to assume the position and work of the under-shepherd in the flock of Christ (see 1 Peter v. 1, 2). In all ages of the Church there have been these careless shepherds, who have thought more of the fleece than of the flock.

The failure of the under-shepherds only brings into clearer relief the tender care of the Good Shepherd, the Bishop and Shepherd of souls. Hast thou been scattered on the mountains in the cloudy and dark day? He will seek thee. Hast thou been in the arid and barren wilderness, with neither shelter nor pasture? He will gather thee. Hast thou been harried and restless, exhausted and weary? He will make thee to lie down. Hast thou been driven away, broken, sick unto death? In thy Good Shepherd there is recovery, healing, and restoration. Only put thyself into his hands, that He may have mercy on thee, and thou wilt know what Isaiah meant when he drew that matchless picture of Him who gently leads the weary and heavy laden (Isa. xl. 11).

What an exquisite picture of pastoral peace is that with which the chapter closes! The one Shepherd, and the one flock! The absolute security in wilderness and wood! The showers of blessing! The perpetual covenant of Peace! No fear, no hunger, no shame! Ah me, it seems sometimes far enough away; and yet every tick of the clock brings nearer this blessed consummation, when the Lamb, who is in the midst of the throne, shall lead us to living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears.

THURSDAY, February 7. Ezekiel xxxv.

In this striking chapter the prophet is the spokesman not only of the intense animosity of his people against Edom, of which there is repeated mention in the Prophets and the Psalms, and which dated from the cruel exultation with which Edom regarded the overthrow of Israel, but he acts as the messenger of the Divine wrath. God was against Mount Seir.

Let us notice that Edom had gone so far as to annex, in intention at least, the two countries of Israel and Judah (v. 10). Nothing could be clearer than that God had given these to his chosen people. But the children of Esau, ignoring the ties of blood and kinship, ignoring also God's distinct gift of Canaan to his people, only waited for the Jews to be deported to Babylon, to enter upon the possession of their land. But they had reckoned without remembering that God was there.

O child of God, I pray you never forget this, when you fear every day because of the oppression and threats of your foes. They have not to deal with you alone, who might be as a driven leaf before them; but they have to deal with God, who has made your cause his own. He is there as the Divine occupant, as the Shekinah, as the Sentinel, as the Almighty Keeper who neither slumbers nor sleeps. He hears every unkind word (v. 12), and every boast shall be requited.

FRIDAY, February 8. Ezekiel xxxvi.

This apostrophe to the mountains of Israel is very sublime. It is as though God pities the mountains, the dales, and the deserted cities, and speaks to them, encouraging them to believe that better and happier times would come, when once more the flocks would cover their broad slopes, and corn and wine would climb up from the valleys, and the people should no more resort to them for purposes of idolatry (1-15).

Then God turns to the house of Israel, reminding his people of their continued sin, and showing that the mercy He was about to show to them was entirely undeserved. They had no pity for his holy Name which they had profaned, but God had pity for it. He arose to vindicate his own character. What a plea this is with Him! When we mourn over the desolations of his Church, and the ungodliness of the world, what an argument it is to say, Have pity on thy holy Name, lest the heathen around contemn and despise it!

It is a great prayer, "Do it for thy own holy Name's sake. Sanctify thy great Name. Let the heathen know that Thou art God. Cause thy character to be sanctified in the redemption of vast multitudes of souls, and in the sanctification of believers." It is in this latter case that God gets most glory. Let us turn his promises into prayers. Let us plead for his Spirit, so to soften and purify our hearts that we may be delivered from all filthiness and from all idols, that the hard and stony heart may be replaced by sweetness and gentleness, and that we may be caused to walk in his statutes. Then will come the true blessedness of life, and the deep repentance (vv. 30, 31). God waits for us to ask this of Him. Before we call He will answer.

SATURDAY, February 9. Ezekiel xxxvii.

A marvellous chapter. The vision is so graphic. The centuries as they pass do not rob it of its significance. Still, both the Jewish people and the Gentile world are like the bleached and dry bones in the open valley. And as we view their estrangement from the life of God, it seems almost too much to hope that they can live.

God's method of dealing with an unregenerate world is by the proclamation of his own Word. "Go ye," said the Lord, "into all the earth, and preach;" and beneath the preaching of the Gospel, marvellous transformations have taken place. But even this does not suffice. They who preach must pray. We must call to the breath of the Spirit to come from the four winds and animate dead souls with the life of God. Only thus, that breath will come, and they who are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and live, whether Jew or Gentile.

The first-fruit which comes from regeneration is union. The people who had been divided into two kingdoms shall be no more divided; the two rods shall be one. Then will days come in which the happiness of David's kingdom shall be restored, God's sanctuary will be in the midst, and his Shekinah above as their beauty and shield. This is not so as yet. But the days are hastening to their full when every jot and tittle of this blessed anticipation shall be realized. Lord, hasten that day!

"God Save the King!"

TO invoke the Divine blessing upon the King is a religious duty. The duty becomes a peculiar privilege in the case of King Edward the Seventh, son of Queen Victoria the Good. The Sovereign who is now being mourned may not be forgotten, yet her successor upon Britain's Throne of Empire must now command loyal regard and occupy prayerful attention.

Never was a King accorded a greeting more hearty than that which has been given to him who for well nigh sixty years has been the subject of prayer as "Albert Edward Prince of Wales:" and his Queen Consort, so universally beloved as "the Princess of Wales," accompanies him into an inheritance made glorious beyond compare by the Sovereign whose decease last week placed an Empire in mourning, and stirred the emotions of the civilized world. God has blessed our land and people. He was with his servant Victoria, and supported her during her reign of sixty-four years. Now pray we all "God bless our King!"

The King was born in 1841—so he is in his sixtieth year. His Queen, the charming Alexandra of Denmark, was born three years later. They were married in 1863, since which date they have occupied a place in loyal hearts throughout the Empire, and have been daily presented before God in prayer by Christian people throughout the world. As time went on, sons and daughters grew up around the Royal pair; and loyal souls were thrilled with joy. Time also brought its cares and sorrows; and then there were demonstrations of sympathy which showed in some measure how closely the hearts of the Prince and Princess were knit to the hearts of the people of these realms. Many remember the anxiety of 1871-2, when the Prince was laid low by typhoid fever: in the mercy of God recovery was given, and thanksgiving was not restrained. More will recollect the sorrow of 1892, when the first-born of the family, Prince Albert Victor, Duke of Clarence, was cut off in full promise of manhood. On these and such like occasions evidence was afforded of the high regard of the people for the Royal House.

There are many grounds of sincere gratitude to God in the Accession of King Edward VII. Not only has the King travelled largely and seen many lands, but he has visited and studied in special detail the many countries of his world-wide Empire. With an education altogether remarkable, particularly so in linguistic and scientific accomplishments, he combines a varied knowledge of men and things that should go far to add efficiency to his rule. On the throne, as elsewhere, "knowledge is power." As Prince he had few opportunities of active work beyond public functions that soon become irksome to some temperaments. But on the Poor Law Commission of 1893, and in connection with the Hospital Fund of 1897, he has done valuable service, showing at times great sagacity as well as striking executive ability.

Queen Alexandra has also excelled in her special sphere. That she was a great comfort to the aged Sovereign who has just passed away, is well known. But in her own home at Sandringham she made her motherly influence felt in a manner which has excited widespread admiration. Her son, the Duke of Cornwall and York, and her daughters, Princesses Louise (Duchess of Fife), Victoria, and Maud (Princess Charles of Denmark), "rise up and call her blessed." They were early impressed for good, and they have not departed from the paths of their Royal Mother.

The proceedings of last week, in connection with the King's Accession and Proclamation, also the opening of Parliament, were very impressive. In his first speech, officially styled a "Declaration," the King referred very touchingly to the death of his beloved mother, and continued:

I need hardly say that my constant endeavour will be always to walk in her footsteps. In undertaking the heavy load which now devolves upon me, I am fully determined to be a Constitutional Sovereign in the strictest sense of the word, and, as long as there is breath in my body, to work for the good and amelioration of my people.

I have resolved to be known by the name of Edward, which has been borne by six of my ancestors. In doing so, I do not undervalue the name of Albert, which I inherit from my ever-to-be-lamented great and wise father, who, by universal consent, is, I think, deservedly known by the name of Albert the Good, and I desire that his name should stand alone.

In the House of Commons, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman gave expression to sentiments which were universally cheered. He said:

Happily, the grief with which we suffer under this irreparable loss is in some degree assuaged by our well-founded confidence that the Monarch who succeeds to the Throne will follow the same line of public conduct, and will adhere to the same principles as have worked so much good in the past. It often happens when a new occupant comes to the throne of a country that he is an untried Prince unversed in public affairs—it may be, even little known personally to those over whom he is called to reign. It is not so with King Edward. For the greater part of his life it has fallen to him to discharge a large part of the ceremonial public duty which would naturally fall to be discharged by the head of the State. We know that His Majesty understands and enters into and appreciates and sympathises with the desires and needs of his people, and that he will devote himself, even in a greater degree than he has been able to do in the past, to the promotion of their welfare. And on this point perhaps I may be allowed to say that it is an additional satisfaction to us to know that His Majesty will have by his side his august Consort, who has reigned in the hearts of the British people ever since she first set foot on our soil. There will be no discordant voice in this House to-day. If there were, we should not fitly represent those who have sent us here. There will be but one universal feeling of sorrow for the lamentable calamity that has befallen the nation, and of hopeful confidence for a happy and prosperous future.

We are enjoined to "Honour the king," and to "pray for kings and for all that are in authority." At such a time as this, with Empire so extended, and difficulties correspondingly numerous, we may well offer the familiar prayer: "So dispose and govern the heart of Edward thy servant, our King and governour, that, in all his thoughts, words, and works, he may ever seek thy honour and glory, and study to preserve thy people committed to his charge, in wealth, peace, and godliness."

Victoria the Good.

A CHARACTER SKETCH.

THE unparalleled outburst of sorrow which has swept over the civilized world at the death of Queen Victoria, is one of those manifestations of feeling that carry their own credentials of sincerity. It can only be explained by the fact that in her removal we have lost a great woman from our midst, as well as a great Sovereign from the head of the State. The spontaneous grief of mankind is indeed a tribute to sovereignty of character, far more than to sovereignty of station. A benign presence has been taken from us which had been so long a part of our national, and even of our personal life, that it is as yet impossible to measure the extent or the significance of our loss. But already certain outstanding facts and features of our lamented Sovereign's character and reign occur to us, and call for grateful recognition.

We have lost, as we have just said, a good Woman who was also a great Queen. Her reign was one in which the best influences of womanhood beamed forth on the nation, during a time when it was in great peril of forgetting the gentler virtues, and the milder but potent forces of life, in the marvellous territorial expansions and physical progress of an age of iron and steam. When, as a frail and girlish figure of eighteen, she assumed her Royal functions, statesmen and people alike trembled both for her and the Throne on which she sat. Young, inexperienced, and following predecessors who had done much to lower their Royal prestige by their tenure of the Crown, it seemed only too likely that it would lose its last hold on the people's loyalty.

When, after sixty-three years of service for her people, she let the sceptre quietly drop out of her dying hand, the Throne, as such, was planted deeper in the affections of the people, and performed a more important function in the national life, than at any previous period of its long and chequered history.

By strenuous endeavour to make her august position a means of blessing to her people, and by fulfilling the necessary functions of Royalty in a spirit of simple devotion and ever-ripening wisdom, she showed that in an age of democracy and popular rights it was possible for even a woman and a Queen to fill a splendid place both in the affections and the destinies of her subjects. She lived for her people, and as soon as they began to realize this, they gave her their hearts' loyalty in ever-increasing measure. During the past sixty years some of the dynasties of Europe have been swept away; revolution after revolution has submerged one Royal House after another, and to-day some Continental Sovereigns sit on precarious thrones. Not only did her Throne outlive these dynastic changes and tragedies, but she has bequeathed to her son a heritage of loyalty to the Crown which contrasts brightly with what she received from her predecessor. For she demonstrated the noble use that can be made of a Royal sceptre, when wielded with unfailing courage and with that gentleness which is the truest test of greatness.

Queen Victoria, it must be remembered also, remained none the less a Woman because she was a Queen. The force of her character is seen in nothing more impressively and beautifully than in this. The artificial atmosphere of Court life, the trappings and pomp of Royalty, the elaborate ceremonial of State functions, all failed in the slightest degree to affect the simplicity, the reality, and the charm of her womanly nature. She was one with her people in all the common experiences of life. Her home life was typically English in its warmth of affection for husband and children, in its simple theory and practice of parental government, and in the faithfulness with which she honoured her departed husband's memory. She had no love of splendour, and greatly disliked the publicity of that fierce light that beats upon the Throne. Performing the routine duties of her office with unfailing regularity, keeping in touch with all the movements of events and changes of opinion, watching with an anxious eye the developments of foreign policy for sixty-three years without a holiday, she took her recreation, not in gaiety and excitement, but in the simplest pleasures of home, and in the refreshment of communion with nature and with God.

We do not as yet realize the debt this nation owes to the womanliness of the Queen who ruled over us for so long. A pure and gracious influence has emanated from the central institution of our government, and has intermingled with all the complex currents of the national life. It has softened the rigours and animosities of party warfare.

It has affected the character of the laws passed for over half a century. It has made manners more gentle and simple. It has raised the standard and deepened the affections of home-life. It has been one of the growing links between us and our colonies. Probably the passionate loyalty of the child-nations that are springing up into strength around us would have been impossible, but for the personal attachment with which the Queen has ever been regarded by her people everywhere. Australian Federation was undoubtedly hastened in order that it might be consummated under the mild reign of our aged Sovereign. Sixty years of such a reign have made Britain a different and a better nation than it would otherwise have been. We are materialistic and headstrong, and self-willed as it is; but for the wise and gentle control of our Mother Queen, we might have been tenfold more so. How often her restraining, checking, softly-insistent hand has swayed and shaped our policies, especially towards other nations, we know from the testimony of all her recent and present Ministers. And through all the strenuous labours of her reign, she found time and opportunity to show how constantly her heart beat in sympathy with her people in their trials, sufferings, accidents, bereavements, and no less in their triumphs and their joys.

But the crowning feature of our good Queen's character has yet to be mentioned. She was a sincerely pious Woman, to whom the great realities of life were the religious realities, and who fulfilled her Royal trust in happy surrender and obedience to the higher Sovereignty of the Heavenly King. In her public proclamations and in her private journals she was alike full of recognition of the Divine Hand and of the Divine Will.

The spirit of submission was as strong in her as the instinct of Sovereignty. Every inch a Queen, she was ever a loyal wife, and a sincere Christian. This showed itself in her conscientious discharge of the trying routine work of her office, in the vigorous maintenance of a high standard of Court morality, and in the simplicity of her private life. She was unquestionably sincerely attached to the Church of which she was the political head; but her religious sympathies were broad, and she never failed to show a genuine respect for those among her servants who were piously inclined, and none the less so if they were Nonconformist in their convictions. She had no liking for the Romish tendencies of many of the High Church clergy, though her tolerant spirit forbade any personal interference with them. One of the few things at which she showed displeasure was for her Court chaplains in their sermons to take cognisance of her presence as Queen, and to address her personally as such. She felt that in a religious service she was not there as monarch, but as one of the congregation with whom she identified herself in worshipful teachableness of spirit.

For ever will the memory of Queen Victoria be enshrined in the hearts of her people. They cannot honour her memory better than by emulating her virtues in their own lives and homes. Truth, gentleness, sympathy, sincerity, simplicity, loveableness—these are great words, but they are not too great to describe the noble character of the greatest Queen in history.

NOTES AND RECOLLECTIONS.

It is no simple matter to realize the greatness and extent of the changes that have come over the relations between Sovereign and subjects since the year 1837. The rights and liberties of the people have been defined along lines which were unheard-of at that period. The people have, step by step, awakened to a sense of their power, and things are done to-day for which pains and penalties were imposed at the beginning of the reign. The Throne stands in a position different in some respects from what it did, but, notwithstanding these changes, its dignity has been preserved, and even added to during the reign. A Queen in more than the titular sense, few have realized the extent of the mental and intellectual gifts enjoyed by the late Sovereign. "No doubt," she said at the outset, "the splendour is great, but the responsibillty is terrible"; and in the recognition of that fact lay the secret of her success as a ruler.

Queen Victoria was called to rule over a free people, and, with rare intuition, she grasped the meaning of that fact for her. Indeed, it has fallen to her to demonstrate to the world the rights and privileges of a Constitutional Monarch. She adapted herself marvellously to every political and social change. No concession has had to be wrested from the Crown in her reign, for she has been among the first to hail each step in the progress of the nation. As the people have found their new privileges freely offered whenever they rose to a true conception of their duty, so the rights of the Crown have also been recognized and consolidated on a new basis. It was with joy, and not with regret, that the Queen watched and aided the development of the power of the people, and the Throne has been in no sense the loser. To-day the paradox is true that the safest and surest Crown in Europe rests on the brow of the head of the freest people.

One outstanding feature of the Queen's private life, of which very many have experienced the benefit who did not pause to think of the extent to which it was due to the Queen's personal influence, was her respect for the observance of the Lord's Day. The length of the reign has made it impossible for anyone now living to realize what a change it meant that the first day of the week was spent quietly by all under the roofs of the Royal palaces; and that to servants as well as to members of the household every possible opportunity was afforded for the proper spending of the day. In this matter, as in many others, the Queen had a clear insight, and early set her face against, not only the giving of the day to sport and amusement, but also (what seems to some the more excusable practice) the holding of receptions, which would yet mean as complete a divorce from its proper purpose as many practices whose desecrative character appears more on the surface. How far-reaching has been the effect of this example in the highest of all stations no one can tell, but that it has been very great none can doubt who has made any study of the effect of equally high example during previous reigns in the direction of worldliness.

Queen Victoria was no intolerant dictator in matters of religion. She worshipped God according to her own conscience, and insisted on the same freedom being allowed to the meanest of her dependents. An instance is on record of one servant whose conscience would not allow her to attend the parish church, and who, for this reason alone, was dismissed by a superior official. The circumstances came to the knowledge of the Queen, and the outcome was an order for the immediate reinstatement of the maid, followed by an announcement that the utmost freedom was to be allowed on all such matters.

A district secretary of the London City Mission visited a small cottage at Windsor, with an old-world garden of sweet-smelling flowers in front, and upon taking a seat which had been dusted for him, was told, "That is the Queen's chair." He was then informed that one of the Royal Princesses had stopped her carriage to look at the flowers, and, upon hearing from the daughter that her mother was ill, had gone in to see her. The next day another Royal carriage drove up, and the Queen herself stepped out. "Of course," the daughter told the secretary, "we were greatly flurried, but the Queen said, 'Don't be put about. I have come not as a Queen, but as a Christian lady. Have you got a Bible?' She was given one, and she sat down on that chair, and said, 'I heard from my daughter of your long and sad illness, and I have come to comfort you.' She took mother's poor wasted hand in hers, and said, 'Put your trust in Jesus, and you will soon be in a land where there is no pain. You are a widow, so am I; we shall soon meet our beloved ones.' She then read the fourteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. John ('Let not your heart be troubled,' &c.), and knelt down on the floor and prayed for my mother. That wasn't the only visit, for always since the Queen came to Windsor Castle she came to see my mother once or twice a week, and always read the Word of God and prayed."

Attendance at large religious services is not always to be taken as proof of a real interest in religious matters; yet there is an eloquent tribute to the spiritual side of the life of Queen Victoria to be read not only in the large crowds which have thronged memorial services during the past week, but also in increased attendance at the ordinary gatherings of church and chapel alike. To a large section of her subjects, the outstanding fact of the week has been that, first of all Queen Victoria was a humble follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. A first impulse led in some quarters to a fear lest the national grief and mourning should overshadow the interest in the Simultaneous Mission of the present week; but after much waiting upon God workers were led to praise Him that He had arranged the meetings for a time when the "fallow ground" was destined to be ploughed up by the great national sorrow. That the monarch who has gone from us trusted in the Personal Saviour who is knocking at every door, is present in many minds, and God's people are praying to the Disposer of hearts that the issue of present events may be unto eternal life. As an important tie in many a life has been sundered on earth, may a link be formed with heaven which shall endure unto eternity!

The loving interest ever taken by the Queen in the children, and in all that affected the child-life of the nation, has led the Sunday School Union to suggest that memorial services should be held by Sunday schools throughout Great Britain and the Colonies on the afternoon of Sunday, February 3, at three o'clock. These services, if conducted in the various churches and places of worship, could be thrown open to the young people of the district. Thus, at the same hour, the children in all parts of the Empire would be able to render their tribute to the good Queen's memory, and to pray for the King, while a fitting opportunity would be afforded for indelibly impressing upon their minds the noble and beautiful lessons yielded by the life and character of the great Mother of our Nation.

Sleep, Noble Queen!

IN MEMORIAM OF OUR BELOVED SOVEREIGN QUEEN VICTORIA.

By Rev. J. MOUNTAIN, Tunbridge Wells.

Sleep, noble Queen! Thy care and sorrow ended;
Closed are the eyes that oft for sufferers wept;
Low lies thy head, by all thine Empire tended;
Stilled is thy heart which its great charge hath kept.

Leave thou thy crown—unsullied and untarnished:
Thou hast adorned it by thy life so pure;
Take thou the crown by heavenly lustre garnished—
Christ giveth those who patiently endure.

Thou art not dead; thou livest on for ever,
Radiant in mansions of eternal day;
And from our hearts thy memory fadeth never;
Thy people's love enshrines it there for aye.

Heaven's perfect peace through Jesus Christ receiving,
Clad in the robe of his own spotlessness;
Ne'er canst thou fail to think of us, still grieving;
Loving Christ more, thou wilt not love us less.

Queen of all queens! To us may grace be given
Like thee to learn whence all true greatness springs;
Chains which would bind to self and sin be riven—
Bound by the love of Christ, the King of kings.

Sleep, noble Queen! Farewell, but not for ever!
Thy mantle fall on our succeeding King!
And when we all are called from earth to sever,
God in his grace to his sweet presence bring.

This hymn, which was sung in many places of worship on Sunday last, may be had in leaflet form, 1s. per 100. There is also an edition with music, specially composed by Mr. Mountain, 2d. each, 12s. 6d. per 100. (London: Morgan & Scott.)

Our Queen-Empress.

IN MEMORIAM.

Weep, orphaned nation, at thy Mother's bier;
Speak softly one high title held so dear,
Yon patient heart, it beats no longer here.

Weep, for to-day our sea-girt isles lie low.
Weep, 'tis our glory that our tears may flow
For one who wept, unseen, her people's woe.

Weep, Greater Britain, far beyond the wave;
Come, let our mutual tears bedew her grave,
Who loved us all with dauntless heart and brave.

In stately court, and in the common cot,
Weep the true womanhood that shared our lot,
And kept its fair escutcheon without spot.

Weep, lonely mourner, as she wept with you;
Weep, little children, for your needs she knew;
Weep, weary pilgrim, she was weary too.

Weep, yet be sure ye weep with thankful tears,
For all the blessing of her four-score years—
For hopes in blossom on a stem of fears.

Bring brimming tears, as many as ye choose,
For none your right to shed them will refuse;
Weep, yet give thanks ye had so much to lose.

For that white hand, so firm and yet so frail,
Which at the nation's helm, through many a gale,
By chart of duty ever sought to sail.

Give thanks that in a high and slippery place,
She held aloft the lamp that guides our race—
Herself upheld by God's almighty grace.

Give thanks to God for all her fair renown;
Those folded hands have laid, untarnished, down
Imperial sceptre, and imperial crown—

For deathless record, for dominion wide,
For perfect truth, "gold in the furnace tried;"
And now for that lone heart, all satisfied.

For humble trust in God's eternal Son,
For rest, how welcome! for the victory won,
And for the overcomer's word, "Well done!"

Victoria the Good.

Our Queen is Dead.

Like some bright beauteous star,
She blazed upon the firmament of time,
With light increasing with her numbering years;
Until her rich-orbed glory, glowed and gleamed,
As does the sun in midst of summer days.

Death then smote her.

Pale grew the star and fled.
All men were struck with deep and dazed distress,
And wept, their eyes could never, never more
Its glory see.
But as I wept, and wept, I saw that star
Out of the darkness, deep and dire, arise
With light more beauteous, yea, a thousand fold
More beautiful than aught of earthly skies,
Or earthly thrones.

I saw it borne away,
Until it sat upon the brow of One
Whose head erstwhile was crowned with cruel thorns.
I saw it shine as never o'er this earth
It beamed before, as on that holy brow
It played and quivered in the light of heaven.
There was its rest, fixed on the crown of Him
Who is both Lord of lords, and King of kings.

Evangelical Effort in Finland.

From time to time we have called attention to a heroic effort to advance the Gospel cause in Finland. The point of anxiety at present is Helsingfors, where a deeply interesting work is in progress, and operations will shortly, it is hoped, have a worthy mission centre. An admirable site has been secured, and a goodly sum is in hand towards the cost of the building.

Not only has Finland great need of such Evangelistic extension, but the mighty Empire of Russia may be benefited thereby. The Methodists have not been labouring for years in the country without making a decided impression for good; and at length they are being encouraged to take an important step forward. Mrs. Frances L. Parker is in this country soliciting help in the undertaking. Already there is £2,000 in hand, but double that amount is required before the building can be begun. Mr. Joseph Good, of Hull, is the treasurer of the fund. In the West of England recently, Mrs. Parker was very kindly received by Christian friends, one of whom made a promise of £250 on condition that the second moiety of £2,000 is subscribed without delay. We shall be glad to hear of liberal things being devised by wealthy Christians in aid of this excellent undertaking.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey.

Shortly after his return to America Mr. Ira D. Sankey gave an address on Sacred Song in the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn (Rev. Dr. Gregg's).

Mr. Sankey had a very large congregation, and in the course of the evening sang several solos. He also referred in cordial terms to the welcome he had received on the occasion of his recent visit to this country. In some words of welcome Dr. Gregg said: "I assure Mr. Sankey of our great joy to welcome him back to his native land. He has done more than any other man in our age to kindle the spirit of religious song."

We regret to learn that Mr. Sankey has been laid up with an attack (happily only brief) of influenza.

"The New Hebrides Magazine" is the title of a small periodical issued by Dr. Gunn, of Futuna, New Hebrides. The first paragraph declares the function of the publication to be "to collect and disseminate information regarding the islands of the New Hebrides, and to record the spiritual, social, and material progress of their people." Among the items of news we observe that British trade is rapidly increasing in the group; that consumption continues its devastating march among the people; that a French company is claiming land in some quarters; that the students at Futuna collected £5 for the Indian Famine relief; and that mission work generally is progressing. Letters from Spain.—IV.

MONTSERRAT.

A KNOWLEDGE of the Bible would sweep away Romish absurdities and legends, like that of the miraculous image of the Virgin of Montserrat, which is said to have been carved by Luke, imported into Spain by Peter, hidden in a rock by Visigoths, when fleeing before the Moors; found again by shepherds and a pious bishop, the former having been shown the way by lightning, the latter led by a sweet smell. The bishop endeavoured to bring the image to his diocese, but on reaching a certain place the virgin obstinately refused to go any further. This was a sign that a chapel should be erected there. Later on, having become more tractable, she consented to be removed to the present spot.

The image, which is black, is placed too high in the exceedingly dim religious light of the monastic church for the features to be recognized. Murray says that "the group appears like an inartistic representation of an African mother and child, and the woman's visage is forbiddingly ugly."

The yearly number of visitors to Montserrat exceeds 100,000. On September 8, the Day of the Virgin, 10,000 people are said to have visited the monastery, which is built half-way up the wonderful mountain, sheltered and overhung by tremendous rocks. Many come out of curiosity, many for the romantic scenery, but many also with the desire to prostrate themselves before which may have been the idol of heathen worshippers before being enthroned upon a gilded altar. No matter by what motive the visitor is led to come, he is almost compelled to pour of his money into the treasury of the monastery, for the simple reason that it needs days to obtain a full view of Montserrat, and that the monks alone provide apartments for the visitors. There are, we were told, about 200 monks. The church is being renovated, and a new monastery is in progress of building. The numerous haunts and caves of the mountain are full of shrines and chapels that have been erected to various saints, so as to increase the attraction for "the faithful." A wedding party came up from Barcelona the day we visited Montserrat. The young bride seeks the blessing of the Virgin, as does the criminal or the bull-fighter.

BARCELONA.

We spent New Year's Day in Barcelona. The shops, open on Sunday, are closed on saints' days and holidays; but we bought for one and a-half pesetas an indulgence at the ecclesiastical office. In Gerona, the purchaser has to produce first the signature of his priest, but in Barcelona even a Protestant can get possession of such a valuable document! No identification is required. Another privilege is the facility with which scapulars are obtained. Though they are only little bits of bad print sewn on a bit of bad cotton, they have been endowed by Pope or Bishop with the miraculous power of keeping the wearer from accident, disease, and even death.

The Gospel is faithfully preached by M. Empaytaz and Mr. Payne, and their helpers. The latter continues the schools originated and long carried on by the late Mr. George Lawrence, whose daughter is now engaged in useful evangelistic work in TARRAGONA.

For the lover of ancient historical places, Tarragona is more interesting than the fashionable Barcelona. Here the visitor treads the classic soil, successively trodden by Phœnicians, Greeks, Romans, Goths, Moors, and Spaniards. What scope for the imagination when we contemplate the prehistoric walls, the cyclopean doors made thousands of years ago! A portion of the once gigantic palace of Cæsar Augustus, now converted into a prison, still shows a few of its original walls, twenty feet thick. Here Pontius Pilate resided before becoming Governor of Judea. The cathedral is one of the most magnificent in existence, and is said to be endowed with privileges only exceeded by St. Peter's at Rome. This is in keeping with the historical record of the favour extended to Tarragona by the first Roman Emperor, at which time it had a million inhabitants (now about 30,000).

Where the present cathedral stands, the first Christian church, dedicated by the early Christians to the Saviour, was established on the site of a temple to Diana. When the Moors held sway over the peninsula, the church was turned into a mosque, and dedicated to Mahomet. Driven out in their turn by the Spaniards, the cathedral came into possession of the Church of Rome, was rebuilt, beautified, and consecrated to the Virgin Mary, as it is to this day. There are no Protestant missionaries in Tarragona. W. M.

The McAll Mission Boat.

NEAR the town of Dameri, about half-way between Chateau-Thierri and Epernay, on the river Marne, direct east from Paris, now floats the Bon Messager, the mission boat of the McAll Mission.

Its external appearance reminds one a little of the children's Noah's arks in shop windows. Inside it is surprisingly comfortable. At either end there is a little deck; from the front one enters into the evangelist's room; from aft, passing the cosy kitchen on the left, and the servant's room on the right, one enters into the spacious hall, on the modest platform of which stands a reading desk and a harmonium. At the back the words, "We preach Christ crucified" (1 Cor. i. 23).

Standing on the bridge close by, three villages and a town can be seen in various directions, at distances of two or three miles. Every evening except Saturdays, an interested audience from these places fills the floating Gospel hall.

Most of the attendants are evidently labourers in vineyards. The men have on earth-coloured garments, many without jackets or coats. The clamping of the wooden clogs makes a rough sort of music as the people walk in. The people are perfectly at home. What a strong healthy rosy-cheeked set of men and women! All are respectful and attentive. Hymn books are lent, and soon everybody tries to sing the Gospel hymns, which they pick up most readily.

A portion of Scripture is read to them, with a prefatory explanation of what the Bible is. Another hymn is sung and then comes the preaching. It is a solemn thing to preach to folks who may never come again if not interested, but who may return, and perhaps every night, for three or four weeks or more, according to the length of the stay in this neighbourhood! But, as the Gospel is preached, those country-people appear delighted to listen. The interest is great, the attention so solemn, that at times one might imagine that the speaker was alone in that floating chapel, and yet the 160 seats are all occupied. What glorious opportunities those are for evangelizing France!

After the address another hymn is sung, and prayer is offered. A boisterous dispersion then takes place. Expressions of gratitude are heard as tracts are given away, Testaments and Bibles purchased. Many, as they pass the door, drop their pennies into the box which is a fixture there. "We'll come again," say some. "We'll come every night," say others. "We'll come earlier to secure a better seat," another is heard to say! And after the usual "Merci!" "Bonsoir," "Bonne nuit," "A demain," the Bon Messager is soon left in her peaceful solitude.

But oh! what ignorance of spiritual matters! what irreligion! what infidelity one meets with among these villagers! Yet we cannot wonder at this, for they have no Bible.

S. H. ANDERSON.

Indian Christian Realm.—In sending out the annual statement of accounts, Jai Bhai (A. S. Paynter) reports a concentration of the work, and a welcome opening for work in Nepal. Twenty-one labourers are seeking to preach the Gospel in otherwise un-missioned fields. The representative in England of the Realm is Mrs. Keer, "Mornington," Malvern Link, Worcestershire.

American Notes.

ON Sunday, January 6, Rev. James A. O'Connor, of Christ's Mission in this city, announced that the Mission was now free of debt, the last payment on the mortgage having been paid on the closing day of the past century. This Mission is unique in several ways. For over twenty years "Father" O'Connor (as he is often called, because he was formerly a priest) has laboured with voice and pen to lead Roman Catholics into "a better way," as he puts it; to let them know that they can have personal access to Christ. One practical effect of the removal of the debt on the Mission property will be to place in his hands the means to remove his work into a far more prominent and suitable position, and some of his friends are already looking about for a suitable site in a neighbourhood that will be one of the great centres of population and traffic a very few years from now.

The last priest to come to the Mission, the Rev. A. Fasanotti, D.D. (Propaganda), is creating quite a stir in the newspapers through the country by means of his articles on Rome and Vatican affairs—not controversial, but dealing with facts of interest at this time. He is a man of great learning, fine presence, and saturated with knowledge of the earthly side of Rome, as well as its theology. In spite of his long record as a priest, he is still a comparatively young man, and God may do wonderful things through him in the future.

The great anniversary meeting of the Bowery Mission was held in the Academy of Music. Rev. T. De Witt Talmage preached from John x. 16. "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold." The vast theatre was crowded to the doors before the meeting commenced, and the greatest interest was manifested throughout. To many the testimonies of the Bowery converts who spoke gave even greater pleasure than the really fine sermon of the celebrated preacher.

What promises to become one of the most important branches of the religious and philanthropic work of the Volunteers of America has been recently inaugurated by President Ballington Booth, called the "Volunteer Tenement Work Department." One of the chief aims of this department is to reach the deserving poor of our cities who are unknown to charity organizations.

The work has been placed in the charge of Colonel Pattie Watkins (Mrs. Fred Lindsay), who for over sixteen years has been actively engaged in evangelistic work among the poor and needy in our large cities.

At the last session of the eighth conference of Foreign Mission Boards of United States and Canada, held in the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, a previously appointed special committee submitted a report dealing with the statement issued a short time ago to the clericals of the world by a number of Buddhist priests in Japan.

The report took the form of an address to the Buddhists. In taking exception to parts of the address from Japan, it denied that there was any political element in the work of American missionaries in China, and said that they "have not, as you affirm, arrogated to themselves the power of protecting the followers of their creed, in utter disregard of their criminality; nor have they, as a rule, taken advantage of the clauses in the treaties with China, giving them authority to interfere to protect Christian converts from persecution."

The address proceeded to say that American missionaries condemned all criminal acts, and that they had never tried to protect wrong-doers from the consequences of evil actions. With respect to the matter of indemnity for the destruction of missionary property, it was pointed out that as these churches, schools, hospitals, &c., had been erected for the benefit of the Chinese themselves, the loss would be theirs, and therefore it was only right that those who had destroyed them should supply the means for their restoration.

Referring to the Buddhist assertion that the fundamental principles of the different religions "are in all cases essentially, if not entirely, analogous," the report replied: "It is true that all religions speak of a higher truth, as you do of 'the great truth shining above,' but only one speaks of that truth as found in a loving, personal God, 'Our Father.' It is true that all religions are expressions of man's feeling of helplessness, but only one tells of a Divine Saviour who offers to man forgiveness of sin and salvation through his death, and who is now a living Person, working in and with all who believe in Him, to make them holy and righteous and pure. We should rejoice to have you meet our American missionaries in Japan, and learn from them more fully of those characteristics of Christianity which make it impossible for us to admit that there are not radical and essential differences between it and all other religions."

A Talk About the Queen.

I AM sure your thoughts during the past week have been very full of the good Queen whom God has taken from us, and no doubt you will be reading books containing stories and incidents of her beautiful life. We cannot do so without longing in our hearts to have such a record of goodness during the years that God gives to us. But I expect you think that this is quite impossible because she was a Queen, and so much above us all in position.

And yet, as a child, Princess Victoria was very much like the rest of us. She enjoyed playing with her dolls as much as any little girl to-day, and when she watered the plants from her tin pot, she watered her feet as well, just as we have done lots of times.

One day a Bishop came to see her mother, the good Duchess of Kent, and found the little Princess sitting on the floor with her playthings. Very soon she had the Bishop on the floor too, and made him the biggest doll of them all.

So you see there was no very great difference, as a child, between her and yourselves. And now that she has come to die, she has had to pass the gates of death just as you and I will have to do.

I have been reading some pretty incidents which I will pass on to you. She liked to have her own way, as a good many other girls and boys do, and did not always listen to warnings until she had learnt their value by experience. She had been cautioned against playing with a dog, whose temper was somewhat uncertain, but she persisted until the dog snapped at her. Her attendant ran to her in a fright, thinking she had been bitten, but Victoria answered, "No, thank you; he has only proved that you were right and I was wrong. He did not bite, but only snapped, which will be a warning to me in future."

On another occasion, when on a visit, she sauntered out into the grounds towards a steep and slippery bank. An old gardener, not knowing who she was, called out, "Don't go there, Miss, it's slape" (meaning slippery). "Slape," cried the Princess, "what's slape?" "Slippery, Miss." "Thank you," was her reply, and on she went regardless of the warning. Presently she slipped and rolled down the bank. The gardener came and picked her up, and said, "There, miss, that's slape." "Thank you," she replied. "I know now, and shall never forget the word."

Well, boys and girls, I am sure we have all from time to time had plenty of warnings and cautions from those who are older and wiser than ourselves, but sometimes we have been as wilful as the young Princess. But it is better to learn by experience than not to learn at all. You, like her, have good parents to teach you how to live to please God. Take good heed to what they tell you, and, above all, listen to the voice of Jesus through his Word. Come to Him first of all, and yield your lives to his guidance, for He will forgive the sins and failures of the past, and give grace for the future.

Of the many good qualities in our dear Queen's character, I think her generosity and sympathy stand first. During her early married life, she had as governess to her children a young lady whose father, a Scottish minister, was dead, and whose mother was dependent upon her for support. The mother was taken dangerously ill, and the daughter, feeling it was her duty to attend her, told the Queen she must give up her situation. But the Queen replied, "Go, my child, to your mother, for this is your duty, and stay with her as long as she needs you. Then come back to us again. Albert and I will teach the children during your absence."

Then you remember how, whenever there has been a colliery accident, or a disaster at sea, by which husbands and fathers have been killed, the Queen has sent loving messages of sympathy to their families in their distress; and how she sent tins of chocolate to the soldiers in South Africa.

She will always be gratefully remembered by such acts of kindness and consideration for others, and we read in Proverbs xx. 11, "Even a child is known by his doings." Our parents know us by them; our companions also, and God most of all.

Will you not make it your ambition to earn at last, by his help, the "Well done, good and faithful servant"?

Uncle Tom.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 3.

Endeavour Day (Joshua i. 1-11).

IT was a host of young men and women that stood on the verge of Jordan, waiting the signal to enter the Promised Land. With the exception of Caleb and Joshua, there would not be one above the age of forty. The river lay broad between them and the land that flowed with milk and honey, but it seemed to present no impassable barrier to those eager hosts. In the same way the great army of Christian Endeavourers throughout the world, young in heart, fresh in hope, with life yet before them, stand before a country held by wicked spirits in heavenly places, who rule the darkness of this world; the Jebusites, Girgashites, and the rest of the seven nations of Canaan have their modern representatives in drink and impurity, gambling, Sabbath-breaking, and many another clamant evil. Rivers of difficulty arrest our progress, but they rather give zest to our endeavour. Who art thou, O great river? The Lord who opened Jordan before the people shall yet bid thee start back in all thy ways and make a path.

God said that He would give to Israel every place upon which the sole of their foot should tread. What an incentive this was for pressing on! Every time an Israelite put his foot forward on the territory of Canaan, he realized that very bit of land would come into the possession of his people. There is a counterpart of this in our own experience. We must learn to put down our foot upon the promises of the Word of God, and say of them: "These are mine by right, and shall be mine in actual enjoyment." There are also times in our experience when in heroic faith we are able to claim a soul, a street, a neighbourhood, a congregation for God. As I look back upon my most successful missions, I remember that they were always accompanied by a sense that God had given me the hearts of the people. I went, not to capture in my own strength, but to receive and occupy what God already had made mine. In the life of the late General Gordon, in his journal, he tells us that very often before he reached some strange or hostile tribe, it seemed as though they had been given to his faith and subdued before he reached them. In combating your spiritual foes, dare to believe that God has given them into your hand, and go forward assured that not one of them shall stand before you. This is a blessed promise: "There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life." It does not matter how inveterate the habit, how fierce the temptation, how often you have failed, if you will dare to believe that God is with you, that He will not fail nor forsake, not one of all the hideous band of besetting sins shall be able to stand before you. God cannot fail, and will not forsake; be strong and go forward.

The one thing God asks of all of us is that we should dare to obey up to the hilt. You must dare to observe according to all the law, turning neither to the right nor left. To this two things are necessary, (1) We must meditate upon the Scripture; it must not depart from our heart or mouth; we must meditate on it day and night. Here are our marching orders, and we must keep them well before us. (2) We must be strong even when obedience seems impossible, and when all possible influences are brought to bear to weaken our resolution we must still dare. And as we advance we shall find that the dreaded forms of opposition are but shadows. When they are touched with the spear-point of faith they will divide and allow us to take our way. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

At Woodberry Down Society the first of a series of educational addresses in religious doctrine by Mr. George Hay Morgan, B.Sc., was given on January 17.

At the invitation of Rev. W. J. Cole, M.A., vicar of St. James', Toxteth Park, Liverpool, and the newly-formed Christian Endeavour Society, the "Wesley" Chapel Society recently gave a model meeting. About 100 persons were present, the members of the visiting society being heartily welcomed by the curate and evangelist.

Arrangements for the National Convention at Sheffield next Whitsuntide are well in hand. Reception of delegates by the Lord Mayer will take place in the Town Hall, followed by welcome meetings in the Albert Hall and Drill Hall. Dr. Clifford will preach the Convention sermons on Sunday morning, Rev. John Pollock also preaching at Rotherham.

International S.S. Lesson.

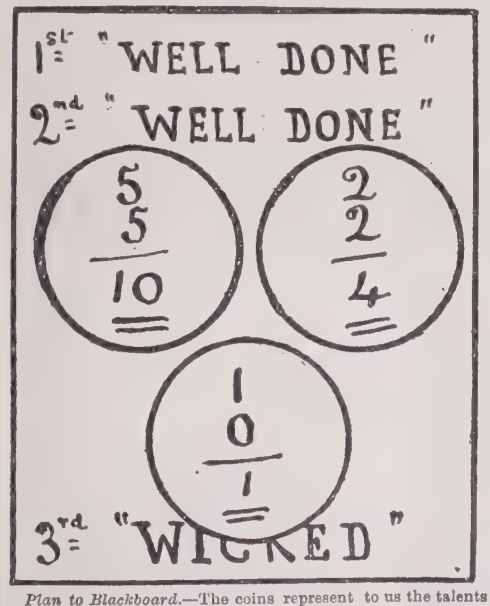
February 10, 1901.

Parable of the Talents. (Matt. xxv. 14-30.)

Golden Text. "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God. (Rom. xiv. 12.)

Introduction.

COMPARE with last week's lesson. The Ten Virgins waited for their Lord; the servants work. The first is spiritual rest, the second is outward activity (Trench). We learn from the Virgins not to delay or put off getting ready for our Lord's return; from the servants we learn that while our Lord is still away, we are not to waste our time in laziness and slothfulness, but be working and watching both, and doing all we can for his glory.



Plan to Blackboard.—The coins represent to us the talents each man received. First received 5 and he doubled them, making 10; second received 2, and he gained 2 more, making 4; third received 1, but he added 0 and it remained 1. To the two first "Well done" was said; to the third, "Wicked servant."

1. What the Master Did.

(14) Notice, they were his own servants he had to deal with. Christ is that Master, and He is now on the journey; He will return one day. We are his servants; are we getting ready, and doing what we have to do faithfully and well, so as not to be ashamed at his coming? (1 John ii. 28). (15) The Master knew each character so well. He gave to each just what He knew they could do. A talent is about £187 10s. of our money, or in weight about 750oz. of silver. These talents represent to us many different things, such as time, riches, health, education, singing, speaking, opportunities to do good, &c. What we need to remember is that God does not make two men alike, we are all different but we all have at least one talent; and we must find out what it is. (See 1 Cor. xii. 28-30.)

2. What the Servants Did

(16-18) Shows us very clearly what each one did with his talents. Although they received different amounts, the two first were both faithful. They did what they could, and did it well. The third man seems to have been not only lazy and slothful, but utterly indifferent and careless. He also had a very wrong idea about his kind Master (24), but that probably arose from his own indolence, and was a sort of excuse; no wonder he was afraid (25).

Notice also what Jesus Christ teaches in John xv.: (2) fruit, more fruit, (5) much fruit. This is also making more with our talents, but we must be joined to the True Vine in living union to be able to do it (1 Cor. xv. 10; Phil. ii. 13).

3. Return of the Master.

(19) The servants hand in their accounts (Golden Text). To two the result is "Praise and Reward"; to one "Blame and Punishment," just according to what they have done (21, 23, 26, 28, 30). The Praise is not "Well done successful servant," but "Well done faithful servant," and the whole parable seems to hang upon these two words, "Faithfulness" and "Unfaithfulness." To which class do we each individually belong? The unfaithful servant tried hard to make a case for himself (24, 25), but he failed to make any excuse good; his Master saw through his utter laziness and "don't-care" life, and he was duly punished. (21, 23) "Joy," what a depth of happiness lies in that one little word! Is it not worth being faithful to enter at last into his joy?

Mr. Moody used to say, "Many watch springs can be made out of a pound of iron. See you improve faithfully the talent God has given you."

C.M.S. Medical Training Home.

THE new Medical Training Home established in Bermondsey, S.E., by the Church Missionary Society, which was recently opened by the Countess of Chichester, promises usefully to fulfil a double purpose. Lady missionaries are to receive instruction in medical science and will at the same time minister to the needs of the sick poor of the district.

At the opening meeting, Dr. Lankester said it is proposed that all the accepted lady candidates of the Society shall come to the Home in turn for a period of three months, not to be trained as nurses or as medical missionaries, but simply to receive instruction in the first principles of medicine and surgery, in order that they may protect their own health and that of their fellow missionaries when at work in the foreign field. It is also proposed to establish in connection with the Home a Medical Mission on the lines of those conducted in connection with the Society's stations abroad. The dispensary will be open every day, except Saturday, for the treatment of the sick poor of the parish, and the patients will also be visited in their homes by the lady residents. About £300 per annum would be needed to keep the Home in proper working order.

The management is entirely in the hands of ladies—Miss C. A. Walker is the Lady Superintendent, Miss S. L. Fraser, the Lady Doctor; and Miss Parnell, the Lady Nurse.

Rev. J. Neil's Palestine Lectures.

DURING the month of February, Rev. James Neil, M.A., hopes to give a series of lectures in the Central Hall, Philpot Street, E., on "The Study of the Bible in the Light of Palestine Life." On the 13th, 20th, and 27th, the expositions will be designed to aid Bible students, the object being to give direct help to such by treating of passages of Scripture in their Eastern setting. The evening lectures on Wednesdays and Thursdays throughout the month will be more especially Gospel addresses to Jews and Gentiles.

Mr. Neil has devoted his life to the study of the customs and manners of the Holy Land, and his long experience and wealth of knowledge qualify him as one of the highest authorities on the subject. Illuminated dioramic pictures, lantern, and other illustrations will be exhibited in the unfolding of Scripture in its Eastern light. Particulars may be obtained from Miss Atkinson, Central Hall, Philpot Street, Whitechapel, E.

A Village Need.—Mr. W. Henry Collins writes from Wendover, Bucks: "In a hamlet in Bucks we are about to erect a small mission hall. For a long time we have held cottage meetings, having no other place to meet. The people desire the hall, and are giving of their own, but we need about £30 yet. We have been able to secure a small hall, and require this amount to erect it."

Saved From the Streets.

IN connection with the Lock Hospital, in West London, a valuable Samaritan work has long been carried on, and much spiritual fruit has been the result of the labours put forth by the Christian men and women who direct its operations. Many poor creatures who have fallen into the slough of immorality have been rescued, and helped into the paths of virtue. The late Lord Kinnaird took the warmest interest in these institutions.

One outcome of the work is seen in the capacious Rescue Home established as an auxiliary to the Hospital, in which those patients who elect to place themselves under the care of the ladies' committee are received and trained for domestic service. While still in the hospital those who desire to be helped in this way are placed in the Kinnaird ward, which is a kind of moral and spiritual "bridge" to the Home proper.

A model of cleanliness and wise arrangement, the Home is notable for the Christian influences which are brought to bear upon the inmates. A visit to the premises is a pleasurable experience, affording as it does some convincing evidence of the changes which can be wrought, even in cases that are apparently hopeless, by a course of careful training and instruction, given in faith that Divine blessing shall accompany it.

Viewing the Home, we first proceed to the probationary ward, where each incomer devotes the first portion of her fifteen months' training to needlework. She subsequently passes to the laundry department, in which one sees a troop of bright, intelligent young women, evidently possessed by the desire to do well, and having acquired industrious and persevering habits. In passing from grade to grade, the improvement that comes with is very noticeable, and it is difficult to realize that these laundry hands, who turn out superb work so deftly, and whose modesty and cheerfulness are so patent, were but a few weeks since "social problems," members of a class whose deplorable condition is at once a scandal in our cities, and a perplexity to our legislators and social reformers. The laundry is a marvel of completeness, and should command a large measure of support.

The Home curriculum is completed by a month's stay in the kitchen, so that each of the inmates leaves with a practical all-round knowledge of household duties. We therefore learn without surprise that there is a continual demand for servants from the Home, and that 75 per cent. of the cases turn out well. Doubtless much of the success is traceable to the kindliness and homeliness which are to be observed on every hand. While necessary firmness is maintained, as much as is possible of the "institution" is avoided. The gratitude and affection of the women is great, for, in many instances, they have been entire strangers to home care. In a variety of ways, apparently small, but all tending to create a warm and happy home circle, as distinct from anything like cold officialdom, the skilfulness of the management is shown. On leaving, each inmate is provided with a complete outfit, and has also the prospect of earning a prize of a guinea for staying in a place for a year, and a second guinea if she remains two years in her place.

The institution is happy in having enjoyed the ministrations of so many well-known evangelical clergymen in the adjoining church; and the present incumbent, Rev. G. H. Thwaites, maintains the same principles faithfully. The Home is a model one; it provides a refuge for people who are among the most difficult of all to reach and influence, and a volume of reliable testimony bears witness to the soundness of its work. The Hon. Louisa Kinnaird, 115, Mount Street, W., will be pleased to supply further particulars.

The Cheltenham Branch of the British Women's Temperance Association have adopted and issued pledge cards, whereby parents promise not to send their children to the public-house.

Mrs. Ginever's Homes.

FROM time to time it has been a pleasure to direct attention to the institutions which formerly bore the name and now perpetuate the memory of the late Mrs. Ginever. The Kingsdown Orphanage at Pemberton Gardens, the branch Home at Tremlett Grove, Upper Holloway, and Cuthbert House, Broadstairs, are maintained by the voluntary contributions of friends who revere the name of the founder, and whose hearts are touched by

THE CRY OF THE FATHERLESS.

A visit to one of the Homes, the sight of happy faces, and the sound of childish laughter have moved many a one to work and pray for the continued success under God of this noble branch of Christian service.

Each week sad applications for admission are received. Children are admitted to pass into the ordinary routine of the Orphanage household, while others who are of age to commence life pass out, making way in their turn for those who have perhaps been waiting months for vacancies.

A bare recital of facts would give but little idea of the work as it really is; but to come into personal touch with the inmates of the Homes, in their happy and congenial circumstances, to recall the faces of anxious mothers as they leave their charges in the safe keeping of the matron, is to realize how great is the need, and how that need is being supplied. The flower of childish affection blooms in this sunny atmosphere, and the tender human plants, needing vigilant care, are nurtured in the fear and love of Him whose compassion for the multitude was not stronger than his regard for the little ones.

At the Broadstairs Home, ailing and cripple children are provided with every comfort and means for the alleviation of their sufferings.

The workers are frequently cheered by appreciative letters from grateful mothers. One recently wrote:—"I feel it my duty and pleasure to thank you very heartily for what you have done for my daughter, who left in October last for a situation. She is a useful, good girl, and has learned many valuable lessons while under your care. She gives satisfaction in her place, and is most happy and comfortable."

Another writes:—"I have much pleasure in telling you of the great improvement in my little girl, Rosie, whom you so kindly sent to the Cripples' Home, Broadstairs. To think of how she looked on the day I brought her to see you, and to see her now, has taken quite a burden off my mind. May God's blessing ever be on such Homes for the fatherless, and may He help everyone who helps in them."

The direction of such institutions always involves anxiety and responsibility, and the committee of the Kingsdown Orphanage at the present time find themselves face to face with a special difficulty. The trouble relates to the largest Home, at Pemberton Gardens, which is being ill-adapted to meet modern requirements. It is found necessary to expend a considerable sum in providing a new system of drainage, the laying on of hot water, and numerous other improvements and refurnishings. This necessitates the closing of the premises for a few weeks, and the boarding out of the children. At the same time the hon. medical attendant advises that the number of inmates be reduced from ninety-six to sixty-four. This, unfortunately, creates a second difficulty of a serious nature. In many cases the hard-working widowed mothers are unable to maintain their children thus returned upon their hands. The committee are arranging to grant assistance in specially needy cases, and in view of the concurrence of these trying circumstances a special appeal has been made.

Miss Wenborn, secretary, will be pleased to communicate with friends desirous of aiding in the maintenance of this work. She may be addressed at 35, Pemberton Gardens, Upper Holloway, N.

Rome and the Children.

THE wholesale committal of children to Roman Catholic Reformatories and Industrial Schools in Ireland, on trumped-up or insignificant charges, led, in the recent case of the Ruckley children, to a wholesome exposure of this system of securing children for Rome.

Another case has recently been brought to light, in which the little girl of a man named Hegarty was charged with larceny in August of last year, before a Dublin magistrate, and committed to St. Joseph's Reformatory, Limerick. Application was subsequently made to the Dublin Recorder to have the child removed and placed under Protestant care. After a further hearing of the case, the Recorder, who at the first hearing on November 27 commented on the hardship of sending this child to a criminal institution, and thus branding her as a criminal, ordered her release, on being satisfied of the respectability of the father.

The latter became a Protestant eight years ago, and wished to have the child brought up as a Protestant. It appears that the order was presented at the Reformatory by Dr. Long, the Irish Church Missions medical missionary in Limerick, acting on behalf of the father. The authorities of the Reformatory, however, flatly refused to deliver up the child, and thus parental rights and legal authority are alike defied by the representatives of the Church of Rome. Not only so, but Dr. Long has been bitterly denounced by a local priest, and mob violence has been so greatly excited against him that, on the 18th inst., he was followed and stoned by a howling mob.

Dr. Long has friends among the Roman Catholics of Limerick, and it is hoped that the efforts of the priests to excite the populace against him will be only successful for a short time. Meanwhile it remains to be seen whether the authorities of the Roman Catholic Reformatory will be allowed to retain possession of the child. It is indeed a scandal that an institution supported by public funds should be able to set at naught the law of the land, and the rights of Protestant parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Midlane. Their Golden Wedding.

IT is proposed by friends of the well-known "Children's Poet," Mr. Albert Midlane, to raise a fund for a testimonial presentation to him and Mrs. Midlane on their golden wedding day, March 20. It is suggested that on the afternoon of the first Sunday in March, in all Sunday schools should be sung his hymn, "There's a Home for little children," and that a penny collection should be taken up for the fund.

Mr. Midlane is not exclusively a "Children's Poet." His hymns appear from time to time in our columns, and some of them are favourites in our books of praise. He has been a special friend of ours for many years, and we shall gladly receive contributions, addressed to the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN, from any sources, for the interesting occasion specified above.

Around, Within, Above.

If thy soul would be distressed,
Brother, only look around;
Care and trouble, strife, unrest,
Everywhere are sadly found.

If thy soul would sorrow know,
Brother, only look within;
How unlike thy Lord art thou,
How, alas, so prone to sin.

But, if thou wouldst joy in love,
Peaceful, happy, restful be,
Brother, fix thine eye above,
Only perfect grace to see.

Let us then in prayer be found,
That our eyes alone may gaze,
Not within, and not around,
But on Jesus, all our days.

ALBERT MIDLANE.

The Soldiers' Home in Wales finds that many of its supporters are passing away, and new friends are much required. The superintendent is Miss Wilkinson, at the Home, Brecon.

Scottish Notes.

STEPS are being taken to secure the making of arrangements for special Gospel work among the crowds who are expected to visit Glasgow in connection with the International Exhibition during the coming summer.

At the annual meeting last week of the Scottish Navvy Mission, it was noted that in order to meet the expenditure, two special donations of £50 each, as well as the reserve fund of £90, had been used. Mr. George Pirie, contractor, said the society was doing a work which no other organization could undertake, and was doing it well.

The death of Rev. J. H. Thomson (Hightae) removes a recognized authority on Church history, who contributed largely to the martyr literature, and, in addition to numerous articles, published two volumes on the subject. He brought out what has been widely regarded as the standard edition of "The Cloud of Witnesses," and edited the Reformed Presbyterian Magazine successfully for a number of years. He was also editor for a considerable time of the Free Church Children's Record, and at a later period also of the Christian Treasury.

In the annual report of Grove Street Home Mission Institute, Glasgow, attention is drawn "to some aspects of the 'problem' as seen by those who are in the midst of the battle;" and the opinion expressed that "a much wider use of Bible classes might with advantage be made among both old and young." Reference is made to the serious interference with Christian effort which arises from the time now devoted to pleasure-seeking. "No doubt," it is admitted, "the high pressure in living calls for relaxation; but the question is, how far is it right for Christian workers to forsake their work from April to September, and very frequently during the winter?"

While in different districts of Scotland—chiefly Highland—the bitterness of the Secessionists from the Free Church shows no sign of abatement, the clear attitude towards questions of Church union taken by men like Rev. Murdo Macaskill must have a great moral effect on the masses of the people. From the chair at the annual meeting of the Dingwall Y.W.C.A., Mr. Macaskill said, a few days ago, he hoped that as the twentieth century began with the union between two branches of the Church in Scotland, the century would end all the differences in the Presbyterian family. There was nothing, he thought, that separated Presbyterians but might end at any time.

A preparatory meeting was held a few days ago, in connection with a special week of mission services which are being held in twenty-five parishes within the bounds of the Presbytery of Edinburgh. The Chairman (Rev. Dr. Forrest, West Coates) said the meetings had been arranged after consideration of the state of religion in the land. He thought, if he interpreted the feeling in many minds aright, there was a great concern among them, not so much about the worldliness of the world, or indifference or hostility of the world, but about the worldliness and apathy of the Church—about which so many hearts were like to break. So it was this that led them to look up to their Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and to put themselves afresh into his hands.

A Conference of Dundee ministers was called together last week by a circular, which set forth that an effort might profitably be made (1) to impress the irreligious part of the community with their responsibility in disregarding the claims of Christ and neglecting public ordinances of worship; and (2) to make it manifest that ministers, notwithstanding denominational differences, are at one and in earnest in their desire to present Christ as the power of God for individual and social regeneration. The attendance was large, all denominations in the city, with one or two exceptions, being represented. A very free interchange of opinion took place regarding the first topic; and a suggestion was made that it would be a good thing were a week's meetings held under the auspices of the combined Churches, meetings to which all would be welcome, and at which the claims of Christ could be set forth by various speakers from different standpoints. The conference approved the suggestion, and it was left to a large and representative committee to make arrangements.

Girls' Letter Guild.—Miss Alice M. May, secretary of the Leeds centre, writes:—"We are greatly in need of lady correspondents in this centre for about seventy Nonconformist girls, some of whom have been waiting several months for ladies to write to them. A simple, friendly letter of kind interest and sympathy every month is all that is asked. I feel sure that many of your readers would be willing for Christ's sake to undertake such a small work." Particulars will be gladly forwarded by Miss May, 5, Herbert Terrace, Penarth, South Wales.

Welsh Notes.

A FREE tea was recently given by Sir John Puleston to the Welsh poor in the East End of London; upwards of a thousand persons were present. Sir John Puleston has given this treat annually for the last twenty-five years.

The generous action of an Anglesey clergyman has led to a substantial increase in the value of four poor benefices in Cardiganshire. Some time ago he gave £100 to each of the benefices in question, and he has now repeated the gift.

Reference was made in these columns a few weeks ago to the appreciation of Welsh Congregational churches of Rev. Hopkyn Rees, the well-known missionary from China. Mr. Rees is, by their request, returning to China in order to take a leading part in the negotiations for compensation for losses inflicted by the Boxers.

The Welsh settlers in Patagonia suffered severely by the disastrous floods that took place in the Argentine Republic some months ago; an appeal has now been issued, written by the daughter of one of the founders of the colony. One of the most pathetic facts in her statement is the account of the attempt of the colonists to build a chapel to replace the one which had been carried away by the floods. In spite of the heavy financial losses sustained, the colonists sent last year nearly £15 to the funds of the Bible Society.

Oxford Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

AT a committee meeting held at Wycliffe Lodge on Thursday, it was suggested that a committee should be formed in London in connection with the Christopher Fund, which has for its object the establishing of scholarships both at Wycliffe and Ridley. More than £700 has been subscribed.

The Vice-Principal of Wycliffe, Rev. W. F. M. Woodward, has accepted the charge of Buckhurst Hill, and has left Oxford for his new duties. Rev. Henry Plumptre, chaplain of the Hall, has been appointed acting vice-principal. Rev. H. G. Grey, Principal, has chosen for the subject of the Greek Testament Readings on Sunday evenings, the First Epistle of St. John. At the last ordination season ten members of Wycliffe were ordained.

It is not often that Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot comes to Oxford, but on Wednesday he preached a sermon in St. Peter-le-Bailey in connection with the Sunday School Institute. Tracing the growth of Sunday school work through the century, he urged that the stamp of God's blessing was upon it. In the face of the evidence that Sunday schools were now losing ground, the Prebendary pointed out how the national character would be imperilled. He pleaded that his hearers should lay to heart the apostolic injunction, "Let us not be weary in well-doing."

Rev. H. Foster Pegg, of St. Matthew's St. Leonard's, visited Oxford last week, addressing the annual meeting of St. Aldate's Sunday afternoon service for men. About 200 men were present at the meeting, which was presided over by Canon Christopher. Rev. Foster Pegg's address was listened to with deep interest, and many hearts have been touched by his powerful appeal. "A handful of white ashes lying at his feet," and a quotation from Dante's: "What wouldst thou? He answered, Peace," were the basis of his address. A life lived for self always resulted in a handful of white ashes, said the speaker, and if man did but know it, his heart in its deepest depths longed for Peace. Mr. Foster Pegg then pointed his audience to Christ as their Peace.

The anniversary of the Pembroke Street Christian Endeavour Society was held on Sunday and Monday. The preacher was Rev. T. H. Champion, of London. The report showed an increase of twelve in the number of members. Among other things mentioned at the meeting on Monday was one by the chairman, who, referring to the Oxford Times, said there was one spot to which he always turned, and that was the portion headed "Thoughts for Quiet Moments." He thought there must be a good man at the back of it, and they were greatly indebted to the editor for giving them such paragraphs in the middle of his paper. This was direct evidence to the demand for matter in our regular newspapers which shall appeal to men's deepest needs.

Street Preaching in Cork.—Our readers will be glad to know that the coercive bye-law in regard to street preaching has been disallowed by the Lord-Lieutenant and Irish Privy Council. A memorial, signed by a number of representative citizens of Cork, including ten of the city magistrates, had been forwarded to the authorities against the bye-law.

Obituary.

REV. D. M. JENKINS.

THE death of Rev. D. M. Jenkins on Sunday, January 20, removes a prominent Welsh Congregational minister. The deceased minister began to preach in 1856. After a theological course at Bala, he entered upon the pastorate of Aberhosan Church, Montgomeryshire. He removed successively to Newtown, Penmaenmowr, Morriston, and finally to Liverpool. His ministry at the latter place was attended with much fruit. Mr. Jenkins was president of the Welsh Congregational Union in 1896.

MR. WILLIAM ROWNTREE.

The death of Mr. William Rowntree, of Scarborough, brings to a close a long and honourable life. For more than half a century Mr. Rowntree had been a prominent figure in the philanthropic, educational, religious (among the Society of Friends), and temperance life of Scarborough, and, as the oldest public man, was held in high esteem. Mr. Rowntree always took a deep interest in the offices of the religious body to which he belonged. His business was never allowed to interfere with what were considered higher duties, and for many years his shop in Scarborough, in common with those belonging to the Friends in the town, were always closed for an hour and a half each Wednesday morning to enable the proprietors and their assistants to attend the midweek meeting for worship.

REV. J. B. BLACKMORE, VENTNOR, I.W.

Many will learn with sorrow that Rev. James Baker Blackmore, of Ventnor, has passed away. He had reached the advanced age of seventy-three, and for some time had been an invalid. For several years he had lived in Ventnor, and there he fell on sleep a few days ago, at his residence, 1, St. Boniface Gardens. Many visitors to the Isle of Wight look back with joy to having met him, and will recall with pleasure his happy smile and Christian converse.

Mr. Blackmore was a clergyman of the Church of England, and from time to time had devoted much attention to the work of tuition. In both departments of labour he commanded high esteem, and exercised a powerful influence for good. His pupils of a generation ago hold his name in tender regard. The welfare of others was the business of his life, and young men engaged his special interest. The end was hastened by a chill; the last hours were full of peace—a fitting conclusion of a blessed life.

The Y.M.C.A.

ST. JOHN'S HALL, Penzance, was crowded on January 21, on the occasion of the annual public meeting of the local Association. The Mayor (Alderman J. H. Tonkin) presided, and addresses were given by Mr. Ed. Hain, M.P., Rev. E. J. Brailsford (Truro), and Mr. F. J. Fedarb (trav. sec.). The report showed the work to be in a very healthy condition, a membership of nearly 200, and £285 cleared off debts during the year.

The annual conference of the Liverpool and North Wales District Union was held recently at Liverpool. Mr. C. J. Procter, president of the Birkenhead Association, occupied the chair during the earlier portion of the proceedings, and Mr. J. H. Putterill of Exeter Hall, gave an address on "Y.M.C.A. work in the Twentieth Century," in the course of which he appealed for more voluntary individual effort. The Y.M.C.A. is a union of young men for direct missionary work, but if in the future it becomes merely an institution, run by the general secretary as a pastor to the young men of the city, the great value which attaches to the movement will be lost. He warned the respective associations to be more careful about their membership, so that they can build up a real working force of young men whose lives are consecrated to Christ, and who are willing to undertake aggressive work among their fellows. The Y.M.C.A. has done a splendid work among a limited section of the community for fifty years, but in the new century it ought to embrace all classes of young men. It must also take a more prominent place as an evangelistic and Bible teaching agency.

Evangelistic.

Woolwich Tabernacle.

A WEEK'S mission has been conducted by Mr. Arthur Jennings at Woolwich Tabernacle, commencing Sunday, January 13. He began with the children in the afternoon, and some of the best results of the Mission are the fruit of that meeting. We had a crowded Tabernacle in the evening, and at the close at least a dozen were spoken to by the worker, and every night during the week several remained inquiring the way of the Lord more perfectly. There was no sensationalism, no excitement, but there was power. Those who came half inclined to criticise were heard to say, "This is the Lord's doings, and it is marvellous in our eyes." Our brother's simplicity, sincerity, and devotion made a deep impression. We pray God that many business men may be led to follow his example in preaching the Gospel.

John Wilson, Pastor.

Mr. Charles Inglis at Derby.

Christian workers at the Derby Y.M.C.A. have been greatly encouraged in consequence of the twelve-days' mission recently conducted by Mr. Charles Inglis. In spite of the fact that the meetings in the evening were only open to men, the attendances were good and quite a number of young men have professed conversion. Some of the cases dealt with have been most interesting, and the personal dealing with souls has been a means of blessing to the workers.

Two special services were arranged for the employés at the Midland Railway Locomotive Works. The men listened most attentively, and blessing followed the Word. The series of Bible readings in the afternoons proved of great help and stimulus in the spiritual life of many professing Christians. Many of us will have to praise God for the visit of his servant.

Frank W. White, General Secretary.

Westbourne Grove Baptist Chapel, W.

Rev. John T. Vine has just completed a fortnight's mission here. God answered the prayers of his people in a wonderful way. In all, during the mission, some seventy to eighty have publicly confessed Christ as their Saviour. Many backsliders returned home.

During the last night of the mission very many Christians testified to the blessing they had received, and it is believed that as a result of the mission the church and also those of the neighbourhood will be enriched. The pastor, Rev. George Freeman, assisted Mr. Vine during the services. Mrs. Randell sung several solos with pathetic feeling. A children's service preceded the adult meetings each evening, conducted by Mr. Stentiforth, and a number of Sunday school scholars and other children of the district gave their hearts to the Saviour.

Mr. Charles Cook at Morecambe.

The Free Church Mission at Morecambe has been the occasion of great blessing to the town, and especially to the congregations of the various churches.

As already reported, blessing was given from the first, there being many seekers. At every meeting twenty to thirty persons rose for prayer, and on the Friday, forty publicly confessed Christ. Sunday's gatherings were remarkable, many were impressed as Mr. Cook spoke on "Lost Souls," and without any pressure another forty persons went forward for prayer. At the closing mission service the large building was filled, and the seekers filled the space around the Communion rails.

The converts—about 200 in all—have been invited to special meetings for them subsequent to the Mission, and the missioner has written personally to each, enclosing suitable booklets to confirm and establish them in the faith.

Some noticeable instances of blessing are reported. The incumbent of Immanuel Church says: "My bell ringer, my organist, and my son were all converted." A councillor's daughter writes: "I thank God for this mission, for it has been the means of bringing to Christ myself and five others in our home." "By the grace of God, I mean to serve Him to the end." "You will be pleased to hear that five of the —— family have been brought to Christ during the mission, besides my brother and myself." A young man writes: "I am glad to say that five of our family, including dear mother, have been converted this week, besides a good number of friends." A lady writes: "A great many who are very dear to me, as well as myself, have been brought to Christ in this glorious United Mission." A young lady writes: "My parents wish to thank you for three of us at home who have been converted, and for the great change there is in us." "All our family have been blessed through these meetings," says another convert. Many other striking quotations could be made from letters received by Mr. Cook. It is evident that a glorious time of revival has been given.

King's Weigh House Chapel.

Mr. Leonard Weaver has concluded his mission in the King's Weigh House, Grosvenor Square, W. The attendance at the meetings has not been large, but the mission has been fruitful.

The power of God was greatly manifested in our midst, and a number of men came out boldly for Christ. It was a time of great refreshing to God's people. Numbers of letters were received nightly from the anxious, asking for prayer. One very touching letter from a fallen woman brought the tears to the eyes of those that read it.

During the severe weather, when the snow was on the ground, a band of the workers visited some of the flats and squares in the neighbourhood, and sang hymns and announced the meetings. In one square some thirty boys were having a snow fight, and commenced throwing at the singers. One of the workers invited them to the meetings, and as a reward received a volley of snowballs. They came to the meetings, however, and quite a number have given themselves to Christ.

A very old and deaf lady, at the close of the after meeting, asked Mr. Weaver "why some of the people had been standing up?" Mr. Weaver explained that they had done so as an expression of their wish to accept Christ as their Saviour. With tears she replied, "I wish I had known; I do want Christ as my Saviour." Then raising her hand, she said, "I will take Christ."

G. R. Williams.

The Brothers Weaver at Annan.

The services conducted by the Brothers Weaver in Annan will be long remembered with devout thankfulness. The services commenced on Sunday, January 13 and closed on January 24. From the beginning the Holy Spirit's influence was manifest, and on the first Sunday evening there were several decisions for Christ. There was scarcely a night but what inquirers were dealt with either in the pews or inquiry room. One of the ministers who took part in the meetings stated that he had not seen such a gracious movement in the town for the last ten or twelve years. A pleasing feature was the number of young men who decided for Christ. For the Sunday evening the Victoria Hall (the largest hall in Annan) was engaged, and it was crowded to its utmost. The other services were held in the Congregational Church. Probably the largest men's meeting ever known in Annan was held on the second Sunday. It was an inspiring sight, and as Mr. Bewley Weaver spoke of the conversion of "Bendigo," and his testimony for Christ, the hearts of many were stirred. The singing of Mr. Frank Weaver throughout the mission was much blessed. Some interesting incidents of the mission could be given if space permitted. A farmer drove his servants eight miles, with the desire they might be saved. God honoured his faith. The servants walked the eight miles to the service the following night with an unconverted friend, who also received the Gospel. With thanksgiving we rejoice in the high tide of spiritual blessing that has attended this mission.

Geo. Hayton, Pastor, Congregational Church.

Rev. L. W. Munhall writes from Philadelphia: "I am in my third campaign since returning home. I go from here to Bay City, Mich., where I laboured six years ago."

The labours of Mr. J. Neale have been blessed during a three weeks' mission at St. Day, Cornwall. A number of persons came forward as seekers after salvation, and many more are still under conviction of sin.

Rev. John T. Vine lately held a series of mission services and Bible readings at Penge Tabernacle, S.E. The meetings have been well attended, increasing in numbers and interest every night. The Bible readings were most helpful to God's children, while many of the unconverted were brought to the Lord.

J. Wesley Bond.

A fortnight's mission has been conducted in the Queen Street Gospel Hall, Newton Abbot, by Mr. John Elliott, of Torquay. Despite rough weather the meetings were well attended. Sinners were broken down under conviction of sin, and led to trust in the Saviour. Some of those who were won had long been prayed for, and their decision gave great joy to their Christian friends. The meetings were marked by a spirit of solemnity, the whole of the congregation remaining to the prayer meetings. Special services were held for young people.

Miss Ada Ward (Mrs. Fisher), the converted actress, has just concluded a ten-days' evangelistic mission, in connection with the Gospel Mission Hall at Batley, Yorks. The building was found much too small for the Sunday meetings, and the Town Hall was taken. Long before the time to commence each service the Hall was packed to its utmost capacity, and hundreds were unable to obtain admittance. Miss Ward's addresses have been in the power of the Holy Spirit. There were many inquirers, and, as the result of the mission, people are still seeking the way of salvation.

A week's mission has been held at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Sheffield, by Rev. A. Allan. There was much heart-searching amongst the members of the congregation, and many definite decisions for Christ, besides a revival and re-consecration of many lives in which the saving power of Christ had been previously felt. Three services were also held amongst the children of the Sunday school, and at the closing meeting on Sunday afternoon several of the scholars expressed a desire to follow Jesus. Mr. Allan devoted himself in after-meetings nightly to young men and young women, alternately, for definite inquiry, and at the close of Sunday's service between seventy and eighty of both sexes met with him for this purpose.

"Grace Pettman" Stories

PRICE ONE PENNY.

Mr. JOHN BATEMAN (for many years Manager of "Horner's Penny Stories") begs to announce the issue of another Series of Penny Stories from the pens of and the other writers, so well-known by their previous productions.

These Stories are published on the First and Third Tuesdays of each month (and on the Fifth Tuesday when such occurs), and contain 16 pages of intensely interesting reading, illustrated by leading Artists, and with Illustrated Coloured Covers.

Rev. F. B. MEYER writes:—

"I have much pleasure in recommending the "GRACE PETTMAN" STORIES to those who adopt this method of bringing the Gospel message to the homes and attention of persons who would probably give heed to it in no other way. Many a one, who would not receive a tract, will accept one of these attractively got-up books. In the district around our church we have found it much easier for our workers to get the attention of the people by this method than by any other. I have confidence in the Christian principle of the publisher, and have no hesitation in giving this recommendation. Each story is full of the Gospel, and leads to Christ."

Pastor THOMAS SPURGEON writes:—

"I have read a couple of the "GRACE PETTMAN" series of Penny Stories, and am bound to say that if the others are like unto them I can unhesitatingly commend them to those who want stories with an excellent spirit in them, and sound, Gospel truth withal."

COMPLETE LIST WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

Sleep, Noble Queen!

A Hymn

Written and set to Music by Rev. J. MOUNTAIN.
(Of Tunbridge Wells.)

Harmonies revised by W. W. STARMER, Esq., A.R.A.M.

OF
OUR BELOVED SOVEREIGN,

QUEEN VICTORIA,

Who entered into Rest,
Tuesday, January 22nd, 1901.

First and Last Verses.

Sleep, noble Queen! Thy care and sorrow ended;
Closed are the eyes that oft for suff'rers wept;
Low lies thy head, by all thine Empire tended:
Still is thy heart which its great charge hath kept.

Sleep, noble Queen! Farewell, but not for ever!
Thy mantle fall on our succeeding King!
And when we all are called from earth to sever,
God in His grace to His sweet presence bring!

1,529 of the Lord's aged poor, of both sexes, and members of various branches of the Church of Christ, are now on the books; and upwards of £11,600 per annum are distributed amongst them in pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas. To meet this amount the ordinary income is inadequate. The pensioners live in all parts of the country, and most of them are upwards of seventy years of age.

In the four Homes—Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Brighton, and Stamford Hill—180 of the pensioners have peaceful dwellings. A visit to these buildings is invited.

Fresh Contributions to the Society and Asylums are Earnestly Solicited.

THE

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

Vice-Patrons—
CAPTAIN H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, R.N., K.G., and the FOUR ARCHBISHOPS.

Increased FUNDS are urgently NEEDED to meet the expenditure involved by the recent extensions of the operations of The Missions to Seamen to several ports abroad, where formerly the crews of British ships were destitute of religious ministrations.

To meet these important developments of the Society's work as well as the large expenditure involved in ministering to the 18,000 Merchant Seamen employed in the Transport Service to and from South Africa, an additional £5,000 is required at once; besides £43,000 for the ordinary annual expenditure on religious ministrations to Seamen, Fishermen, and Bargemen, at home and abroad.

The Society maintains 201 Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in 73 seaports in every part of the world.

Seventy-three Mission Steamers, Sailing Vessels, and Boats, and 97 Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in daily use, winter and summer.

Expenditure in 1899—£42,514 15s. 2d.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Offertories, Drawing-Room Meeting Collections, &c., are earnestly asked for to maintain the existing sailor work, and to extend it to other ports. They should be sent to—

Commander W. DAWSON, R.N.
The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London, W.C.

VICTORIA HOSPITAL

for Sick Children.

AN EARNEST APPEAL

ON BEHALF OF THE CHILDREN.

THE Committee urgently appeal for Funds to enable them to meet this year's deficiency and continue the good work that has been done for the Children during the past Thirty-four Years.

Upwards of 31,000 Children have occupied beds in the Wards.

Nearly 600 Children are sent annually to Broadstairs. The attendance in the Outpatients' Department numbers between 40,000 and 50,000 annually. Upwards of 160,000 Children live in the district served by the Hospital.

£2000

Is required to clear the Hospital from debt. Subscriptions and Donations may be sent to H. G. EVERED, Secretary, Victoria Hospital for Children, Queen's Road, Chelsea, S.W., or to the Editor of the Christian.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, January 28, 1901.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd." This will effectually prevent loss.

Fallen Asleep.

At Lympsham Manor House, Weston-super-Mare, aged eighty-two, Preb. J. H. Stephenson, one of the best-known clergyman in the West of England. Prebendary Stephenson was an Evangelical of the old school, and a warm friend of the Church Missionary Society and the Bible Society, the Lympsham meetings in their behalf being notable gatherings in the neighbourhood.—St. George's Presbyterian Church, Stockton, has suffered a great loss in the removal by death of its senior elder, Mr. Andrew Smith.—Mr. William Capey, sen., of Tunstall, a member of the Methodist New Connexion Church, a staunch teetotaler, and a loyal supporter of the United Kingdom Alliance.—Rev. H. V. Banks, curate of Holy Trinity, Millom, who died very suddenly at Millom railway station. He was talking to the coroner, when he suddenly stopped short, fell down, and expired in a few seconds. He was to have been married next month. Mr. Banks was a student at the London College of Divinity, and was ordained in 1892.—At Glenrossie, Newtown of Pitcairns, Rev. Duncan M'Laren, senior minister of the United Free Church, Dunning, aged seventy-seven, and in the fifty-second year of his ministry.—Rev. Brooke Lambert, aged sixty-six. He was practically the founder of the Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants, and he subsequently added to this a similar society for looking after the boys who leave Poor Law schools.—On January 25, at Manor Park, Margaret, wife of Mr. George Back, evangelist.—At Leekpatrick, Strabane, Rev. Robert Mitchell, for several years the esteemed Presbyterian minister of that district.—At Keady, Mr. James Campbell, an earnest Presbyterian elder.—Brentwood Congregational Church laments the death of Mr. Wm. Dean Daynes, who had for fifty years acted as deacon, treasurer, and lay preacher.—Mr. W. Kenyon, superintendent of the Sunday school and a deacon at Market Street Church, Farnworth, Lancs.—A faithful missionary who had borne the burden of more than a year of famine work in the heart of the famine in Gujerat. Rev. G. W. Woodward, of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, passed away in Bombay, on January 5.

London Jews' Society.—Tuesday, January 22, was observed as a day of prayer on behalf of missions to Jews in general, and the work of the London Jews' Society in particular. There were three meetings, which were held in Exeter Hall. They were attended by a large number of friends interested in the evangelization of Israel. Rev. F. Paynter presided at the morning and evening gatherings, when addresses were given bearing upon the present duties and responsibilities of Christians towards the Jews, and Israel's hopes in view of the Lord's return. At the afternoon meeting, Sir John Kennaway, president of the Society, spoke of the work that is being maintained in Christ Church, Mount Zion, where some 600 baptisms have taken place. A considerable portion of each meeting was devoted to prayer and supplication.

About Books.

A CHINESE PASTOR.

EVERYTHING from the pen of Mrs. Howard Taylor (née Geraldine Guinness) is worth reading; but she has written nothing more absorbingly interesting than her latest book—One of China's Scholars: The Culture and Conversion of a Confucianist. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) At the present time, when the Flowery Land is engaging so much attention, these pages should find many readers. They tell a story that will surprise such as are unfamiliar with mission work in China, and will delight those who are prepared to read of miracles of grace as the result of Gospel-preaching there.

In this gracefully written and admirably illustrated volume, we are afforded glimpses of the life and manners of the Chinese generally, and of the educated classes in particular. The upbringing of the student, and the deep-rooted prejudices of the man of letters, are described in striking detail. The ensemble is the life-story of a very remarkable man, the late Pastor Hsi, an honorary labourer in connection with the China Inland Mission in Shan-si. Bound by Satan for many years, not only to heathen practices, but to the opium vice, this man experienced a wonderful transformation, through coming into contact with the late Rev. David Hill, whom he found to be (as all who knew that saintly man will allow) "a living embodiment of the high Confucian ideal of 'the Princely Man.'"

The proud Confucian became a humble Christian, and his toils for Christ were varied, abundant, and unremitting. Once the terror of the country side, he was so changed as to command the love of hundreds who heard of Christ from his lips, and were rescued from opium-smoking and sin through his devoted exertions. "This man (we read) impoverished himself to succour the needy and save the lost, sacrificing time, health, home, and every comfort to attain this end." For details we must refer our readers to the book itself.

It has been said that missions have furnished a new apologetic of the Christian religion; and this book is an interesting and powerful contribution to that class of literature. Pastor Hsi's conversion was of the type of Saul's; and to account for it is an argument for the Christian faith. With its story of famine and its description of the opium plague, the book is informing in a high degree; while its personal incidents and experimental passages will be welcome "feathers for arrows" in the hands of Gospel preachers. Moreover, the pages bear eloquent witness of the widely-extended work of Christ in China during recent years.

The Graphic has issued a special number, entitled The Life of Her Majesty (1s.). The illustrations are numerous and good, and the letterpress full of interest.

Fry's Royal Guide to the London Charities has reached its thirty-seventh annual edition. The editor's preface is again a welcome feature, and the compilation shows signs of characteristic care throughout (1s. 6d. Chatto & Windus.)

The "Biblical Illustrator" grows apace. The series now includes a volume on 1 and 2 Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther. (7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) Scores of works and periodicals, old and new, have been laid under contribution in this deeply interesting volume of a great sermonic library.

Mr. W. T. Stead gives us a remarkable shilling'sworth in the Review of Reviews annual—Lest We Forget: A Keepsake from the Nineteenth Century. He deals first with some characteristics of the century; then with personalities, chronology, sovereigns, and treaties. There are 250 portraits and maps.

The South African Pioneer (1d.) is giving from month to month very readable articles by Dudley Kidd, entitled, "Up the Zambesi River." This is the organ of the South Africa General Mission. For the Young Home Helpers' Union of the Mission there is an attractive halfpenny monthly, Diamonds from South Africa. (Marshall Bros.)

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit may well be styled a literary marvel. The forty-sixth volume of the series is before us, and the discourses published last year show all the simplicity of substance and vigour of treatment that have characterized the periodical from the beginning. Needless to say, the fifty-two sermons are from texts taken from all parts of Holy Scripture, and they deal with great truths in a soundly Evangelical manner. It is no exaggeration to say that these annual volumes prove a great blessing to many workers, both in suggestion and stimulus. (7s. Passmore & Alabaster.)

Notes & Comments

OUR good Queen has at last been laid to rest beside her beloved and ever-lamented husband. Forty years ago, in the pride and glory of his manhood, he was suddenly taken from her side, and over the mausoleum in which his remains are buried, his Royal widow wrote the following tender and truly Christian inscription :—

His mourning widow, Victoria, the Queen, directed that all that is mortal of Prince Albert be placed in this Sepulchre, A.D. 1862. Farewell, well-beloved ! Here at last I will rest with thee; with thee in Christ I will rise again.

This place has always been held sacrosanct by the Queen, and few eyes outside the Royal family have seen the inside. Now she has attained her wish to be buried with her husband. The following inscription in Latin is on her coffin :—

Here lies the body of the Most Serene, Powerful and Excellent Sovereign Victoria, by the grace of God Queen of Britain, Defender of the Faith, and Empress of India, died January 22, in the year of our Lord 1901, in the eighty-second year of her life, and the sixty-fourth year of her reign.

During the past week the public mind has been absorbed, to the almost total exclusion of everything else, by the death of the Queen, the loving commemoration of her character and reign, and the welcome to the new King, Edward VII. This fact alone shows the immense importance of having at the head of every State and every party a person who is possessed of great qualities. A few years ago, it was thought that the age of Socialism had come, and that the individual would henceforth count for less and less. The spread of Socialist ideas, which has undoubtedly taken place, has been accompanied, on the other hand, by a remarkable reassertion of the importance of the individual. Without a leader, the crowd is helpless, and the bigger the crowd the more helpless it is. It is not too much to say, therefore, that the future of the world depends more on persons than abstract principles, or rather on principles embodied in persons.

It is often hard for the bereaved to understand the love which compels them to take up the duty and burden of life while their hearts are yet bleeding. It is, however, the will of God that we should; and so it was in the natural order of things that, after we had read in Monday's morning papers an account of the funeral of Queen Victoria, on Tuesday we should find the Messages addressed by King Edward VII. to his subjects. The three documents—"To My People," "To My People Beyond the Seas," and "To the Princes and People of India"—must be regarded as highly satisfactory. It is the affectionate son who gratefully returns thanks for the tributes to the memory of his beloved mother, and many prayers will be drawn out on his behalf as he goes on to say :

I shall earnestly strive to walk in her footsteps, devoting myself to the utmost of my powers to maintaining and promoting the highest interests of my people, and to the diligent and zealous fulfilment of the great and sacred responsibilities which, through the will of God, I am now called to undertake.

To the Colonies his promise is to—

With God's blessing, solemnly work for the promotion of the common welfare of the great Empire over which I am now called to reign.

In the Message to India the King recalls his historic visit to that dependency, and assures princes and people that he will endeavour to follow the great example of the first Queen Empress.

Scourge after scourge is sweeping over China. War has done its deadly work, and now reports from Si-ngan-fu inform us that the famine in the northern provinces of Shensi and Shansi is one of the worst in the history of the empire. For three years in succession crops have failed, the present winter has been unusually cold, and the state of affairs is so awful that cannibalism is said to be practised now over a considerable extent of country. In former times of distress the real friends of the people have been the missionaries; but now, by the acts of the Chinese themselves, these friends have been driven from the provinces. Yet the Church must do something to feed the hungry, if she would follow in the footsteps of her Master; and, heavy as have been the demands of the Indian Famine and War Funds on our resources, another vast problem must be faced by those stewards of whom it is required that they be found faithful.

The Viceroy of India sends very serious news when he announces that another famine in that country is almost certain to occur this year. The horrors of last year's famine were beyond description, and a repetition of them would mean an unexampled state of things. With this new trouble ahead of us, we hope that the Government will take some measures to ensure the salvation of the Indian populace in the famine districts. Last year, to its shame, Parliament refused to vote a single penny towards the alleviation of the great distress : all the charity went through private sources. Now that we have official notice of the impending scarcity of food, it is the duty of the Government to take immediate steps for the prevention of the heartrending scenes which saddened us all last year. Here is a clear case for prevention to show itself better than cure.

We heartily welcome the Report of the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, held in New York from April 21 to May 1, last year. It is a handsome work in two substantial volumes, and the first edition consists of 25,000 copies. (6s. nett. Religious Tract Society.) In an early issue we purpose giving some account of the contents of the work; therefore we content ourselves now with the remark that those who would study the great cause of foreign missions in the light of the conclusions reached by its leading advocates and exponents, will do well to secure a copy of the work without delay.

We trust that all our readers will make a special point of carefully reading the sermon preached by Dr. Parker at the Guildhall, an abstract of which we gave last week. It is a message especially to Christians who live in great cities, and are surrounded by crime and squalor. A most heartsearching passage is that in which the preacher speaks of people who close their eyes to the sin and misery around them ; many cover up their heads that they may escape ugly sights, and take care not to inhale noisome savours. Many try and forget that there are distressing and ghastly things occurring in our streets. They do not like to know of life tragedies; they do not want to hear the miserable cries of the broken-hearted.

There is much in this for us all to lay to heart. Compassion is absent from souls often because there is no vision of their shame and need. It was when our Lord saw the multitudes that He was moved with compassion towards them.

A volume which many will anticipate with interest is—Queen Victoria: Her Christian Character. By Walter Walsh, author of "The Secret History of the Oxford Movement," of which nearly 100,000 copies have been sold. There will be a portrait of the Queen, and other illustrations. The book is announced as ready shortly. (5s. Morgan & Scott.)

Now that our late gracious Queen has been called home, nearly every philanthropic society is gratefully recalling the special benefits which it owes to her influence. The early February magazines teem with information of this kind. Mr. Benjamin Waugh has a touching article in the Child's Guardian about the position of children under Her Majesty's reign. He remarks that it is not generally known that every statute upon the statute book for the protection of children has been passed during the reign of Queen Victoria. They include protection to children in factories, mines, chimneys, canals, workhouses, pantomimes, and the ill-treated little ones in the houses of drunken, idle, and vicious parents. The children yet unborn will still rise up and call her blessed. Certain shocking revelations recently made in the daily papers about the treatment of children prove that there is yet a great field of operation for the work in which Mr. Waugh is engaged.

There is one peril arising out of the growingly popular memorial services that are being held for the departed, which is pointed out in the Church Times, not, indeed, as a peril, but an indication of the march of "Catholic doctrine and practice." That practice, which is being insidiously introduced into Anglican services, is prayers for the dead. The editor of the paper named rejoices in the growing popular feeling in favour of this long since discarded custom of the "undivided Church." He traces the present trend of sentiment largely to the singing of a certain anthem from the liturgy of the Russian Church (the Kieff anthem) at the funeral of the late Duke of Clarence. He further says :—

Helpful so much in other ways, St. Paul's Cathedral has done a great deal to popularize the truth about prayers for the dead. The service that was held there on the day after the Queen's death will be widely followed. Our readers will have noted that this service, which we printed last week, included (among other items) the prayer, "Grant us, O Lord, together with all thy departed, peace, light, and refreshment."

We would call our readers' attention to three facts in this connection. First, that the dominant party in the Anglican Church is making deliberate use of the deeply moved religious sentiment of the nation, with a view to furthering the hold of its own doctrinal heresies on the popular mind. Secondly, they are making opportunities out of the fact that all eyes are directed at this time to the doings of the Royal Family in their sorrow, to give a spurious but insidious éclat to some of these heresies. And thirdly, they are openly rejoicing in the probable success of these Jesuitical practices. Here is an extract from the editorial already quoted:

Large numbers of Churchpeople will have read with satisfaction what has been done at Osborne. They will remember that when the Duke of Clarence died at Sandringham a crucifix was prominent in the death chamber, and that in an even more Churchly manner has the body of our late Sovereign been treated. They have felt that due reverence has been shown to the dead in transforming the apartment in which her body has lain into a Chapelle Ardente, with its little prie-dieu, crucifix, lighted candles, and the reciting of offices. A few pious Protestants may find their souls vexed thereat, but Churchmen generally will rejoice, and the vast body of the public will think that if Royalty acts in this way it must be right, and the example ought to be copied. We may therefore expect that in future everything connected with death and burial will be conducted on more Catholic lines, and this will mean that Catholic truth about the intermediate state will have received a vast impetus. There is, of course, the danger of a certain fashion being followed, simply because the Court has set it, but the adoption of Catholic practices means in the long run the acceptance of Catholic truth.

This open confession puts the case bluntly, and so far it is well. But is the nation, deeply Protestant as it is at heart, prepared to allow itself to be thus cajoled into a surreptitious Romanism?

Very great responsibility attaches to those persons who are writing in the Daily Press upon the probabilities of war with France, and endeavouring to vitiate the public mind. Commenting upon the accession of Edward VII., the Paris Figaro, in a thoughtful and sympathetic article, saw in the circumstance grounds for a belief that a better feeling would exist between the two nations, the new King knowing "how to estimate at their true value the irresponsibles on both sides of the Channel." Surely we have had enough, and too much, of war, and it behoves us all to cry night and day to God, not only to grant us peace in our time, but also to hasten the time when war shall be no more.

In carrying out the conditions set forth by our publishers for the securing of new subscribers (see page 31), one correspondent writes:

I am delighted with the Bible, which, for size, quality of paper, and style of print, is the most useful and handsome I have yet seen.

Another writes:

I have received the copy of your valuable "Two-Version Bible," and am highly pleased with it. I feel better equipped for service than ever. I have been a reader of The Christian for over twenty years, and have received great benefit and help. Wishing The Christian great extension, &c.

Yet another:

I have taken The Christian for nearly thirteen years, and have been the means of introducing it into not a few homes. I have found it very helpful to my spiritual life, as well as a splendid paper for keeping me in touch with God's work and workers throughout the world. The twelve names of young men I send you, are most of them recently converted.

Now that the great Mission in London is over, and that in the provinces is close upon us, anxiety rises as to the after treatment of those who have been brought to a sense of conviction, and those who have been truly converted. Many who feel themselves imperfectly equipped for this all-important task would do well to read such books as R. A. Torrey's "How to Bring Men to Christ" (1s. 6d. Nisbet), C. H. Spurgeon's "Soul-Winner" (3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) and "Bringing in the Sheaves," by Rev. A. B. Earle (1s. and 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott). Among books that may safely be recommended to young converts are the following:

"Calls to Christ," by Dr. Robertson Nicoll (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d.); "Young Converts" (1s. 6d.) and "The Way of Life," (6d. and 1s.), by Dr. Boyd; with three penny booklets—"How to Become a Christian," and "I. What it is to be a Child of God; II. On Coming to Christ"—Gospel dialogues between Mr. D. L. Moody and the late Rev. Marcus Rainsford, with "The Path Made Plain," in which Major Whittle questions Mr. Rainsford (Morgan & Scott).

These books will prove of unspeakable help to workers themselves, as well as to the persons with whom they may have personal dealing, and will suggest methods by which they may be enabled to carry to full fruition the breaking up of the fallow ground and the sowing of the seed.

The Simultaneous Mission.

THE London meetings in connection with the Simultaneous Mission of the Free Churches have been held in the many centres to which missioners were assigned. In most cases the concluding meeting was held on Monday evening, and partook of the nature of a thanksgiving service. The time has not come to speak of results in any absolute or definite sense, yet there have been results. That hundreds of men and women have professed a personal exercise of faith in Christ is something for which to praise God. That a host of ministers and other workers, "with one accord in one place," have proclaimed the Gospel day after day to many thousands of people, is also subject for rejoicing.

It is God who "maketh men to be of one mind in a house;" and this blessing has been witnessed in the cordial co-operation of men belonging to various ecclesiastical organizations. It is God also who "bringeth the prisoners out of captivity;" and this blessing has likewise been given in different measure in all quarters of London as the Mission has proceeded. Therefore, in all parts of the Metropolis, there are to-day joyous hearts—alike among workers who have been encouraged in their witness, and among men and women in whose souls a new affection has been implanted by the Spirit of God.

But, so far from the Mission being over, only the keynote has been struck. Hitherto the attendants have been for the most part members of churches and habitual worshippers; few actual outsiders have been gathered in. It is very much if (as we believe has been the case) the church members have been revived, their love quickened, and their zeal renewed. When the Mission preachers return to their churches, it is to be hoped that they will find their people (and their people will find them) prepared and anxious to carry on an earnest and continuous soul-saving work.

Among the best features of the work may be specified the meetings for young people, and the special gatherings for men. In some places these have been the most fruitful of all efforts. Certain it is that, after addresses by well-known preachers to the young, large numbers of our youth—buoyant in spirit, and in full view of life with its duties and responsibilities—have declared themselves on the Lord's side. Again, after straight talks on the claims of God, hosts of men—already bearing "the burden and heat of the day"—have professed that love for Christ which accompanies faith, and leads to obedient discipleship. The Bible readings held during several days of the Mission were not attended as they should have been in some places. But they were profitable seasons to many.

A journalist who has had large experience of sermons and preachers, said, half-satirically, to a friend: "My belief is that the Mission will do more good to the parsons than to anyone else; for it will teach them what and how to preach." Setting aside this paradoxical way of expressing it, there is no doubt a strong element of truth in the remark. Already the Federation secretary, Rev. Thos. Law, in an interview, has practically endorsed it. These are his words:—

But what I want just now to emphasise is the influence the Mission is having on the preaching of our ministers. It brings more persuasiveness of appeal into our sermons, and will continue to do so. The great aim of preaching is, or should be, to save sinners. I do not mean mere emotionalism. The practice of Christian ethics in daily life is quite as much insisted upon.

A further point to be noticed is the hearty way in which the older Dissenters—the Congregationalists, the Baptists, the Presbyterians—have been going into the work. Methodists, as Mr. Law said, are supposed to be revivalistic, but "the others have shown quite as much interest in the mission, and in inquiry-room work."

On Friday last a breakfast for missioners was given at Exeter Hall, and afterwards a most remarkable conference took place. The experiences related were sometimes quite startling, and workers throughout the country will be glad to know some of the conclusions to which many of our most experienced ministers were led. Thus Mr. Jowett, of Birmingham, declared that in his meetings he had discovered, through conversation and correspondence with many, that the young women were puzzled by intellectual difficulties, while the "young men were burning with vice." The experience of many others leads to the same conclusion, so far as men are concerned. It is an extremely delicate subject this, but there can be no doubt that the flesh rather than the mind stands in the way of vast numbers of persons turning to God. This simply means that preachers must drop their intellectual athletics and go straight for the conscience. Our Lord did not argue with the Pharisees of his time, when they brought the woman to Him; He so acted that conscience smote every man present.

Another thing which received emphasis at this meeting was the fact that the real "outsiders" have not, in any considerable numbers, attended. The opinion was universally expressed that if the people are to be reached, something more is required than an invitation to them to enter our places of worship. One well-known minister, who at Brighton has been marvellously blessed of God in his work at the theatre on Sunday evenings, won the assent of his brethren in saying that "to reach the people we must go to them. It is not enough to bid them come to us. They have certain haunts, and we know where to find them; if we are really to impress them we must follow them, and deal with them upon their own ground." The missioners, one and all, seem impressed with this fact, and if the Simultaneous Mission in London accomplishes nothing more it will do an immense work in opening up to the Churches a better way of touching the unevangelized multitudes.

In view of the future results of the Mission, we hope that ministers in their ordinary pulpit work will follow up the impression already made by preaching simple Gospel sermons on the great cardinal truths, and making these sermons as Scriptural as possible, both in their ideas and their language. Nothing would be more likely to leave a permanent mark on pulpit and pew than a return to the old Puritan custom of appealing to the written Word as the ultimate standard of teaching and conduct. We hear innumerable sermons nowadays about the Bible. What the people need to hear is more of the substance of the Bible itself.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—V.

REGENERATION.

By Professor MOULE, D.D., Cambridge.*

"EXCEPT a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

"As many as received Him (the Christ), to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name; which were born . . . of God." "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." "Whatsoever is born of God doth not commit sin." "Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world." "Everyone that loveth is born of God." "Everyone that doeth righteousness is born of God." "Ye are born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, through the word of God which liveth and abideth for ever." "He hath begotten us again to a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." "Of his own will begat He us with the word of truth." "What manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. Therefore the world knoweth us not, even as it knew Him not." "Beloved, now are we the sons of God." "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God."

Group with these utterances the following: "A new heart will I give you and a new spirit will I put within you." "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." "If any man be in Christ it is a new creation." "He that hath the Son hath the life, and he that hath not the Son hath not the life." The Son quickeneth (maketh to live) whom He will." "You hath He quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins." "Your life is hid with Christ in God." "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." "No man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal Him." "So is every one that is born of the Spirit." "Ye must be born again."

I have massed together these quotations. No references are appended; surely none are necessary for my reader, for these words are, every one of them, outstanding Scripture messages. Outstanding they are indeed, in a sense which may be illustrated by the coral islands of the Ocean. Many as they are, they are but the points and peaks of a vast substructure of truth, underlying the whole message of the Bible. Psalmist, Prophet, Apostle, the blessed Lord Himself (He most emphatically of all), have contributed to the collection. The collection is in vital touch with the whole teaching of the Bible.

So if we take the Bible as valid evidence upon the essentials of salvation at all, Regeneration is indeed an essential of salvation. Take the Holy Book even with some of those reserves which we are often urged now to make; still it is so. We are sometimes pressed now to take as our court of appeal "not the whole Bible, but the Bible as a whole." For the sake of argument, be it so for the moment to me. Well, I affirm without fear that "the Bible as a whole," the "Divine Library," if questioned just now not for its detached texts but for its main results, delivers to us, as one of its profoundest revelations to man's soul, just this, that man, to be at one with God, to be saved, to be safe, to be holy, to be what he was made to be, to walk in peace, power, and purity in the light of a Father's smile, to escape a precipice of ruin, "a wilderness of woe," and to enter instead the paradise of present and future blessing—"must be born again."

The Bible, "as a whole," has many magnificent things to say of man. No literature on earth has ever glorified man as the Bible has done, for it has told us of his being made "in the own image" of God, and then of the very Son of the Father's love having taken, perfectly, absolutely, for ever, man's nature to be his Nature in personal oneness with the Divine. Never dream that the Bible reproaches or despises man for his manhood; rather, it opens up thoughts and hopes about his being which point straight to the heaven of heavens. But, then, it treats him, in its vast message "as a whole," as a being who has hurt, has wrecked, has hopelessly and mortally tainted, his own fair nature by discord with God. The Book never, never lets him forget that he, race and individual, is a sinner, and so a sinner that only God can, in a miracle of mercy, undo his sin, forgiving its guilt, and overwhelming with Himself its awful power. And this is the burden of the message, "Ye must be born again."

"Christianity can never be proved," says some one, "except to a bad conscience." Put a little differently, the words are profoundly significant, and absolutely true. "Christ will never be fully seen in his self-evidencing truth and glory, except by the soul awakened to its own infinite need of Him, in a sense of its own sin." Deep and true, historically and spiritually true, is that other saying, that "more than half the heresies of all time are ultimately traceable to an inadequate sense of sin."

Browning, who wavered too often in his thought upon the Christian foundations, and sometimes speaks as if sin were but a transitory phase of things, in his moments ot deepest insight seems to see a very different sight. In one terrible little poem, he says that he believes Christianity, chiefly because it Taught Original Sin, The Corruption of Man's Heart.

And the counterpart to all this dark mass of truth is the glorious message of, not only the necessity, but, thanks be to God, the blissful possibility of the New Birth, the Regeneration of the sinner. The Book, "as a whole," calls us to be absolutely sure of this, that "Ye must (if ye would enter into the kingdom, and have the life, and be the happy children of God in Christ) be born again." And ye may be born again, so ye "receive the Christ, believing on his Name."

It is no poor, cold, pale, "naturalistic," matter of brave resolves to be better, and the education of character to higher levels. There is room abundant for resolves and education—in the issue. But the initial need is "not resolutions but a revolution." The man must "come to Jesus." By the Holy Ghost he must be "joined to the Lord" in repentant faith. Then shall the Son of God "dwell and walk" in his new-born heart. Regeneration, the gift of God, shall have its counterpart, its visible side, in Conversion, the consciousness of pardoned and re-created man. And so the man shall be even now, in the inner sense, the child of God. And it doth not yet appear what he shall be hereafter.

THE CHILD OF GOD.*

The Scripture doctrine of the New Birth, if I read it in the least aright, is inseparable from that of the New Life. I mean that the New Birth in Holy Scripture, taking the evidence of Scripture in the mass and on the whole, appears as a thing, as a change, which not only may bear fruit, but does. It is not a capacity merely, but a tendency, which is a very different thing. Where it is, there—in the normal state of the case—there is evidence of it. The child of God, normally, is "manifest"; the child of God, normally, "does not sin"; the child of God, normally, is "not known" by the world; the world in some respects cannot make him out; he has a secret, and shows that he has, which rises above its analysis. The native and natural bearing of the phrase "child of God," in Scripture, is towards not the potential but the actual, not the latent but the revealed. If there are passages which seem to look the other way, they are the exception, not the rule. The language about the New Birth in them is an extension of its true usage. In other words, the New Born in Scripture mean the believing and the holy, made such by the power of God, who has new created them into that condition. And if ever the vocabulary of the New Birth is applied in Scripture to those who are not for certain such, it is because they are by outward profession such. And this is only another way of saying that they are so called on the assumption that so they are—an assumption which may none the less need to be tested before God in the individual case:—"Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves: know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates, counterfeits?" . . .

I return to my main theme in its simplicity: the New Birth. What is it? It is the gift of God to fallen man, through his dear Son, by his blessed Spirit, of the new heart, the new spirit, the new creation; the mind, the nature, of the child of God. It is the divine side of that of which the human side is Conversion, when Conversion deserves its name; when it is not only a vigorous reformation of habits and acts, nor the mere earthquake, or windgust, of emotions, but the response of a mysteriously and blissfully enfranchized will to the Voice of God indeed. Conversion must not for a moment be squared and cut to a narrow pattern; nor must the consciousness of it be necessarily one, single, and definite. Only, wherever to-day the man is indeed the Lord's, there somehow and somewhen has been Conversion; and below, or above, that Conversion, there has been the gift from God of the New Birth, there is the ceaseless gift from God of the New Life.

THE DIVINE FATHERHOOD.

I read it with revealed clearness that Man, in the Fall, notwithstanding that Adam was "the son of God," so broke the holy continuity of his creation that he is, antecedent to regenerating grace, "dead," spiritually dead, and must be re-created into a true filiation. And this New Birth, this becoming and being called a child of God, is in Scripture the foreground aspect of the whole subject of Divine Fatherhood, as regards us men and our salvation. Not in Adam but in Christ are we children of God; and we are in Christ not by creation but by new creation. Compared with this Fatherhood of Grace, under which we "become partakers of the Divine Nature," it is not too much to say that the Fatherhood of Creation appears rather as a profound and sacred revelation analogous to the paternal idea, than as Fatherhood in its proper meaning, which demands a true and real impartation of nature. Blessed be God, the circle of that Fatherhood, though immovable in its holy limits, is divinely open to faith. "Whosoever will" may step into it, in the name of the Only Begotten Son of God.

* The writer refers to his booklet, "The New Birth" (Seeley, 2d.) for some fuller statements.

The Late Queen Victoria.

SINCE Tuesday, January 22, the British people have been bracing themselves up under a profound sense of the greatest loss which we or our fathers have known. Surely never before did a whole nation gather in body or spirit in the same fashion, to pay the last tribute even to "the mighty dead," as was the case on Saturday last. Every avenue of access to the city of London was thronged from early morning with men and women who were moved, not merely by curiosity or sight-seeing, but in very many cases by a sincere desire to attend a funeral at which it was impossible for all who would have wished to walk in the procession; and all over the land those who could not be present were joined heart to heart with them.

The streets were filled with people, whose most striking characteristics were perfect decorum and a gravity of demeanour well befitting the occasion. None who stood within hearing of the eighty-one minute guns which boomed across Hyde Park will soon forget the impression left on their minds. The procession was watched with breathless interest, but it was a backward look which every eye was taking. Even the King was thought and spoken of, for the time being, only as the son of Queen Victoria, the German Emperor only as her grandson, and many another princely personage only as they stood related to the departed monarch.

The hitch which occurred in the arrangements at Windsor provided an opportunity for an additional display of the common feeling. We shall recall with satisfaction that the gun carriage on which the coffin rested was drawn from the railway station, not even by eight white horses, but by warm-hearted bluejackets, who in this way found an outlet for their pent-up passion of love.

Men went home feeling that they had seen the closing scene of the Victorian era, with its brilliant story of progress in every department of human life. We cannot lift the veil which covers the future, and we would not if we could. The new century and the new reign are opening with many clouds overhead; yet though gloomy forebodings have been uttered in different directions, the nation is not pessimistic. Much of the goodness of the Lord has been experienced during these sixty-three years, and on every hand there is a strong confidence that God has great things yet in store for us.

After a brief season of nearness to God, the nation returns once more to the daily round of duty. A strong, firm hand has been taken away from the helm of State, and Queen Victoria's wise counsels will be sorely missed in many a Court besides that of Great Britain. But surely the chief lesson of her life will have been overlooked altogether if it has not pointed us to the Lord before whom she bowed as humbly as the meanest of her subjects, and whom she served with all the zeal of an intense nature. If, however, in this way we have come to the Fountain of all strength, we may gird ourselves anew for the battle with assured hope of fuller service and ever-widening vision.

While the funeral was in progress, the City Temple was crowded for a most impressive service, arranged by the National Free Church Council, and conducted by Rev. C. H. Kelly, in which ministers of various denominations took part. The vast audience rose at the first strains of the Dead March, and remained standing while it was played.

Rev. F. B. Meyer led the meeting in expressions of unfaltering trust in God, amid a great sorrow, thanksgivings for a noble life with its imperishable memory, and prayer that Royal mourners and stricken people may realize the Divine presence.

In the course of a brief address, Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers said it would not be easy to exaggerate the solemnity and significance of this memorable day. Let us forget the pomp and circumstance of the pageant and the great crowds—the most wonderful spectacle of all—while we remember that the love of true hearts dies not. The Queen was characterized by a conscientious sense of duty, and an unfaltering desire to do the right. It was sad that she should die while the war continues, for her last words were, "Oh, that peace may come!" May God answer that prayer.

Rev. Dr. Clifford expressed gratitude to God for the gift of a Queen whose personal service and character were her chief sources of influence. He recalled her late Majesty's sympathy with the bereaved and tried, her truthfulness and sincerity. She clothed the virtues of life with a perennial charm.

Martyred Missionaries

OF THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

NOT without much conflict is the Gospel of Christ being planted in China; and when the story of the centuries comes to be written, a sadly thrilling chapter will have to be devoted to events that occurred during the closing years of the Nineteenth Century. Finding his rule seriously challenged, the evil one has once more made war upon the saints, and, in some quarters, so far as human appearance goes, has overcome them. But all down the ages the Church has witnessed unto blood, and in North China, as elsewhere, no weapon that is formed against her can prosper. There is abiding truth in the familiar and time-honoured saying, "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church."

The martyrs do not benefit by our praise; but we do well to praise God on their account. Moreover, it is our privilege to contemplate their example in the spirit of the words: "Considering the issue of their life, imitate their faith." In this serious concern we cannot but be greatly helped by the biographical records that may be given us. Already one such is in our hands, and a noble record it is—Martyred Missionaries of the China Inland Mission; With a Record of the Perils and Sufferings of Some who Escaped. Edited by Marshall Broomhall, B.A. With Portraits, Maps, and Illustrations. (5s. Morgan & Scott.)

This is a handsome volume, calculated to revive tender memories in many Christian circles. After an account of the occurrences that led up to

THE ANTI-FOREIGN MASSACRES

—plain and succinct in historical outline—we have brief memoirs of the men and women, also the children, who for Christ's sake "had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment, and were slain with the sword." In the editor's preface we learn:

During the sad crisis of this year [1900], the China Inland Mission has been called to bear the heaviest loss of any Society. Of the 127 adults and the forty-four children known to have been killed among the Protestant Missionary Societies, the China Inland Mission has lost fifty-two adults and sixteen children, while the worst is feared for six more adults and four children.

This sad loss has chiefly fallen upon the workers in Shan-si; the other affected provinces are—Chih-li and Cheh-kiang, while in the province of Ho-nan all the mission property was destroyed though the missionaries were marvellously delivered. The stories of survivors are given as well as notices of those who were sent to the martyr's death. Of necessity the narratives are short, but they are very readable, and, need we add, singularly touching in their details. The portraits, sixty in number, and the other illustrations, are admirably produced.

The stories of escape written by the missionaries themselves are deeply interesting. One of the last received describes the trials and deliverances of Mr. and Mrs. C. Green, their children, and Miss Gregg. It is pathetic in a high degree. Seven times this little band seemed to be within a few minutes of death, but amidst hunger and cold and illness, and a gunshot wound in Mr. Green's head, they were wonderfully sustained. On one occasion the point of despair was almost reached. Mr. Green says:

Sick, ill, tired, cold, hungry, and uncertain, the black pall of despair was settling down on my soul. As evening came on, with tears I implored my wife and Miss Gregg to pray for me, when suddenly there was quiet and music in my heart. I listened to catch the tune, then my lips tremblingly took up the strain and sang:

Praise the Saviour, ye who know Him.
Who can tell how much we owe Him?
Gladly let us render to Him
All we have and are.

The ladies soon joined, and, as the warm comfort of the Lord's own peace flowed again in our hearts, we did not try to keep back the tears that would come.

How through extraordinary perils they were at length brought to a place of safety, and how, after dangers were past, a new and sore trial befell them, the book sadly relates.

The names of the murdered missionaries remain with us; but the native Christians, who were killed "not accepting deliverance," were very numerous—in fact their number will never be known. "Considering the issue of their life, imitate their faith"—the faith of the natives and of the missionaries. The book is another chapter, and a noteworthy one, in "the new apologetic" furnished to our most holy faith by the great missionary cause. Hence Mr. Marshall Broomhall, and the many contributors to his pages, will never know the full influence of their literary labours. Certainly this is a work of great worth, and we bespeak for it many readers.

Victoria Regina.

She rests in peace,
The monarch wearied with a nation's cares;
All troubles cease
Within the glory that, through Christ, she shares.

For us she spent
Herself, her time, her talents, yea! her all;
And since she went
Our tears, for very loneliness, must fall.

So great a Queen!
So good a mother! pitiful and pure.
Of judgment keen,
And ready, though she suffered, to endure.

Most knew her worth,
And loved her in proportion as they knew;
Her place on earth
Was that accorded but to chosen few.

God gave her rank;
He gave her also strength for all her need,
And Him we thank
For such a life, immortalized indeed!

On Him we lean
In this our nation's bitter, sorest grief,
We mourn our Queen,
And God, ay, God alone, can send relief.

To Him we pray
For her loved son, who now her place doth take;
Our King to-day,
Who seeks to wisely rule, for her dear sake.

With her 'tis well,
A higher Court doth claim our Sovereign now;
And who can tell
What everlasting honours wreathe her brow?

Her life-work o'er,
At Jesus' feet she lays her sceptre down,
To know no more
The heavy burden of an earthly crown.

A Dublin Mission.—A short mission—mainly for the benefit of those who, while still nominally in the Church of Rome, are in grave doubt as to their faith being well founded, or who are in danger of drifting into infidelity, of which there are many serious indications—is being held by Rev. Thomas Connellan, in Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, and will continue till Sunday, February 10. Two meetings will be held on Sunday, at 4 and 8.30 p.m., and on week-nights (Saturday excepted), at 8.

Progress in Japan.

AFTER the capture of Shimonoseki in 1864, by the allied fleet, two young men were appointed by the Japanese authorities to negotiate with those in command of the combined forces and arrange terms of settlement. One of these was Hirobumi Ito and the other Kaoru Inouye.

Both of these young men were full of patriotism, and ambitious to promote the welfare of their country. What they then saw of the foreigners convinced them that Japan was far behind other nations as a military power, and it created in their minds a desire and purpose to go abroad and study the condition of things in other lands.

At the risk of their lives (as no Japanese were then allowed to go abroad) they went to England; and reached London as entire strangers, and with only one dollar between them.

Providentially a Christian merchant (Mr. Hugh Matheson) heard of these two waifs, and took them under his own care. For two years they studied diligently, and saw continually the practical results of the Christian religion as exemplified in the daily life of this noble man. Neither of them professed Christianity; but the made an impression that was deep and lasting.

Both returned to Japan, to take an active and prominent part in the revolution which resulted in the establishment of a government with the rightful Emperor at the head.

The history of Japan since that period has been very largely influenced, and in fact to a considerable extent moulded, by these two men. Count Inouye has long been recognised as one of the ablest and best statesmen that Japan has produced. Marquis Ito has risen through various grades, and, in all of these, rendered most valuable services to his country. Twice he has been called to fill the office of Premier, and now he enters it with increased honour for a third term. It is fortunate in this period of the history of Japan that a man of such marked ability and broad and liberal views has again been called to the highest and most important position in the gift of the Emperor. He has the confidence of his own people and foreigners alike, and under his direction is surely progressive. As an indication of what will be the attitude of the régime just established, it is significant that it was by the approval and assistance of Marquis Ito that a copy of the Bible was presented to His Majesty.

THE FUTURE COURSE OF JAPAN

Another fact of interest is that Marquis Ito strongly opposed the regulation of the Educational Department, which prohibited religious teaching in any of the schools, so that these restrictions have now been practically removed, and the result of the discussion will probably be a greater interest in the study of the Bible than before.

That Japan is progressive is further shown by the law passed by the last Diet, which forbids the use of tobacco by persons under twenty years of age. This regulation will likely be of much benefit, because the use of tobacco has been so universal that it has been a serious injury to the youth of the country. That such a law has been enacted is an evidence that the Japanese are wide awake to the welfare of their people, and determined to remove

EVERY HINDRANCE TO THEIR PROGRESS.

But the most remarkable and important item of progress is a recent enactment of the Department of Home Affairs, whereby freedom of action is secured to such women as have entered upon a life of shame. Hitherto the letter of the law and the practice were quite at variance; and it was ascertained by some of the missionaries and native Christians that restraint was being employed to such an extent that the whole system was practically a sort of slavery. It was proved that, however great was the desire of a girl to abandon a career of vice, there were so many obstacles in the way that she was absolutely precluded from asserting her independence, or even communicating with those who might assist her to do so.

By the new ordinance, any person placing obstacles in the way of a woman who desires to apply for a release shall be liable to a fine of 25 yen (£2 10s.) or to twenty-five days' imprisonment; and a woman need only present herself at the nearest police office and make her application to obtain her freedom. It is said that the effect of the new legislation, and of the liberty thereby conferred on the inmates of houses of ill-fame, will be nearly to BREAK UP THE SYSTEM.

Fifty thousand persons will thus be enabled, whenever they choose, to abandon the wretched lives that they have hitherto been leading. They are already leaving in such numbers that their employers are in despair and have made most earnest efforts to get the enactment modified or rescinded. But the step has been taken, and there is no possibility of going back now.

The recent outbreak in China has brought Japan to the front; and it is the uniform testimony of all concerned that she has performed her part with such credit and success as to entitle her to the highest measure of gratitude and esteem. A writer on the subject has truly said, "Nothing has been more impressive in the late military and political action of the various powers in China than

THE PART TAKEN BY JAPAN.

We can use no other word than to call it magnificent. She has stood side by side with the great nations of the Western world, prompt to do her part, bold without arrogance, quick, but not heady, while her soldiers have been brave and steadfast and her generals able and resourceful. Altogether her bearing has been worthy of a great nation."

It is thus demonstrated beyond all question that, in the future history of the East, Japan is destined to take a prominent part. It is then a question of the greatest importance what is to be her policy in the conduct of her own government, and also in her intercourse with other powers. We are glad to believe that Japan will stand side by side with Christian nations for the extension of that which is noblest and best. H. Loomis.

"Miss Leigh's" Homes.

THE friends who so kindly expressed their sympathy with me in the summons served upon me personally for a tax (pour la Culte de Religion) amounting to 23,000frs—nearly £1,000—with a threat if not paid to sell by auction our Home, 77, Avenue Wagram, Paris, which, since its foundation, December 20, 1872, has received, boarded, and otherwise helped over 11,000 of our English and American sisters in Paris, will join in our humble thanksgiving to Almighty God, who alone can order and rule the wills and affections of sinful men, that this tax—levied because of morning and evening prayer in our four Homes—has been remitted.

This, we believe, is owing to the prayer sent up and the effort made by our old and true friend and director in Paris, Dr. J. T. B. Sewell, Solicitor to the British Embassy. Dr. Sewell, as usual, has given his services—which means hours of serious, tactful labour in replying to the volumes of evidence sent by the French authorities, necessitating an interpreter for the technical terms, and research into laws of which none of us were cognisant.

Having, with God's grace, acquired a victory which we trust may be lasting, and leaving us the privilege of our family prayer undisturbed, we must now pay the fees of the French avocat and interpreter, amounting to upwards of £40.

Persecution in Portugal.

THE Evangelical Alliance reports that early last month, the representatives of the five principal Protestant congregations in Oporto were summoned to the presence of the Judge of the Criminal Court, who ordered them to close their various places of worship. These were two Episcopal, one Presbyterian, one Independent, and the Methodist. The brethren thus called upon stated their conscientious objections to the order, and left the Judge with the understanding that they would go on just the same, as they had broken no law.

However, they were again summoned, the Methodist congregation being now represented by its newly-appointed minister, who, being an Englishman, may have shown the authorities that matters were getting a little complicated. However that may be, the Judge was represented by two auxiliary judges, who spoke very roughly, and threatened to persecute the brethren "to the infinite." "But we have another Infinite," answered one of them, and they left resolved to stand their ground. The next evening the Presbyterian congregation was forcibly dissolved by the police.

A later communication says: "The building of the Presbyterian Church is British property, so that probably a point has been raised by the action of the police. The police not succeeding in rousing resistance have nevertheless continued in their action, having since stopped seven or eight meetings. In one case only did they arrest a preacher (a Portuguese), but let him go as soon as the doors were closed. The persecution has been brought about by the dignitaries of the Romish Church."

The Evangelical Alliance is bringing this matter under the consideration of the Foreign Office, and further persecution is unlikely.

Poor French Protestants.

THE members of the Protestant Church of St. Voy, Haute-Loire (Eglise Réformée de France), are descendants of the Huguenots; they have remained true to the faith of their fathers. Some of them are great-grandsons of men burned at the stake for conscience sake.

Their place of worship, a large building seating over 2,000 people, is so dilapidated that it must now be thoroughly renovated. This is to cost £400. The congregation consists chiefly of peasants, living on their own little plots of ground. They are over 3,000ft. above sea-level, the soil is very poor, the winter long and severe, and their meagre crops are often destroyed by hail. Many of them therefore, have hard work to make both ends meet. They are contributing generously towards the renovation fund, but, having done all that lies in their power, they are obliged to seek outside help. Communications may be addressed to Monsieur le pasteur Auguste Berthe, c.o. W. Green, Esq., Moorlands, Bickley, Kent.

Work among Arab Students.

IN the course of a recent communication, Mr. Arthur V. Liley, 10, Rue de la Medressa Es Slimania, Tunis, writes:—"The Arab students who have come from all parts of the regency of Tunis to study in the Moslem college here are still fanatical. One evening several came into the Bible Depôt, when I had the privilege of preaching to them. While speaking of the fall of man, &c., I noticed one young fellow was constantly repeating quotations from the Koran into his companion's ears. When I sought to impress upon them the need of repentance and faith in Christ for salvation, these two began to object. One student affirmed that Mohammed would intercede for him in the day of judgment. When shown from the Koran that Mohammed was called upon to repent and seek pardon, the student endeavoured to get out of his difficulty by saying that no such words were to be found in the Koran, and my copy was a false one.

"I am glad to be able to say that good numbers are coming to the evening meetings, also errand boys and shoeblacks to the classes. These need much prayer, for their minds are very dark. The first English vessel of the winter season is now in port, and I have visited the men."

The Bethesda Mission, Portsmouth, continues its aggressive evangelistic work with many cheering results. The agencies of this organization, varied and numerous, tend in one direction—to take the Gospel to the working classes and poor of the borough. To this end five mission halls and six smaller places for meetings are maintained, house-to-house visitation is conducted for reading, expounding, and distributing the Word of God; assistance is rendered to the deserving poor and sick, who, through poverty, are unable to procure the means necessary for their recovery. The superintendent is Commander B. H. Key, R.N., 67 Victoria Road, N., Southsea.

The Indian Famine.

A GRAVE OUTLOOK.

SERIOUS news has arrived from India. In the course of a dispatch to the Secretary for India, the Viceroy says: "In the Guzerat, Deccan, and Karnatak districts of Bombay, through the early cessation of the monsoon in September and the absence of rain, crop prospects are bad, and serious distress expected between now and August; relief measures will be required, and expenditure estimated at one crore during the next financial year, besides large loss of revenue. Number on relief works not increasing radidly at present, but will when the harvest is completed. The affected area also includes Baroda and part of Hyderabad."

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

Mrs. Flora M. Hewlett writes from Shanti Kothi, Benares: "There is a great deal of distress for want of clothing this cold season, as the poor, famine-stricken ones had to sell all they possessed to buy food. The kind contributions of your readers have helped me to relieve many poor sufferers."

Dr. Margaret MacKellar, of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission, Neemuch, Central India, writes:—"We have just passed on to our missionary in Ruttam, over seventy boys to be trained in industrial work. We have 160 girls still with us. Our missionary in the Bhil district says that the outlook is very black for the poor Bhils, as little or no rain fell there."

Dr. James Shepherd, of the U.F. Church of Scotland Mission, Udarpur, Rajputana, writes: "We still see the results of the famine among us in shattered constitutions, which cannot bear up against the strain of the fever epidemic which has come upon us. Our mortality is still lamentably great. I wish you could see the grateful faces of those sufferers who have benefited by the timely gifts of your readers."

From the Zenana Training Home, 2, Phayre Road, Poona, Miss Soonderbai H. Powar writes: "I have thirty girls and two widow women. They are all improving in every way, getting on nicely with their studies, and most of all with their Bible lessons. They are learning the love of Jesus and take great delight in the Word of God. Pray for them that they may be instruments in his hand to win souls for Jesus."

"Many of the poorer people," says Rev. G. W. Blair, of the Irish Presbyterian Mission, Johad, Panch Mahals, "are obliged to subsist on sowra, which is merely the seed of a grass growing in the jungle, and contains

BUT LITTLE NOURISHMENT.

When this seed is exhausted, many will have no means of subsistence. In an adjoining native state, I learn that there are 5,000 people who have nothing but sowra to live on."

Mrs. M. Augusta Haig writes from the Christian Literature Society, Ahmednagar, Bombay: "We thank your readers very heartily for their generous help. Our list of boys still numbers about 100. We have provided them with new suits of unbleached calico, costing a little under one rupee the suit. A coarse blanket or any covering for the night is now much needed. Lady Northcote, the Governor's wife, has visited the poor women in their homes; they were delighted with her sympathy. Lord and Lady Northcote have been generous contributors to famine relief funds."

Rev. Albert Norton writes from Dhond, Poona:—"In behalf of our 530 orphan boys, I thank your readers for their help, most heartily. The famine continues. Jowari and bajree, the two millet grains grown in this section, are not yet down anywhere near the normal price, though they are 50 per cent. cheaper than during last hot season, and that is a great mercy to our poor villagers in their extreme poverty. We have been able to give work to hundreds of these poor people, all these weary months, preparing buildings, &c., for the home and school of our large family of promising lads."

Rev. Dennis Osborne sends (Poona, January 18) an account of an interview with Lord Curzon on returning to India, in the course of which his lordship expressed his warm approval of the correct setting forth which Mr. Osborne had given in England of the condition of things in India and of the action of the Government. His Excellency went on to describe the acute famine conditions which still continued in the south of Poona (chiefly in the districts of Sholapore, Belgaum, and Bellary). These would, he believed, continue for some time, even if they did not increase, there being 180,000 persons in receipt of relief in the region at that time.

From Kherwara, Rajputana, Rev. Edward P. Herbert (C.M.S.) writes: "It is, alas, too true that hundreds of thousands of the Bhils and other hill men died in our neighbourhood of hunger and disease, consequent on the drought during the last twelve months; and the sight of dead and dying men, women, and children, with scarcely a rag to cover them, and with all their bones horribly protruding, for years to come. Most distressing, too, was the mortality amongst the 6,000 (and sometimes 9,000) people whom our Mission fed twice daily. They were too far gone when they staggered to our schools, and dysentery, scurvy and cholera, killed them by the score.

WILL BE AN AWFUL MEMORY

"I will not dwell on the horrors, only I would remind your readers that we need most earnest prayer for the remnant of orphans and the ruined families that are left. There is, thank God, an abundant harvest in a great part of India, but on the borders of Rajputana and Guzerat there was a scanty rainfall, and we fear famine will reappear in February.

"The mission schoolboys were our cheerful and active helpers in feeding the people and checking the disorder among starving newcomers, and they sang the Gospel while the baskets of food were being brought."

The Gospel in Brazil.

IN a recent communication, Mr. Reginald J. Young, Largo da Liberdade 43, Sao Paolo, speaks of the "crying need" for the Gospel throughout Brazil. "We could put to work a couple of dozen good men in this city. This we expect to do, but they must come from the unconverted masses around us. We are in the heart of Roman idolatry, and our expectations are more than realized already in many evidences of conversion—not only conversion from Romanism to Protestantism, but from sin to righteousness, from darkness to light. Brazil has never seen such days. There is a great work to be done in S. Paolo, and God will convert Brazilians and Italians here, who can be trained for all parts of this great country. Our two brethren are here with us, and are doing excellent work. Between the four of us we have made over 700 visits this month. We have presented some phase of Gospel truth where the people would listen, and this visiting has told upon our meetings. We believe that inside of two years an independent work will be established here, that will support its own minister and other labourers."

St. John's College, Jaffna, is the oldest Church of England College in Ceylon. Nominally it is a first-in-arts college, that is, one in which the students may read half way through their B.A. course. But at present the F.A. department is in abeyance. Twelve months ago the roof of the main building fell in, rendering it impossible to conduct the high school department. The walls of the dormitory are in a sorry state, and moreover on bad foundations. When the work of rebuilding is finished the accommodation will be somewhat less than it was before, whereas the number of students is certain to increase. Rev. Jacob Thompson, the Principal, in the course of an appeal, says: "In the College, even in its present state, we have 288 boys, of whom 210 are high-caste Hindus, and all these are under regular systematic Bible instruction and surrounded by Christian influence. All our masters are Christians. For R8,000, or a little under £550, I can complete the main building, upon which a good deal of work has been already done, rebuild the dormitory walls, which are threatening to fall, and supply good furniture throughout. St. John's College will then, by the grace of God, be able to fulfil its mission to the Christians and heathen of this neighbourhood."

Soldiers in Egypt.

THE Russel Soldiers' Home and Gordon Hall at Cairo was recently opened by Major-General the Hon. R. A. J. Talbot, who commands the Army of Occupation in Egypt. The Home was formerly the Alhambra Music Hall, and later was used as a factory until purchased by Mrs. Todd Osborne on behalf of the trustees. The arrangements are in every sense complete for the comfort and convenience of troops. On the ground floor of the building is a corridor, having on one side a large bar and coffee and tea room. On the opposite side are situated the reading-room, superintendent's room and library, lavatories, bath-rooms, &c. Private apartments, a prayer room and men's bedrooms are provided, and the institution is intended to be a home for the British soldier in Egypt, where he will be under Christian influences. In the Gordon Hall there is seating accommodation for 700, and it was here that the opening ceremony took place amid many tokens of widespread interest. The entire cost of the Home will amount to over £8,000. Mrs. Todd Osborne may be addressed, Rysland, Newton-Mearns, N.B.

Nova Scotian Devastation.

WE were visited on October 11 last by the worst gale within living memory. Churches, houses, barns, stores, boats and vessels were blown down, and wholly or partially destroyed. Among the rest, three of my churches suffered. One at Tor Bay, a new building, which had only been used for Divine service for eight months, was blown completely over, and wrecked. Another at Cole Harbour was blown thirteen feet, the chancel torn off and destroyed, and the floor badly damaged. The third, at Manchester, was blown bodily ten feet, and the whole floor severely damaged.

Most of our colonial churches are built of wood, and therefore have not the stability of stone or brick structures, nor do they cost as much. The people are mostly fisherfolk. They have set to work to repair what they can of the damage done. Most of them have lost in one way or another—some of them, their all.

The cost of repairing and restoring these churches will be about £175. I pray that before our severe winter sets in we may have them ready for use, so that our poor people may enjoy the blessing of once more worshipping in the house of prayer.

Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., Paris.

THE annual meeting of the Anglo-American Y.M.C.A. in Paris was held on January 14. Rev. Dr. E. G. Thurber presided, and among those present were Revs. G. W. Davis, J. A. Milne, G. Whelpton, and many other friends.

The annual report, presented by the secretary, contains accounts of good work achieved by the Association during the past year. It also gives the testimony of many young men, English and American, who have received benefit from the Association during their stay in Paris.

Mr. J. H. Putterill, of Exeter Hall, gave an interesting account of the Y.M.C.A. movement generally, and went on to speak in high terms of the efforts of the Paris Branch in providing a safe place of resort, and a "Home from Home," for the English-speaking young men in Paris. In order to carry out the scheme now in hand for the extension of the existing premises, £3,000 is needed, of which sum £630 has been obtained.

Sailors' Rests in Italy.—Mr. Stephen Burrowes reports that, after a long stay in Scotland, Mrs. Burrowes now finds herself much improved in health, and is active in the work at Naples. From the new report it appears that the seven colporteurs and lady helpers have distributed during the year nearly 3,000 copies of the Scriptures, and 26,180 papers and tracts, on board British ships and yachts. One of the men found the steward and mate of a steamer engaged in an argument on which appeal was made to the Bible, but no copy could be found on board. Fortunately the colporteur was able to supply all hands with copies. An engineer received a New Testament, and on his next visit asked for a Bible. Later he wrote telling of his conversion, and of his desire to spread the Word among his shipmates. The treasurer for this work is Mr. S. J. Alexander, Posilipo, Weston-super-Mare.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, February 10. Ezekiel xxxviii.

EXPOSITORS have greatly differed as to the interpretation of this portion of Ezekiel's prophecy. Some have given it a general interpretation, understanding it as a description of the final scene of the great conflict which has always been in process between the kingdoms of God and of Satan in the world, and which is destined to end in the supremacy of our Lord. But the particulars, both of names and places, are given with so much minuteness and particularity, that we feel bound to take the whole prediction in its most literal significance.

The names should be compared with Gen. x., and belong to the nations dwelling north of the Caucasus. Rosh is surely Russia; Meshech, Moscow; Tubal, Tobolsk. These nations come like a storm to cover the chosen land—the land of unwalled villages. This prophecy has not been fulfilled, so far as we know. There has been no great invasion of Palestine from the north, "as a cloud to cover the land." We, therefore, believe that it is yet to be accomplished in the latter days (v. 16). And it is interesting to notice that the opponents of this great northern confederacy will be composed in part of the merchants of Tarshish, which has always stood for the western nations. It has, therefore, been supposed by students of prophecy that this is an anticipation of some great war yet on the horizon of the future, between the vast Russian Empire and Western States, out of which the independence of Palestine from Turkish domination may issue. Whether that be so or not, we must leave for the evolution of history, content with the assurance of v. 23, that God will magnify Himself in the eyes of many nations.

MONDAY, February 11. Ezekiel xxxix.

This is a terrible chapter. The overthrow of the invader whose assault upon Palestine was described in the previous chapter, is portrayed in terrible words. The devastating hosts fall upon the mountains of Israel, and their remains are given to the ravenous birds and the beasts of the field. The weapons of war and armour take years to destroy, and the burial of the dead bodies tasks the resources of the country (4-10).

What precious promises they are, with which the chapter closes! God will bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel. Their shame shall be forgotten; their trespasses shall be forgiven, their fears shall be at an end. The time of restoration to their land will be rendered memorable by the pouring out of the Divine Spirit. So all Israel shall be saved.

We may apply this to ourselves. Probably some of us have been taken into captivity, and have been raided by the incursions of spiritual foes. But God cannot leave us permanently to live on the low levels to which we have been reduced. His holy name has been named upon us, and He must be jealous for that; his character has been involved with ours, and He cannot allow it to be brought into contempt. Therefore He will gather us again out of our enemy's lands, and bring us again, and sanctify Himself in us. Is God sanctified in you? Do men feel a growing reverence for his holiness, purity, and beauty as they come in contact with you? God will have his way. If not with our willing acquiescence, then in spite of it. If you are backsliding, be sure that every step you take away from God will have to be retraced with tears and bitter pain.

TUESDAY, February 12. Ezekiel xl.

For five-and-twenty years, Ezekiel had dwelt with the rest of the exiles in captivity. But never for a moment had he forgotten the beloved city, and the great episodes of its destruction were carefully commemorated by him. In one of these, the visions of God were opened to him. His predictions had begun with a vision of God withdrawing from the temple, which was afterwards destroyed, whilst Jerusalem was laid in ruins, the land desolated, the prince dethroned, and the people carried into captivity; and they now close with a further vision, in which the Temple is restored, Jehovah returns, the worship is renewed, the royal throne is set up, and the land is divided afresh.

It is very difficult to interpret these words. It might almost appear as though the Temple of Solomon was to be restored in a more magnificent form than ever, and that there was to be a re-establishment of the offerings and the priests. This, however, can hardly be, for it would be a denial of the sufficiency of Christ's work. It could not be spoken of as having finished the Mosaic institutions if these are to be restored. On the whole, it seems to us as though these chapters must be understood allegorically. May it not be a fair dream of what the patriot-prophet desired for the Holy Temple, a vision of something which would satisfy his sublimest conceptions, which is not to be realized in material form, but as the temple of spiritual worship, entered by all holy souls, of every nation and kindred, moored in mid-heaven, for priests and singers, for workers and worshippers alike? (44-46). Many, however, understand it literally, and we do not speak with certainty.

WEDNESDAY, February 13. Ezekiel xli.

How inadequate is human symbolism to set forth the thoughts of God! We read this chapter, with its minute descriptions of doors, windows, chambers, walls, but only form an utterly unworthy conception of the palace of marble, glistening in the Oriental light, which rose before the Spirit-filled mind of Ezekiel. Words are poor things at the best. They break down as symbols of thought. And if human language fails to convey the perfect representation of Ezekiel's raptured vision, how much more must they succumb when we use them to describe spiritual mysteries! They strike the ear, but give no true knowledge until the Spirit of God opens our eyes to see, and our hearts to understand.

Cherubim and palm-trees, the loftiest creations of Heaven, and the most graceful creations of earth, are called in to tell in pictures what words have failed to convey. All created things are symbols of Divine thoughts. Happy is he who has got the secret of translating God's hidden meanings. There is a book called the Language of Flowers. Let it be understood, however, that all things have a language. There are many voices in the world, and not one of them is without signification; many forms, but not one without its symbolic intention. To a pure heart, like that which beat in the breast of Christ, all creation speaks, everything bears some Divine meaning, everything may be pressed into the Divine service.

THURSDAY, February 14. Ezekiel xlii.

In every life there should be a "separate place" (xli. 12, xlii. 1, 13), into which no ordinary foot should intrude, set apart for God. Into this thou and I should enter day by day, and hold fellowship with Him undisturbed, save as the cry of the world follows us, and incites us to more eager intercession. Each separate place should have its north and south chambers in which we, his priests, who "approach unto the Lord," shall eat the most holy things. We must not only worship, but obtain nourishment. Our spiritual strength must be built up (v. 13). The northern looks toward storm; we must obtain spiritual strength to meet the sweeping hurricane. The southern looks toward sunshine and summer; and we must obtain spiritual strength to sustain us amid the glare of prosperity.

To all of us the time comes when we have to leave the Holy Place for the outer court; under the old dispensation, the priests laid aside the garments wherein they had ministered, putting on other garments, before they entered the place which pertained to the people (v. 14). It is not thus with us. We must always be in the Spirit, always wear our holy garments, always remember that we are kings and priests unto God. To us all times and places are the same. Whatever is special is intended to level up the remainder to its own standard.

A reed is about twelve feet. Thus 500 of these would make 6,000 feet, or more than a mile. This would give a circumference of nearly five miles, far exceeding the dimensions even of the city. This in itself seems to show that the prophecy is a dream in marble, a vision of beauty, a song that surpasses words.

FRIDAY, February 15. Ezekiel xliii.

The glory of the God of Israel had departed, as we remember in the earlier parts of this book. By slow degrees it had gone further and further away, but now there was the sound as of water falling in terraced gardens at evening. And from the direction in which He had retired, He returned, and "the earth shined with his glory." What wonder that the prophet fell upon his face. It was as though God had come to dedicate the temple by his mysterious and ineffable presence.

Many a time may the holy soul hear God speaking to him out of the house. And it becomes us, whenever we come into the house of God, to listen for that Divine utterance which is always identified with the presence of the Divine Man. "The Man stood by me." With us, as with Israel, the first effect of the advent of God amid his people, is that they may be ashamed of their iniquities. The work of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost became immediately apparent, as the people cried out: "What must we do?" Well may we be ashamed of our iniquities, and close upon that shame there comes the vision of God's programme of the pattern which He shows in the Mount of the Unseen and Eternal (v. 11).

How good it is to read that the limit of the house was holy. Would it not be well to take this as the motto for every home? I would like to suggest to those who may be building their homes, that v. 12 should be engraven upon the walls of the vestibule. Above all, let it be written in the hearts of all Christians, that, from the drawing-room to the kitchen, in bedroom and parlour, there should be a very atmosphere of the Presence of God.

SATURDAY, February 16. Ezekiel xliv.

The earlier verses of this chapter remind us of the Pope's action in closing the sacred door at St. Peter's, which is only opened once in the century. But, ah, how great the difference between the fallible and aged pontiff and the living Christ, the Prince who shall come ere long by the way of the east. Born of the Virgin Mary, sitting on a colt on which no man ever sat, lying in a grave in which no man had lain before, it is meet that He should come by a gate open to no man else. Such a gate should admit Him into thy heart—reserved for Him alone.

In the section which opens from v. 4, the officers of God's house are commanded to put away from among them all foreigners and strangers, and to degrade from their own body those who had profaned themselves. A remarkable distinction is made in v. 9, "uncircumcised in heart, and uncircumcised in flesh." There is evidently a distinction intended between those who are destitute of internal purity and those who are careless of external observance. It is not enough to be pure and holy. God asks that we should observe the holy ordinances and rites of our religion. The Levites had gone away from God through the sin of the people, and they had led the House of Israel still further into iniquity; therefore they could not realize their highest function (v. 13), but by Divine mercy they were allowed still an inferior office. If God cannot do the best for us, He will do the best we will permit.

It is beautiful to meet again that delightful assurance that God's children need no possession because He is their inheritance. The same pertains to all who have been called to minister in holy things in the present dispensation. Let them not be careful and troubled about money. God will see to them. He will provide all that is necessary for them and theirs, if only they will trust Him.

The Simultaneous Mission.

MEETINGS IN LONDON.

THE Metropolitan meetings in connection with the Simultaneous Mission of the Free Churches have undoubtedly made a deep impression upon the community. Probably not within living memory have the churches been so continuously filled, night after—nightto some extent by such as seldom attend a place of worship, and who are generally credited with viewing the Gospel with dislike if not with absolute hostility.

The measures adopted for arresting the attention of the public have thus met with a gratifying and re-assuring measure of success. Spiritual stimulus has come, in the first instance, to the churches. There has been a manifest hungering and thirsting after righteousness on the part of God's people. Many have been filled afresh with a yearning desire for the evangelization of the crowds who lie outside the pale of church influences.

Our readers will chiefly be concerned, however, with the extent to which the Mission has realized its aim in bringing the unconverted in penitence to the Saviour. We are glad to learn, not only from the headquarters of the movement, but from the churches themselves in all parts of London, that very many are rejoicing in the knowledge that "old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

We think that no part of the Mission, at least in the North of London, has been more blessed than the morning Bible readings by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, and the evening Gospel addresses by Rev. J. H. Jowett, at Ferme Park Chapel, Crouch End. Mr. Jowett might, if he were so led, exercise a wide and influential ministry among young men. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan's Mission at East Finchley, too, was remarkably successful.

In several localities some measure of discouragement and disappointment was felt on account of the few manifestations of anxiety or of conversion. The addresses of Gipsy Smith led every evening to scores flocking to the inquiry rooms. Those of Mr. Jowett were of a different character, and while they were heard with evident and deep feeling, no outward demonstration was invited; but many letters, revealing the secret of wasted, broken and guilty lives, were written to the missioner. And as many of these were anonymous, the cases, as stated, were dealt with in subsequent evenings, especially on Saturday night.

INTERVIEW WITH REV. THOS. LAW.

In order to obtain the latest particulars as to the results of the Mission, a member of our staff interviewed Rev. Thos. Law at the Memorial Hall on Monday last.

"The interest that has been aroused in spiritual matters is remarkable," said Mr. Law, in response to a question from our representative, "and I am glad to report cheering tidings from all parts of London as to the results of the Mission. Last night at the Metropolitan Tabernacle the building was packed long before the meeting was timed to commence, while a dense crowd filled the schoolroom also, and yet hundreds of people were turned away. At the City Temple, I found Holborn Viaduct blocked, many being unable to get near the doors. At not one centre, so far as I am aware, has the Mission failed."

"Was the preaching as evangelistic in character as the occasion demanded?"

"Emphatically so. The Mission has discovered many preachers with and it is evident that in the regular ministry we have a host of men with a passion and capacity for soul-winning."

"Has there been a general response to the missioners' appeals?"

"Yes. Whether the undecided were invited to enter an inquiry room or not, there was a willingness—nay, anxiety—to hear the Gospel, and very many have yielded to the Saviour. At the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Gipsy Smith used the inquiry room, and over 1,200 persons had passed through, up to Sunday last. At Ferme Park, Mr. Jowett used special cards, which, with pencils, were placed in the pews. Those who accepted Christ, were asked to write their name and address on the card, and a large number did so. We have also news of many who made instant decision during the preaching. I may be allowed to say how much we rejoice in all these signs of Divine blessing. The Mission has surely banished any idea that the Free Churches were wanting in loyalty to the foundation truths of the Gospel."

"Do you consider that the masses of people outside the churches have been attracted?"

"Perhaps the Mission has been most fruitful in bringing in of our Sunday schools, and also the people who have been sitting under our ministry for years without becoming converted. At the same time, we have had a very large number of outsiders, and many of them have found the way of life."

REV. JOHN McNEILL.

"What steps will be taken to conserve the spiritual results?"

"That is, of course, the great question of the moment, and I am glad to say that our organization is strong in its arrangements to keep hold of the converts, and build them up in the truth. Each individual is being linked on to one of the Free Churches, except, of course, those who belong to the Church of England. In such cases we are communicating with the clergymen of that church with which they have been associated. It has been a pleasure to undertake this work, and it enables us to show that the Mission is not an effort to make Nonconformists; our aim is simply to win souls. I should add that we hope the Councils will give each convert a copy of the instructive pamphlet by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, entitled 'All Things New.' Then, there is to be probably at the City Temple, on February 14, at which Gipsy Smith and other missioners will speak."

"Do you consider that the Mission has any great lesson for the Free Churches?"

"It has many. It has already borne rich fruit in bringing more persuasiveness into our sermons, and will continue to do so. The great aim of preaching is, or should be to save sinners. Then it has taught us, more than ever, the value of united effort in evangelizing the people, and of the weakness that follows disunion. The Conference of Missioners, held during the week at Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Rev. F. B. Meyer, was full of instruction. The Mission has also demonstrated, in my opinion that, in order to maintain evangelistic work among the masses, we must use buildings other than churches. I propose that in each important centre throughout the country, the Free Churches should unite on Sunday evenings, subsequent to their own services, for a great evangelistic meeting in a large theatre or public hall. I hope this idea will be realized at the close of the present Mission."

In conclusion, Mr. Law spoke hopefully of the prospects of the Mission in the provincial towns (February 16-26), and in the villages (March 2-6).

REV. JOHN McNEILL'S MEETINGS.

The meetings in the City Temple, at which Rev. John McNeill has proclaimed the Gospel day by day, have been largely attended. On Tuesday morning last week he discoursed on Zacchæus, driving home the lesson that, when Christ is passing by, we must use the opportunity of being saved.

Children's voices in holy song are a fitting accompaniment to the glorious Gospel; and the presence of a youthful choir from the Stockwell Orphanage has been a pleasing feature of Rev. John McNeill's afternoon meeting in Exeter Hall. In his own vivid way, Mr. McNeill amplified the record of Luke v. 27 to 32—Jesus going through the city amid busy men. This Mission gives the Saviour opportunity to do over again, and with ex-cathedrâ utterances," some of the works done in the days of his flesh; looking in upon a man in his office, and, by a touch of the Spirit, bringing over him the powers of eternity. The seeking of souls was Christ's "ruling passion;" and even when his pierced hands and feet could not go forth upon errands of mercy, his heart went out to the man who hung at his side. Let us have some spontaneity, surprising the devil by a raid even when his courts are thronged by the devotees of Mammon. Christ's conduct was perfectly natural; and it must appear to Him simply ghastly when we move through seas of sinners, without having a spark of his spirit in us. It was a great wrench; but, in his heart, Levi "left all" before there was a movement of his body. The feast he made indicated a joyful farewell to the flesh.

"AT UNCANONICAL HOURS

The large number present at the evening service in the City Temple fully justified the expression of Mr. McNeill's delight at the success which has crowned the experiment of holding evangelistic meetings there on week nights. This time the address dealt with the second man of the three whose portraits are given in Luke ix. Verses 59 and 60 deal with the characteristics and disposition of the man who would bury his father before following the Lord; the one who needs to move him. He has a plausible excuse. The devil will allow you to fill your soul with noble thoughts and sentiments about surrender to Christ another day, if he may only keep salvation out of the present hour. That will serve, as well as the greatest wickedness on your part, to push you past a waiting Saviour to the tomb beyond. Putting Christ first, we shall break no engagement that is worth keeping, and lose no earthly friendship that is worth keeping. He is no kill-joy, but a harmonizer and uniter of all the essential elements of human life. There was no real harshness on his part. He suffered, as the preacher had done, from being reported; for no cold paper and print can do justice to look and tone. The world offered the man a grave-digger's shovel; but the Lord meets him and offers the resurrection trumpet to call men from the graves of worldliness, mere money-making, materialism, and the whited sepulchres of pretence or mere form in religion, that they may walk in newness of life as truly as Lazarus did.

Wednesday.

On Wednesday midday, in the City Temple, the story of Zacchæus was continued. Jesus walks our streets. Compel your soul to come up to ear-gate and eye-gate; He may speak to you in the crowd. Then may you, like Zacchæus, receive Him joyfully; indeed, you cannot do it in any other way.

Interest maintained and growing was evidenced by the large audience at Exeter Hall in the afternoon. Mr. McNeill spoke for awhile about Doubting Thomas (John xx. 24, 25). His is the story of

AN ECLIPSE AND ITS LIFTING.

"Thomas, we have seen Him!" say the other disciples; but, as their faces broaden and brighten, his lengthens and darkens. He was a grand soul, full of love to Jesus, and beginning ever so well; but prone to get to the dark side and dwell upon it. Because such men are full of thought and feeling, the burden of this unintelligible world presses upon them, but unfortunately, to such an extent that Divine truth seems to lose its elevating power. Great doors turn upon little hinges, and Thomas was not with the others when Jesus came. The focussing point of that gathering was—a little company expecting to meet a risen Lord face to face. If it is not that, every church and chapel is merely a Sunday club. Instead of going off by ourselves to meditate upon the dark side of things, let us get among simple-minded believers. "Honest doubters" are very scarce, and the counterfeit is sadly common. In the one case, the heart fights against doubt; in the other, unbelief finds favour. Instead of giving way to certain tendencies of the soul, wait on the Lord for a vision of Himself.

There was a splendid gathering in the City Temple at night. The preacher claimed that he was not beating Bible gold too fine by returning once more to Luke ix., in order to profit by the third man's mistake (vv. 61, 62). "Oh, this fatal off-putting!" said he. Many there be that keep

THE PAVEMENT OF HELL

(good intentions) in repair. "Suffer me first," says this man; but David puts it better, "I have set the Lord always before me." Behind the seeming hardness of Christ's saying there was a glowing heart of love. The man was under-estimating the forces at home that would keep him from coming back to Jesus. "Would you disgrace us before the elders of Israel?" the parents might say; and then would come the sneers of his brothers. Take care that you stumble not the simplest lad in your warehouse that is beginning to look Christ's way. "I would like to follow Jesus," says one; "but I am engaged to So-and-so, who sneers at the whole thing." What then? Christ first. Beware of marrying one who is not a Christian, in the hope of saving him afterwards; for the preacher had never known a successful case of that kind. If it is Christ that parts you, you are well parted; but in the preacher's own case, bold confession of the Lord led the loved one to say,

"LORD JESUS, TAKE ME TOO."

The Master was right. His is the greater love, as proved by his sacrifice; and it is infinite kindness of Him to hold us with a firm grip.

At the close of the address, some among the congregation stood up in token of decision for Christ.

Thursday.

It being Mission week, Dr. Parker gave up his usual mid-day service to Mr. McNeill, who gave a powerful address on "The axe-head that swam" (2 Kings vi.).

Decisions made, Christians quickened, and churches revived through the Mission, were the subjects of thanksgiving at the opening of the afternoon's proceedings at Exeter Hall.

"The sight that charms me most Is a sinner at the Cross," sang Mr. McAusland. "The lifting of the eclipse" in the case of Thomas (John xx. 26-29) was again the theme of an exposition by Mr. McNeill. In the City Temple at night there was a sea of upturned faces before the preacher, and the galleries were fully occupied. In urging continued effort toward the ingathering of the careless, the incredulous, and the scoffing, Mr. McNeill expressed gratitude that God's blessing with the Mission was getting wider and deeper every day. To Christ's eye, all the great assemblies form but one. A special note of praise was due for the meeting in this place last night; for, judging by letters received, there must have been a convincing work of the Spirit of God in many souls at that time. The things of eternity must have appeared very real to hearers, as the trumpet-blast of Eph. v. 14, sounded from the pulpit,

"AWAKE THOU THAT SLEEPEST, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

Friday.

Speaking at the noon meeting in the City Temple, Mr. McNeill drew further weighty lessons from the incident recorded in 2 Kings vi. When will it dawn upon broken-down men that what has happened is intended to make them feel their need of God? As the axe and its head become one instrument, so London ought to feel the dint and mark of my Christian character, of a life lived in vital fellowship with my glorious Head. "Where is the blessedness I knew?" It is where you dropped it. In such case, is humbling and bitter, but it is healing.

"BACK TO JESUS CHRIST"

"A handy compendium and directory for public and private worship" was found by the preacher at the afternoon meeting in Exeter Hall in Luke xviii. 9-14. What was wrong with the Pharisee's prayer? The Lord passed by, beheld his "devotions," and gibbeted for ever this ghastly thing of time-honoured tradition from which the living soul was entirely absent. There was no thunder, only the lightning; and the Pharisee has stood ever since, like a blasted tree upon some heath, a warning to all who throng church and chapel.

At night, a great mass of hearers filled the City Temple for the closing service of the week. Mr. McNeill took his text from Isa. xlv.

"LOOK UNTO ME, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else." It was through these words that the great soul of C. H. Spurgeon passed from death unto life. Anyone might long to come into the kingdom of God behind such a man; and Divine power is still in the words. Here is the greatest of all possible blessings, in the simplest of all possible ways, for the greatest possible number of people, on the strongest possible assurance and guarantee.

Monday.

On Monday Mr. McNeill spoke at three large meetings. At the City Temple, at noon, the preacher offered some comforting considerations to the discouraged. "There is peace, victory, and eternal glory on the side of great David's greater Son; but there is overthrow, disaster, and defeat for them that reject God's crowned Christ. Instead of locking up gloomy thoughts in your heart, breathe them into God's ear, and you shall find relief." The evening meeting in the Temple was most impressive.

REV. HUGH C. WALLACE AT FINSBURY PARK.

New Court and Finsbury Park Congregational Churches combined to form one centre. The missioner for the occasion was Rev. Hugh C. Wallace, of Burnley, and a reaping time has been experienced. At every gathering there has been a full attendance. Throughout the week the addresses of Mr. Wallace have been penetrating and practical. At New Court on Sunday evening Mr. Wallace appealed specially to young men to make a stand for Christ. The subject of his address was the Prodigal Son—the lost man. At the close the inquiry rooms were visited by numbers who were desirous of consecrating themselves to the service of Christ.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.

Night after night this week, Gipsy Smith has had, not only the happy privilege of addressing crowded audiences at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, but also the joy of seeing scores respond to the appeals that were made. At the Sunday evening service, Gipsy Smith had the story of Zacchæus for his theme, and in the course of his stirring address, related a touching item of autobiography, picturing the scene when his father one night returned to the tent a new man, gathered around him his five motherless children, and prayed for their conversion.

The first service and the after meeting were blended into one, and very few left their seats, except workers and inquirers. In a few moments, announced that the six inquiry rooms were full of seekers after Christ.

There were present on Monday night 160 converts who had been brought to Christ during one of Gipsy Smith's missions a few weeks ago at Luton. Thursday was the anniversary of the death of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, and this was the subject of touching reference by the preacher, who went on to speak on the narrative of the woman with an issue of blood. The preacher finished his address by an earnest appeal. All over the building people rose and quietly followed the workers to the inquiry rooms.

Each night Madame Annie Ryall has helped, by her impressive singing, to prepare the hearts of the people for the reception of the Word. The service of Sunday morning last and the overflow meeting in the evening were conducted by Pastor Thos. Spurgeon.

WEAVER BROTHERS AT SHOREDITCH TABERNACLE.

A large congregation was gathered for the Mission service in the Shoreditch Tabernacle on Sunday evening, affording evidence that the simple and faithful preaching of the Gospel is still attractive to great masses of the people. There was plenty of sacred song, audience and choir singing the hymns with much heartiness. Fervent prayer and praise by a member of the church bore witness to the fact that the Spirit of God had been at work in many hearts during the past week.

Mr. Bewley Weaver expressed a wish that the Mission were continuing longer than the morrow. Scores of souls had come to the Saviour there. A fine band of intelligent young men had decided for Christ. After Mr. Frank Weaver had voiced his brother spoke of the words in Heb. ii. 3, "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"

The question was pressed home upon the audience with unflagging earnestness; and the momentous truths which gather around it were made plain and enforced by familiar illustration. At the close of the address, an after-meeting was held; and many of the audience were guided into the inquiry room. Over four hundred names were registered.

REV. ROBERT WOOD AT STRATFORD.

At Stratford, E., the missioner was Rev. R. Wood, of Scarborough, and the meetings were held in the Congregational Church. Gatherings for the young were held in the Wesleyan Church, and addressed by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, and Bible readings were given by the missioner in the Presbyterian Hall. The work of preparation engaged the service of many devoted Christians, under the direction of Rev. Alex. Jeffrey, and Messrs. J. A. Morrell and A. Gray. There was much encouragement throughout the week, alike in the attendances and in the responsiveness of the people to the Gospel call. The mass meeting of men on Sunday afternoon was very large and attended by good results. It is felt, however, on all hands, that much yet remains to be done to wake up the inhabitants of this very populous district.

REV. CHARLES JOSEPH AT WOOD GREEN.

At Wood Green the fact has been specially obvious that the mission was first all one "to the churches." That a deep and practical interest had been aroused was manifest from the outset. The missioner, Rev. Charles Joseph, of Cambridge, gave close attention to instruction in Scripture truth. The addresses were of a faithful and searching character, much emphasis being placed on the need for personal work by individual helpers, the sympathetic "Gospel of the helping hand." The work being thus to a great extent of a preparatory character, the results of it cannot yet be put on record; still the sower and reaper rejoiced together, for night after night seekers after the truth found their way to the inquiry room. A spirit of earnest prayer was poured out, and large companies remained behind to wait upon God.

OTHER CENTRES.

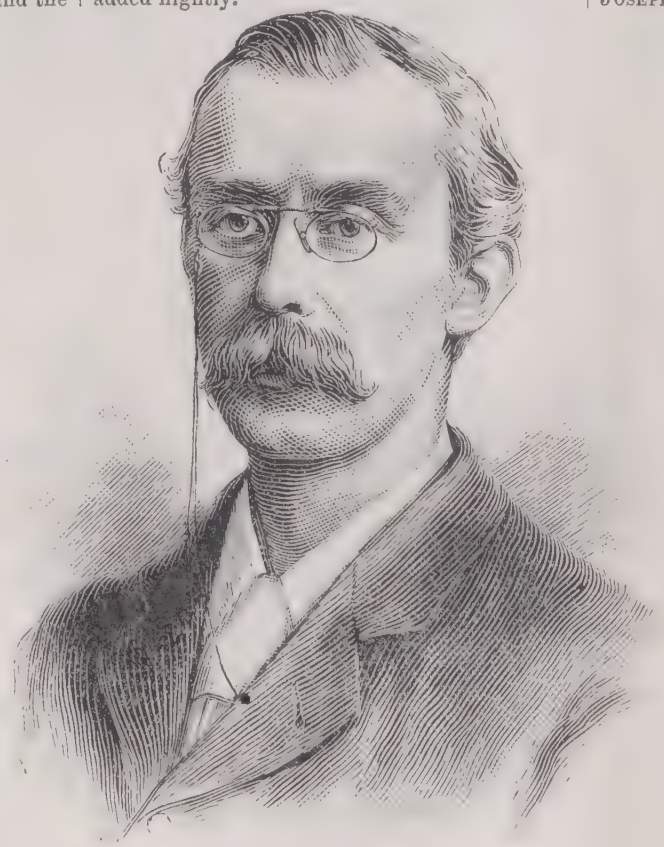
At the noon meeting of the Aldersgate Y.M.C.A. on Monday numerous testimonies were given by the evangelists of the revivals which have been experienced during the week. After a few homely remarks by his father, Gipsy Smith told of the crowds that had thronged the Metropolitan Tabernacle. For the first time during his twenty-four years of evangelistic labour he had the presence of his father during the whole of a mission. From the first service the interest had widened and deepened. On Saturday night it was estimated that after the building was filled 2,000 were turned away. In the Tabernacle vestries 1,200 people had been dealt with, and given in their names as having accepted Christ.

Mr. A. Holness spoke of the successful mission at Nunhead, conducted by Mr. Van de Venter, and where God had placed his seal upon work of his servants.

Mr. Charles Cook referred in hopeful terms to the labours of Mrs. Baeyertz at Wimbledon. The ministry of this devoted toiler has been owned of God to the salvation of many souls.

Mr. Newton Jones brought cheering tidings of the services for children at Lambeth. On the previous afternoon at the meeting he asked the teachers to rise who had had the joy of seeing their children brought to Christ, when it was touching to see the number who responded.

Mr. Charles Inglis spoke of the diffidence with which he entered upon the work at Poplar. He now had the joy of testifying to the power which had been realized at this centre. On the opening night no fewer than 120 had confessed Christ. To this number others had been added nightly.



REV. J. H. JOWETT.

From Photograph by Mr. H. J. Whitlock, Birmingham.

At Acton the missioner was Rev. J. H. Atkinson, of Liverpool, who addressed large audiences in the Central Hall, and also gave Bible readings at Churchfield Hall. The latter gatherings were rich in blessing.

Rev. Dr. Forsyth, who has been the missioner at the Presbyterian Church, Highgate, gave enthusiastic support to the cause, and toiled hard in persuading sinners. His addresses were full of evangelical truth and directness, and many of his hearers were blessed.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith (Evangelization Society) was the missioner at Arundel Square Congregational Church, Barnsbury, N. Dr. Charles Garnett (pastor) writes: "From beginning to end the services have been made a great blessing in the conversion of sinners and the quickening of believers."

Rev. Horatio Park writes:—"Fruitful meetings have been conducted in the Weybridge Congregational Church, by Rev. D. M. Cameron, London, who for eight days has been working in that place. The power of God the Holy Spirit has been very manifest, and a large number decided to serve Jesus Christ."

At West Hampstead Congregational Church, Finchley Road, Dr. G. S. Barrett, of Norwich, preached on Sunday morning last on the subject of the woman of the city, who entered Simon's house and bathed the Saviour's feet with her tears (Luke vii. 36-50). In the evening Dr. Barrett conducted an evangelistic meeting, and the Mission, which was blessed to many, closed with prayer and thanksgiving.

The unity of Free Churches of Sunningdale has been demonstrated during the mission conducted by Mr. R. S. Bradbrook. Old and young have profited by the Bible readings and evening services; the indifferent have been led to a realization of their position, and many have turned from the paths of sin to the way of life. The Baptists, Primitive Methodists, and Congregationalists have united in the campaign, and rallied to the aid and support of the missioner.

A mission to children was held at College Park Presbyterian Church, N.W. At a united meeting both the church and a large hall were filled, while the attendances each night averaged a thousand. A feature of the services was a series of Gospel addresses from the Pilgrim's Progress, given by the missioner, Rev. David Fyffe (of Harlesden Presbyterian Church), and illustrated by lime light views shown by Mr. Joseph D. Angel. At the close of the mission there were many inquirers.

Rev. Dr. Clifford's noon-day services for business men, at Bishopsgate Chapel, were full of spiritual stimulus. At the first service he gave a powerful address, dwelling on the inspiring and comforting character of the Gospel message, and proceeding to unfold some of the spiritual privileges of believers. There were many business men present, and to them Dr. Clifford made a glowing appeal, pointing out the dangers, in the rush and manifold occupations of commercial life, of neglecting the claims of God. The preacher went on to deal with the godless condition of society. During the past twenty-five years materialism has largely developed. We have made money but buried men; built a palatial fabric of ease and wealth, but entombed spiritual ideas. Dr. Clifford made fervent appeals for immediate decision for Christ, and in the final service many were affected as the preacher told of his spiritual struggles fifty years since, and his conversion in a prayer meeting. The attendances at the services largely increased during the week, and many received blessing. Mr. McAusland and Miss Ada Rose sang Gospel solos day by day with much acceptance, and Rev. T. Grear also took part.

Among recent publications bearing on the Mission is God Save the People! in which Mr. Jesse Page gives wise counsels to workers. Moral evils are scathingly dealt with, and some touching instances are given of faithful testimony by earnest Christians in humble walks of life. (6d. Partridge.) A work likely to serve a useful purpose in the campaign is Mr. W. Monro Collings' How to Get Good by Coming to the Mission. The pamphlet embodies Scriptural words of exhortation to the impenitent, and courage to doubting ones. (Book Room, "Rothesay," Avenue Road, Gosport.)

Correction.—Miss E. Lawrence is carrying on evangelistic work at Calle-Mayor, Caldas de Montbuy, Prov. of Barcelona, Spain; not at Tarragona as stated by a clerical error in our last week's issue.

"God Bless Our King!"—Rev. J. Mountain has written a hymn, entitled "God Bless Our King!" and has set it to music. Both the hymn and the tune are specially suitable for use in public services, expressive of the loyal feeling which Christian people entertain towards our gracious Sovereign and indicating the feelings of the nation on his behalf. The hymn should have a wide circulation among all Christian people. It would be eminently adapted for use also in Sunday schools, the melody of the tune being easily learned and sung. The hymn will be ready in a few days, and will be accompanied by an excellent wood-cut of the King. Price 2d., music and words; or, words only, 1s. per 100. (Morgan & Scott.)

Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel.

THE new buildings of the Mission to Jews, which is associated with the name of Rev. D. Baron, occupy an imposing position in Whitechapel Road, the chief artery of East London, and the favourite promenade of the thousands of Jews who dwell in the vicinity. Utility has been the first consideration in designing the premises, yet their appearance is marked by grace as well as simplicity. On the ground floor is for mission meetings, while on the first floor is a large room which is to be devoted to the Bible classes, which are so important a feature of the work. Higher still are class rooms and the apartments of resident workers.

The dedication services, held on Thursday last, were largely attended. In the afternoon, Mr. James E. Mathieson presided. In his opening remarks he rejoiced in the kindly treatment accorded to the Jews, in later times, in this country, by wisdom given from above, and went on to praise God for the testimony to truth which is given concerning Jesus, and for the share in that testimony of Rev. David Baron and his colleague, Rev. C. A. Schönberger.

A vivid sketch of the rise and progress of the Mission was next given by Mr. David Baron, who described the dedication, seven years ago, of the building last used. The work was commenced in order to reach the Jews who throng the great East London highway. Large numbers of them heard the Gospel, and some laid hold of Christ. From the commencement, in spite of many difficulties, there has been great spiritual prosperity. The Bible classes, in particular, have been blessed, but the close atmosphere and crowded condition of the room told upon the health of Mr. Schönberger, who conducted the gatherings. It was at first proposed to alter and improve these premises, but ultimately the present site was decided upon. The total cost was about £8,000, of which £7,500 have been received, while a further sum of £900 is required for additions. The entire house will be devoted to the Lord's service, and even the title of the mission, inscribed on the front of the building, is a "Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel."

The next speaker was Pastor James Stephens, of Highgate, who, in the course of a fervent address, described the occasion as a festival of taking possession of a gift from God. Next, Rev. S. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, offered prayer that the number of remembrancers of Israel might be increased; and Rev. D. M. Macintyre (of Glasgow, son-in-law and successor of Dr. Andrew A. Bonar) spoke of the great day in Israel when the Tabernacle was set apart for worship, when the power of God filled the house. Proceeding, Mr. Macintyre recognised the inherent and remarked on their achievements in finance, journalism, law, and politics. As an instrument in God's hands in fulfilling his purposes towards the world, the children of Israel must always be dear to us, and it is our duty to seek them out.

At the evening meeting, Mr. R. C. Morgan presided. A very graphic account of the origin and progress of the work was given by Mr. Schönberger, who adapted to the occasion the words from Psa. cxviii. "This is the day the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it." The chairman added 2 Chron. vii. 15, 16. Encouraging words were spoken by Mr. Bernard Wright, followed by Mr. F. G. Lyne, who, feeling the unhealthy atmosphere of the former house, had insisted on the necessity of another, and the present building was the result.

Mr. Gelbert, a Russian Jew, gave a useful address, and Mr. Baron explained that Mr. Gelbert and his family had, through this Mission, been brought to the knowledge of Jesus as their Messiah, and Saviour, and Lord.

Dr. Grattan Guinness was heartily welcomed as he entered towards the close of the meeting, and his words of sympathy with the Jewish people, whom he likened to a blind man carrying a lantern ("the oracles of God") to give light to others, were met with cordial response.

Mrs. Eardley's Country Homes.

THE long labours of Mrs. Eardley (née Okell) in the interests of distressed and neglected little girls have been attended with moral and spiritual results of a highly satisfactory character. Her work began in the Globe Road Home, Bethnal Green, in 1886, the expense being met, as now, by the liberality of a Christian lady.

The Country Homes, which are under the one direction with that at Globe Road, are situate respectively at Brentwood and New Barnet, both institutions affording a happy change of air and scene, and a comfortable home, to many delicate little girls who have been rescued from brutal and degrading surroundings.

The Brentwood Home, "The Firs," Brentwood, occupies a delightful position on the brow of a gentle declivity, commanding a fine view of a picturesque and wooded part of Essex. The house is capacious and healthy, and the children are a happy family indeed, a picture of HEALTH AND CHEERFULNESS.

The influence of Christian management is seen on every hand, for Mrs. Eardley's primary aim in her many-sided work is a spiritual one.

From their chubby appearance, one would by no means guess that some of these blithe little children have come from the squalid homes of East London drunkards, but such is the case. One is the tiny daughter of a poor slave to strong drink who had left her home, and remained away for two days on a drinking bout, taking her two children with her. The husband, half-distracted, searched hither and thither, but in vain. At last, in descending a dark staircase, he heard a curious noise, as of rats, in a disused coal cellar, and on opening the door he found the two children, more dead than alive. "Oh, daddy," said one of the little sufferers, "I'se so hungry." The father placed one of the two with Mrs. Eardley, and the child is making good progress. The mother, at the time of the occurrence, was but twenty-eight years of age, but had served more than thirty terms of imprisonment. This is but one instance of very many which go to illustrate the terrible effects of drunkenness in lower life. Seven out of ten cases which come to Mrs. Eardley are the outcome of indulgence in this awful vice.

One girl in East London, who felt the degradation of her inebriate mother very keenly, refused, on one occasion, to fetch drink when ordered to do so. "If you don't," said the mother,

"I'LL THROW YOU DOWNSTAIRS."

Still the girl held out, and her inhuman parent flung her down a flight of stairs, and then ran down and trampled her under foot. The father removed the child, unknown to his wife, and sheltered her with Mrs. Eardley.

A sound education is given to the children, and they receive an excellent training, as they grow older, in all branches of domestic service. The influence of the institution has had its effect, too, in awakening desires to labour for the Master, and some of the former inmates are now actively occupied, in home or foreign mission work.

Mrs. Eardley has strong faith in the conversion of children, and feels that the efforts put forth result in comparative failure unless her young charges come to know the Lord. Since the inception of the work, between 700 and 800 girls have been received and passed through to situations.

The institution exercises a spiritual influence beyond that of its immediate home circle. On Friday evenings a prayer meeting is held, open to all comers, and during the summer months, in a tent erected on the lawn, meetings have been held, in which a number of hearers have been led to seek the Saviour.

St. John's Training School.

AMONG old-established institutions for the education of young girls, St. John's Training School, Westbourne Park, W., holds a high reputation for the Christian character of its administration and the excellence of the education which is imparted. The school owes its inception to the practical philanthropy of the late Dowager Lady Kinnaird.

With changing social conditions, and the development of educational systems, the scope of the school has been enlarged from time to time until, at the present time, the needs of many classes of the community are met. Some children are received at an early age, and their complete education is undertaken; others who have received their course of teaching elsewhere come to St. John's in order to obtain that thorough domestic training for which the school has become well-known. Accommodation is also afforded for young persons engaged in business or teaching who are glad to find a quiet Christian home at a low charge.

Those children requiring education attend the well-known Westbourne Day Schools, where an admirable education is given.

A visit to the school is sufficient to convince one of the wisdom and skill exercised by the management. Everything is bright and cheerful, the children are thoroughly at home, and a highly satisfactory feature is the effort put forth to ensure that each child shall be carefully instructed in Evangelical principles. The school deserves cordial recognition as a Christian undertaking. There is a greater demand for servants than the school is able to supply. Many have risen to positions of trust in various capacities, and not a few, as they leave, become connected with the Y.W.C.A.

The school is partly dependent upon public support, and it is felt that, with the various adaptations and improvements that have been made, attention should be called to its useful character. There are a few vacancies in the institution. The Hon. Louisa Kinnaird, 115, Mount Street, W., will be glad to supply all particulars.

Evangelizing in Lambeth.

IN what was formerly the "Old Vic." Theatre, New Cut, Lambeth, now known as the Royal Victoria Hall, an aggressive evangelistic work of many branches is carried on by the Bible Christian Methodist Mission, Waterloo Road Chapel. Never has the building been used to better advantage than in the sustaining from week to week of the Sunday services for the people.

Of one of these gatherings a visitor wrote: "I made my way to the 'Old Vic.' shortly after eight o'clock. There was a congregation of over 2,000 assembled to listen to a lantern address. It was a strange medley of worshippers that met the eye, some being the ordinary church and chapel folk, but the great majority were those unaccustomed to religious services—some among the latter had oranges and nuts with which to regale themselves, should the proceedings prove wearisome. The speaker, in a clear, penetrating voice, vigorously attacked the evils of our day, and earnestly preached the doctrines of repentance and faith in Jesus Christ. In the dim light one could see, by the anxious faces of the hearers, and the hasty brushing away of tears, that the words were striking home."

The need for social agencies collateral with others more strictly spiritual has been duly recognised in the establishing of temperance societies, coal, clothing, and benevolent clubs, savings bank, &c. Twenty-eight organizations are at work at Waterloo Road Chapel, and last year over twelve hundred meetings were held. While it is impossible to tabulate the spiritual results of this many-sided movement, the workers draw encouragement and inspiration from the past, with its many tokens of Divine blessing upon their efforts to make known the Gospel of God's grace and win souls to Christ.

"Lamashinini: A Swazie Diamond."

DEAR Lamashinini! Let me tell you her story. She is a Swazie girl, and lives in a kraal just close by our mission station at Ezulwini, or rather, I should say, was living there last year, when we had all to leave Swazieland, and the people we love so much, on account of the war.

It was in the end of May, 1899, when Miss Harris returned to Ezulwini, after her furlough in England, and I went with her, that I first heard of Lamashinini. Miss Forbord, a Norwegian missionary, also working in Swazieland, was with us helping us to get things straight, and one day she roasted a lot of coffee beans and said, "I'm going over to Japan's kraal to get one of the girls to grind them for me," and off she went.

The kraal was just close by our house, not five minutes' walk. Presently she returned with all the beans crushed into nice brown coffee, and in answer to our question "Who ground them for you?" she said, "Lamashinini, and she has promised to come to the night-school." Little did we then realize that the money thus earned was so soon to go towards purchasing her first cotton frock.

To the night-school she came, a bright, merry, wild Swazie girl, of about fourteen years old, a favourite daughter of her father's, our chief, old Japan, and the ringleader in all that went on in the kraal, whether good or evil. There she stood among the group of girls, half laughing, half shy, her little black woolly head bent down, and her face with its bright dark eyes half hidden by her blanket. That was my first introduction.

She continued to come to school, and on the following Sunday evening she and several others came over for a little informal meeting; lots of hymns, prayer, and a short Gospel message. At the close Miss Harris asked if there were any present who would that night give themselves to Jesus, and let Him save them from all sin. To our astonishment Lamashinini said boldly out before the others, "Inkosazana, I will." We hardly dared to believe that she meant it, knowing what it would cost her; but during the four months that passed between that evening and the day we left Ezulwini we had every reason to believe, not so much from her words as from her life, that she is truly "born again" of God's Spirit, "a new creature in Christ Jesus."

Morning by morning, at the sound of the prayer bell, we would see her flying down the path from the kraal, and there she would sit listening so eagerly to the words of Him who loves her and whom she has learned to love.

Almost every day she came once to school, and very often twice, and we are so full of praise that she was able to do so, and she learned enough to be able, though slowly and imperfectly, to read her Testament, and so when we had to teach her, it was with God's own Word, and his Holy Spirit to be her teacher.

One of the first things she longed for was a dress, so she went off to the mountains and gathered bundles of firewood, and brought them to us till she had earned enough, with what she had got for grinding the coffee, to get a nice cotton frock, which she valued far, far more than if we had given it to her. This frock was kept for Sundays, but she soon learned to sew, and made herself another one to wear at home during the week. Her light was not hidden.

All in the kraal knew whose she was, and she had not one in sympathy with her, although the fact that she was a favourite of her father's saved her from much real persecution. Without hesitation she gave up that terrible evil, Kaffir beer, and when there was a drink and dance at the kraal she came over to us and spent the day quietly with Lois and Asarto, our two native children, and when we told her that we were going away, she sobbed, with tears in her eyes, "Oh, what shall I do when they are drinking? I know they will try to make me sin." We told her that though we were going, Jesus would be there with her, mighty to keep her from harm.

And now before I close I want to tell you of how God honoured her open confession of his name. About three weeks after her conversion all Japan's daughters were called to the King's kraal to cut reeds for a new hut he was having built, and our hearts sank within us when Lois told us, because the King's kraal is such a terribly wicked place, and we could not bear to think of our Lamashinini going there, and yet we knew that unless her father gave her leave she must go.

A Swazie girl is the property of her father, and has no choice but to obey him. But we need not have feared, for Jesus knows how to care for his little ones, and He touched old Japan's heart so that, though all the other girls had to go, Lamashinini was permitted to stay at home with the children.

How glad our hearts were!

And now will you ask the Lord Jesus to help you to love and pray for Lamashinini, left alone in a heathen kraal, in a heathen country, now nearly fifteen months ago, and so lately brought out of heathen darkness? Ask that she may not only be kept true herself, but that her life and testimony may be used to draw others to Jesus, that when we return, which we hope will be very soon, we may find very many just ready to enter, if not already in, the Kingdom of God. Then we shall have the joy of telling you "what God hath wrought" in answer to your prayers.

Perhaps you think you can only do so little; but never mind, it is those who are "faithful in that which is least" to whom Jesus will say "Well done" when He comes. Lizzie Thomson.

A Street Arab's Tribute.

A TRUE STORY.

A hush on the earth had fallen,
The revel—the laugh—were still,
And the world had bowed in sorrow
O'er a loss that was hard to fill.

For the greatest of earthly Sovereigns
Had laid the sceptre down,
And had gone to a wider Kingdom
To receive a brighter crown.

And the placards edged with mourning
Told the eager throng that day,
In Dublin's busy highways,
That the Queen had passed away.

He was small, and ragged and dirty,
A child of the streets—no more,
Yet a subject's heart beat loyally
'Neath the threadbare coat he wore.

He knew not the Empire's bound'ry,
But he felt the Empire's pain,
When he saw that his Queen had gone to rest
From the toil of her mighty reign.

He had only a penny to purchase
The violet blossoms dear,
Yet a tiny bunch he bargained
From a flower-girl standing near.

Later the gardens of Europe
Will be stripped of their choicest bloom,
To be placed with pomp of mourning
In State on the Royal tomb.

His flowers were laid on the great Queen's name,
To be crushed in the muddy street,
To be trampled and soiled in the busy throng,
And to lose their fragrance sweet.

But who shall say that the act is lost,
And that angels have not smiled,
Or that greater homage a Queen could win
Than the love of this beggar child?

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 10.

"If Christ should come to-morrow."—1 Thess. v. 1, 2, 4-8.

I DO not think it should make any difference to any of us if Christ were to come to-morrow. I think I may say reverently, as the writer of this advice to my friends, that it would not make a straw of difference to the routine of my life. And surely the same should be true of everyone. When a similar question was put to John Wesley, he answered, "If I knew that the end of my life was fixed for to-morrow, I should ride to —— and preach in the afternoon, and ride on to —— and preach in the evening, and at night should retire to bed at the usual hour, commending myself to God, and expecting to awake in his presence."

As a piece of practical advice, I would urge that you should incur no debts; establish the habit from the beginning of life, of obeying the Divine precept literally, Owe no man anything. Also, keep everything tidy. A place for everything, and everything in its place, is a good motto. Our papers and wearing apparel should be left always in such order that if we were suddenly called away, there would be nothing unravelled, or unfinished, or unprepared for the inspection of our dearest, or of strangers. This especially applies to the arrangement of any money or presents which we may be able to leave behind us. Nothing is more unchristian than to pass away without having left everything in order for those who may succeed. See to it, also, that you never leave matters of controversy or misunderstanding unsettled between yourself and others. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath." If when you reach your closet for evening prayer, you remember that your brother has aught against you, or you against him, you must leave your prayers unsaid, until all is right between your brother and yourself.

We should see to it, also, that we have said all we ought to say to those whom God has put into our charge. It would be lamentable indeed if, when we reached the presence of God, we remembered words that ought to have been said, and warnings that ought to have been uttered. It will be too late then to make any alteration. The tasks and duties, the responsibilities and privileges which we have failed to improve, will be beyond our reach for ever. The Sunday school teacher will not be able to return to the class to say final words for the winning of the children to the Saviour.

Every day is a little life in itself. It has its birth and death. Let us make each as complete as possible, doing what our hands find to do with our might, because there is no knowledge, no device, in the land to which we go. If each day is full of devout improvement of opportunity, if we carefully redeem the time, if we work while the day lasts, knowing that the night cometh, we shall have no reason to fear if Christ should come to-morrow, supposing always that we are resting on Him as our ever-present, ever-living Saviour.

The early Church was perpetually on the tip-toe of expectancy for the coming of the Saviour. The primitive saints did not look for death, but to be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. Perhaps the saints of to-day do not hold this blessed hope as tenaciously and universally as they did, and the thought which dominates their life is rather that the Lord Jesus is always with them. They believe, that even in that glorious hour, when they shall see Him as He is, He will not be nearer to them, nor they to Him, than at this present hour.

Live in the presence of Christ. Ask the Holy Spirit to perform his chosen office of making Him real and near. Do all things as under the Eye, not of the Taskmaster, as Milton put it, but of the Loving Friend and Saviour. Ye serve the Lord Christ; let everything, therefore, be done to his glory, so that whenever He shall come, or you go to Him, there shall be nothing to regret.

International S.S. Lesson.

February 17, 1901.

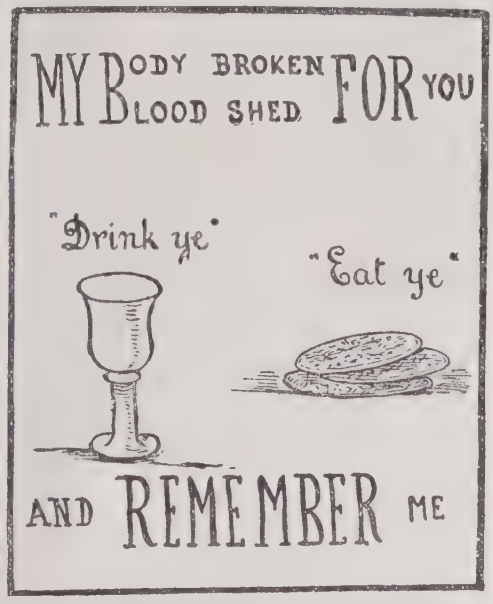
The Lord's Supper (Matt. xxvi. 17-30).

Golden Text.—"This do in remembrance of Me" (Luke xxii. 19).

Introduction.

THE Lord's Supper is the realization of the Jewish Passover. That was the true type of the sacrifice of the true Lamb of God (John i. 29).

Christ wished to keep the Passover (17) according to the Jewish custom; but how little did the disciples understand that in their midst was the real Lamb ready to be offered for the sins of the whole world. He knew; and how deeply He felt the reality of which this ordinary Passover feast was but a faint shadow, none of us can never know.



Plan to Blackboard.—The plan needs no words to explain it, all are familiar with the words and the emblems; let us enter into the deeper meaning in all sincerity and with all reverence.

1. The Conversations.

There are three conversations in our lesson to-day. The first (17, 18) about preparing the Passover feast. Here Jesus gives Himself one of the beautiful names so appropriate to the event. "Master"—He was indeed "the Master," for He gave us a command that will never end "until He come," and that command is our Golden Text. The second conversation was (20-25) about his betrayal, and is given in much fuller detail in John xiii. 26-31. It was at the close of this conversation that Judas left the table, and went out; he was not present when Christ passed round the emblems of his dying love.

(26-30). In the words we all know so well, Jesus addresses his disciples, while He breaks the bread and passes the cup, and starts the chain of unbroken links until we meet Him again (Luke xxii. 19). This was the third conversation.

2. The Memorial Service.

Let us study the Passover Service in Ex. xii., and then read 1 Cor. v. 7: "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us." Christ fulfilled "once for all" (Heb. ix. 26-28: x. 10, 12, 14) the type of the little lamb killed year by year for the Israelites. It was no longer needed after He died on Calvary, and so He introduces a new and simple service in its place, that service which has become dear to all his followers.

Ex. xii. 3. "A Lamb" = "A Saviour" (Luke ii. 11).
„ 4. "The Lamb" = "The Saviour" (John iv. 42).
„ 5. "Your Lamb" = "My Saviour" (Luke i. 47).

See also John i. 29 and Rev. xii. 8.

3. Will You Obey?

It is a command, "Take eat," "Drink ye," "This do," } 1 Cor. xi. 24-26.

We must first be able to say "My Saviour," and then we shall want to remember Him. We need much strength to live our daily lives rightly, and here is where to get that strength, to feed on Him by faith.

"Here, O my Lord, I see Thee face to face,
Here would I touch and handle things unseen;
Here grasp with firmer hand the eternal grace,
And all my helplessness upon thee lean.

"Soon we arise; the symbols disappear,
The feast, though not the love, is past and gone;
The bread and wine remove, but Thou art here,
Who art the Way, the Truth, the Life alone."

(Bonar.)

Is it nothing to you? (Lam. i. 12), or is it everything to you? (John xi. 50).

The Lord's Supper is a memorial of a departed Friend, a prophecy of a returning Friend, and a parable of a present Friend (Moody).

The Y.M.C.A.

THE quarterly meeting of the representatives of Y.M.C.A.'s in the north-west district of England was held at Kendal, where the conference was received by the Mayor and Mayoress, Alderman and Mrs. Gilbert Gilkes. The Associations at Carlisle, Penrith, Keswick, Whitehaven, Ambleside, Barrow-in-Furness, and Keswick were represented.

The forty-third annual meeting of the Ryde Association was held in the Town Hall on January 29, under the chairmanship of Commander Key. The secretary's report showed an increased attendance at the Sunday Afternoon Bible Class. The report also indicated that the work had in every way been well sustained. An earnest address was delivered by Major Pelham-Burn on "Let us Run."

The work of the National Council in India and Burma is giving much cause for encouragement. Mr. Frank Anderson's temporary premises in Bombay, secured pending the erection of the new student building, have not proved of sufficient capacity to accommodate the large numbers of Indian young men who have attended his meetings; while Mr. Oliver McCowen has not only had much success in his work at Rangoon, but has found a promising new opening in Moulmein, a town of 50,000 inhabitants.

In connection with the work at Omagh an effort is being made to complete and furnish the new premises which have been secured. About £1,600 will be required for the purpose. Mr. John G. Porter writes from 51, High Street, Omagh: "The work is, and has been, distinctly religious, and from small beginnings it has grown and prospered. The evangelistic services held from time to time have been a blessing to a great many. The Association provides the only resort for young men in this town outside the public-house."

The Last Night With the Dead.

"Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again" (John xi. 23).

Farewell, friend, till the shadows flee away!
Farewell, my loved one: it is sweet to say,
"Till our next meeting," there no pain can come,
Nor partings dim the glory of our home.
We'll meet again—where God's redeemed ones dwell,
Where never more shall sound the word, "Farewell."
O joyful hope! for then I shall have gazed
On my Incarnate Lord; I shall have raised
To Him these heavy eyes, tearful no more,
And faith be lost in sight. My grief is o'er.
Farewell till our next meeting; it will be Where Christ, not Death, shall veil thy face from me.

From "Whispers in the Palms," by Anna Shipton.

Maryland Point, E.—The workers at Francis Street Mission report another year of steady and uninterrupted labour. "The esteemed missionary, Mr. Gage, has been permitted by God's goodness to complete his twenty-fifth year of labour at Francis Street. We rejoice to say he is still vigorous and active; and our prayer and desire is that it may please God to spare his useful life, and make him a still greater blessing in the years to come." The hon. secretary of the Mission is Mr. John Easson, 35, Courtland Avenue, Ilford.

Training Eurasian Young Women.—The training home for Anglo-Indian and Eurasian young women, for which Mr. and Mrs. Longhurst Ward have been labouring at West Hatch, Adyar, Madras, is now an accomplished fact. The purpose of the institution is to receive those desirous of a period of systematic Bible study, with a view to mission work in India, and to afford them spiritual training and help, with some preparatory experience of teaching, house to house visitation, and other evangelistic work. A beginning was made with five students last October, who were increased to seven with the new year.

At Home with the Lord.

*Mr. Thomas Newberry's last Bible Reading.

2 Cor. v. 1-10.

PETER said, "Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle" (2 Pet. i. 13, 14).

"We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved"—this present mortal body—we shall have "our house, which is from heaven," our resurrection body at the coming of our Lord. During the interval between our departure to be with the Lord, and his coming for his saints, we are "found naked," disembodied spirits. The apostle speaks with assurance, "We know," not a thing to be hoped for, but a fact settled.

The stakes drawn up, cords loosed, curtains folded up, that is what dying is—a packing up of the tent, not with the prospect of pitching it again, but of exchanging it for a permanent dwelling, the Tabernacle for the Temple, the tent in the wilderness for a settled habitation in the land.

"Now He that hath wrought us for the self-same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit" (v. 5). "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you" (Rom. viii. 11). As to being left behind, to the regenerated child of God that is an impossibility: whether watching or sleeping we shall live together with Him (1 Thess. v. 9). That body must go; it is sealed for the purpose till that day of redemption: "Ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest [pledge] of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. i. 14). What God has given to Christ, what Christ has purchased, sealed with such a sure seal, must go. "Now He which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts" (2 Cor. i. 21, 22), we have the earnest, the foretaste.

If He comes as a thief, He will have what He comes for (Rev. iii. 3).

"If our earthly house were dissolved"; but "we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and WE shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality" (1 Cor. xv. 51-53). We shall not all sleep, but be clothed upon with our house from heaven. If we are called upon to sleep, "we have a building of God," a resurrection body. He formed these mortal bodies of the dust of the earth, earthy material; the resurrection body will be heavenly (1 Cor. xv.). Take a grain of corn reared on English soil, that soil supplied the material for the corn, its substance was English soil; take this to America, put it there, it is not quickened except it die, it is clothed upon, and what furnishes the material of its growth is American soil. So with the resurrection body. God is the Builder, God gives it a body as it pleases Him—heavenly, enduring, immortal. If these mortal bodies become corrupt in the tomb, "we have a building of God," a dwelling house composed of heavenly soil, whose Builder and Maker is God.

The "children of the resurrection" neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are like the angels of God (Luke xx. 34-36).

"Unclothed," whilst we are turned out of this tabernacle, and have not yet come to take possession of our new habitation, away from home as to the body, we are "AT HOME WITH THE LORD." We pass the interval in the Lord's home; as He said, "In my Father's house are many mansions . . . I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare for you a place, I come again, and will receive you unto Myself" (John xiv. 2, 3—"Englishman's Bible," margin); as Solomon prepared a house for his bride, Pharaoh's daughter.

The new Jesusalem is a city composed of redeemed, resurrection bodies, the bride, dwelt in by one Spirit.

It is natural not to wish to lay down the body, but it is spiritual to desire the resurrection body at the coming of the Lord to receive us to Himself. "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality," then death shall be "swallowed up in victory." "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

The hope of his return takes away the sting of death; when the Lord returns, He will not suffer the living and remaining ones to see corruption.

Eden was a shadow of the Paradise of God with its tree of life (Rev. ii. 7). "In thy presence is fulness of joy," his presence, God's Paradise (2 Cor. xii. 2-4).

"Wherefore also we labour [are ambitious] that, whether present [being at home] or absent [away from home], we may be accepted of Him (well pleasing to Him"—v. 9, margin, "Englishman's Bible"). So that when we stand before the judgment seat of Christ, He may be able to say "Well done."

* Given on December 18, at the house of the late Mr. Newberry. The subject was suggested at the time by one present. Cambridge Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

ON Friday, January 25, Rev. A. K. Finnimore, missionary in Tinnevelly and Mauritius, addressed the University Missionary Union. The attendance was not so good as usual. Mr. and Mrs. Finnimore afterwards addressed the St. Andrew's-the-Less branch of the Gleaners' Union.

Cambridge is the poorer for the removal to Ilfracombe of Mr. F. G. Walker, who has been an earnest and hard worker in Barnwell for the last four years. For two years he was connected with the Barnwell Theatre Mission, and for about the same time he has worked at St. John's Mission Church.

Ridley Hall is again full; indeed, it has a larger number of students in residence this term than it had last term. This is the first time in its history that the number in the Lent term has exceeded the number in the previous Michaelmas term. A vice-principal to succeed Rev. J. Harford-Battersby has not yet been appointed.

Irish Notes.

THE agents of the Central Ireland Mission have during the past year held services in about fifty of the fairs and markets of this country, and with most encouraging results.

The experiment of appointing a deputation secretary for the Diocesan Temperance Society of Down and Connor has proved a great success. Since his appointment fifteen months ago, Rev. J. W. Minchin has held sixty-three meetings, and organized seventy-four others, while in eleven parishes new branches have been established. Moreover, at one temperance mission 240 persons signed the pledge, and at one meeting 120 new members were enrolled.

The Shankill Road Mission, Belfast, continues to do an excellent work. Indoor meetings are held regularly three evenings a week, and on the Sabbath six meetings of different kinds are held. On Saturday night, at intervals, a late service is held for drunkards, and at Christmas a substantial free meal is given to about 2,500 of the very poorest people in the city. There is also an excellent Sunday school in connection with the Mission, and a good Bible class.

The Malone Protestant Reformatory is prospering. The conduct of the boys during the past year has been excellent, and their progress satisfactory. The committals during the year were thirty, against twenty-three the previous year, and there are at present 103 children on the books. There is a curious anomaly in the law, that a child under twelve years must be sent to prison for fourteen days before he can be sent to a Reformatory, but that a child over twelve years need not thus be sent. All of those committed to this Reformatory during the past year were over twelve years, and have not, therefore, been in prison. An effort is about to be made to get this objectionable feature in the law removed.

Two or three weeks ago the Bishop of Limerick, Dr. Bunbury, in a sermon on "The Faith once delivered to the Saints," took occasion to emphasize the fact that there could be no union between his Church and that of Rome, but that there was real hope of union with their Nonconformist brethren. This had special reference to the Evangelical Alliance Week of Prayer in Limerick. The correspondent of a contemporary appears to have seriously misunderstood this utterance. As he interpreted it, "The Bishop warned his hearers against going to Dissenting places of worship, and asked them to remain loyal to the Church." This version circulated through the press, and was communicated to THE CHRISTIAN by our own correspondent in Ireland. Nothing was further from his mind or ours than to spread inaccurate information, or to cause anyone pain. We are glad to be assured that the Bishop's sermon was very much appreciated by Limerick Nonconformists, who are as grieved as the Bishop himself at the misunderstanding. We very gladly, therefore, explain the true facts of the case, namely, that the Bishop's strictures applied to the Romish Church only, and not to Nonconformists.

Scottish Notes.

THE year-book of the Episcopal Church in Scotland shows that in all 124,335 are connected with the 356 charges, 46,237 of them being communicants, while the clergy number 356. In 1878 the membership stood at 56,200.

A very strong protest was made last week, by the Dundee Shop Assistants' Union, against the growing practice of trading on the Lord's Day; and an earnest appeal was made to the churches to make it possible for the members and their fellows to spend the day profitably by allowing the shops to be closed at an earlier hour on Saturday.

At the annual meeting last week of the Glasgow Mission of the Out-Door Blind, it was stated that during the past year 154 names were added to the roll, while 124 died or left the district, leaving 1,491 names on the books of the Mission. Of these persons 500 are upwards of sixty years of age, and ninety-two are in receipt of monthly aliments ranging from 5s. to 12s.

The subject of running tramway cars on the Lord's Day is being kept well to the front in Edinburgh Town Council. A determined effort was made last week to obtain a plebiscite of the citizens on the subject (the cost of which it was said would not have exceeded £300), and although the proposal was negatived, twelve members were in favour of it. It is contended that the result of the last election really gave to the Council a mandate in favour of stopping the cars, but an important factor in the settlement of the question must be the desire of the lessees.

An important consultation took place last week at Glasgow between the magistrates and the sheriff, on the procedure to be followed in carrying out the provisions of the Inebriates Act. In order to make the Act effective, the magistrates think necessary to exclude from its operation criminals and abandoned women of the streets, and that even in dealing with habitual drunkards it should be made applicable only to such cases as show some prospect of being cured by a course of the treatment to be followed at the Girgenti Home. The opinion of the press is "that the magistrates are acting wisely in this matter, and with discretion not misapplied."

It is worthy of note that during last year 186 school boards in Scotland invited the aid of the Association for aiding School Boards in the Inspection of Religious Instruction, resulting in 500 schools being classified as—excellent 160, very good 200, good ninety-nine, very fair twenty-two, fair thirteen, moderate three, failed three. These figures speak of thorough work in many parts of the country. While public funds cannot be used for religious instruction, it is well known that the members of many boards have arranged a thorough system of instruction and examination in such subjects, independently of the Association. By the various means available, it is evident that a very large amount of attention is given day by day to the teaching of the facts and truth of Scripture. It was mentioned at the meeting last week that some boards, "after forming a connection with the Association, benefiting by the impulse which it gave to the religious instruction, found after a while that they could carry on the work themselves."

While training men and women for foreign work, the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society is able to do a large amount of home work among the poor of the city. The annual report, submitted at a meeting held last week, shows that as the result of a special jubilee effort the Society finds itself with £3,000 on hand, to face a much-needed extension of premises. But on the other hand it is a serious matter that the working expenditure of £5,205 has exceeded the available income by £1,005, which is not due to expansion, but to a falling away in contributions. It was mentioned that of the nearly 300 medical missionaries at work in various quarters of the globe, nearly one-half have some connection with the city. Of fifteen who were at work in Manchuria before the outbreak of the present troubles, seven were connected with the Society; and of a refugee party which made its escape into Eastern Siberia three missionaries out of five were connected with it.

To Save the Children.

THE recently inaugurated Children's Protection League promises to deal effectively with the question of shielding young people from the public-house. The aim of the Society is to secure legal force to the clause in Lord Peel's Report "forbidding the sale, either on or off, of any kind of intoxicants to children under sixteen," and recommending that "the penalties for knowingly serving children under age should be raised." The movement is one which appeals to every true father and mother, in their training of the children of to-day as the men and women of the future, destined to uphold the dignity and righteousness of the nation. The League is a philanthropic movement, rather than a party one. It has for its president Lord Peel, in conjunction with Lady Elizabeth Biddulph and Lady Henry Somerset. The organizing secretary is Miss Rose Harrison, 101, Oakley Street, Chelsea, who will be pleased to give further particulars of the movement.

Ofttimes Resorting Thither.

A CHRISTIAN friend sends us the enclosed, and we commend to our readers an example the following of which could not fail to be fraught with rich blessing :—

"It may interest you and others to learn the result of a rather strange record I have kept during 1900. I have pretty carefully kept score of the times I have had private and public prayer. I am myself quite astonished at the number! I have had 1,067 times of private definite prayer, and 419 times of public prayer. How much these have meant to me I cannot fathom! What or where would I have been without them! Oh how slow we are to count up our mercies. Many a time I think of those who pass prayerless days or weeks a year! How thankful I am for the many surroundings of my childhood and youth!

"Another mercy is the delight I have in reading the Bible! I was speaking to a man reckoned 'a good man' only a short time ago, and he told me he had not read his Bible for three months! My rule has been for many years, never less than three times a day. How thankful I am for the custom begotten in me as a boy in a Christian Scottish home!

"Thoughts of other mercies crowd on me, but I cannot name them here. May I be more mindful of them in the future by comparing what I have with what many others have not. Also may I be thankful for many things withheld."

Rev. George Soltau's Bible Studies.

ANOTHER series of Bible studies has been commenced in the South of England by Rev. George Soltau. On Mondays he is at the Central Hall, Eastbourne. On Tuesdays at Brighton, where in the afternoons he holds his studies in Rev. J. B. Figgis's church, and in the evenings at North Street Chapel. On Wednesdays the series is continued at St. Leonards in the afternoon, and in the evening at Hastings. On Thursdays, Mr. Soltau goes to Tunbridge Wells, where much interest is aroused, and the Parish Room, kindly lent by Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt, is filled to overflowing, and at night the Town Hall is used. Fridays Mr. Soltau purposes giving to Richmond, after the Simultaneous Mission. The present course of Bible study has been most encouraging. There seems a deep hunger for increased knowledge of the Word of God, and a true Berean spirit of searching the Scriptures. Mr. Soltau has not yet fixed the district he takes after Easter. Should any friends desire to invite him to their towns, they should address him at 85, Lordship Park, Stoke Newington, London, N. G. E. T.

Alexandria Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute.—A friend who has been visiting Rev. T. R. and Mrs. Lawrence, writes that recent special services have beeen richly blessed, "and now scarcely a week passes without souls being won for Christ." A group of men who were blessed at the Institute, wrote of meetings they were themselves holding at their new station, and told of souls won for Christ. On such occasions as a visit of the Mediterranean Squadron, more than three hundred men have slept on the floors of the halls and passages; and an effort is being made to raise £2,000 for new dormitories. We have seen this work, and are pleased to testify that it is worthy of confidence and support. The honorary treasurer is Colonel W. Ward, 3, Quarry Bank, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Samuel Levermore in Edinburgh.

A THREE weeks' mission has just been concluded in Edinburgh by Mr. Samuel Levermore. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the hall in Picardy Place was well filled, and we had the joy of seeing many sinners seeking Christ. The meetings became so well known that it was thought advisable to hold the Sunday evening's service in a much larger hall, which was well attended. During the last week, Mr. Levermore delivered noon-day addresses to Christians in Carrubber's Close Mission Hall, also addressing their usual Gospel meeting every evening. The result of this mission is that many have been encouraged and refreshed in their work. The mission concluded with an all-night prayer meeting, at which the burden of our hearts was that the Lord would prepare his people for the revival which we feel has already commenced in our city. A.

A Village Revival.

A work of grace has appeared in connection with the Mission Hall, Vernham Dean (erected by Mrs. Sydney Watson), between Andover and Hungerford. Last May a commodious hall was opened in Vernham Dean, and from the first the Gospel services became a powerful attraction. Many persons were convicted of sin, and soon a few became converted. So many young men attended the services that it seemed desirable to erect a reading-room as a gathering place for them, instead of the public-house. The room was opened in November last, and at the Gospel services which followed there were many inquirers.

One outcome has been a weekly gathering of converts for prayer and Bible reading, and as many as thirty-five thus meet. The majority of the converts are young men from eighteen to twenty-five years of age, though there are some good cases (of husbands and wives) of older years. The work spreads, other villages are being blessed, and other places of worship are being stirred up. The people are walking miles to attend these services, and it is hoped to extend the work to isolated places.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Barnsley.

The visit of Mr. W. R. Lane to Barnsley was eagerly awaited, anticipations and hopes running high. The missioner met the workers and others interested, to the number of 250, on the Saturday evening, and in an address bearing on the unity of the regular ministry and evangelists, drew out the sympathy of all present. From that day till Monday, the 28th, large numbers gathered in the Pitt Street Wesleyan Chapel, and on each occasion many were impressed with the convincing way in which the Gospel was placed before them. A number went into the inquiry room, where they were further pleaded with by Mr. Lane, and afterwards "dealt with" by individual workers. Specially noticeable was the number of men who came to the regular meetings, and when the Sunday afternoon meeting for "men only" was held, quite 1,200 listened with the utmost earnestness to the most solemn, pointed, and high-toned address heard in the town for many years past. The services of the mission are over, but the results are still being seen, and will continue to come to our notice for many days. Already some who made no sign during the meetings have told us of the blessing they received, and their determination, by God's strength, to live a Christian life. To Him who did the work and granted the success, we give all the glory. T.

Rev. Thomas Cook at Radcliffe.

The mission held by Rev. Thomas Cook at the Bridge Wesleyan Chapel, Radcliffe, from January 12 to 22, proved very fruitful. There were some 350 inquirers. The organizing secretary was Rev. W. W. Gibson, who threw himself heart and soul into the work, and undertook personally to visit the public-houses in order to invite the men to come to the services. The mission commenced with a Sunday school convention, followed in the evening by a workers' meeting. On Sunday, January 13, Mr. Cook preached in the morning and evening, and held a young people's service in the afternoon. To this service all the elder scholars from the three Wesleyan schools were invited, and the large chapel was well filled. When, after a powerful address, Mr. Cook invited all seekers after Christ to come forward to the inquiry rooms, it seemed as if half the congregation was coming forward. The two inquiry rooms set apart were immediately filled, two other vestries were likewise crowded out, and the passages were obstructed by penitents kneeling and sobbing and crying to God. With all speed two school rooms were requisitioned and additional workers were called for. The work went on steadily and quietly. On Sunday afternoon, January 20, a service was held for men only, and the chapel was well filled with men of all ranks and conditions, from mill-owners to public-house loafers.

At Mr. W. D. Dunn's recent mission at Bethany Hall, Glasgow, many souls were won to Christ. Mr. Dunn is now conducting a mission at Kilmarnock.

Mr. John Bollard has conducted three weeks' meetings in the Gospel Hall, Netherfield, Nottingham, with blessed results; whole families have been brought to the Lord.

Mr. William Forbes is continuing his work among theatrical women. On Thursday of last week a number of those employed in the Glasgow theatres gathered for tea and a meeting at the Christian Institute. Addresses were delivered by Rev. D. McQueen, and Mr. William Grant, as well as by Mr. Forbes.

Mr. James Eyres has just completed an eleven-days' mission at the Y.M.C.A., Llanelly. Under the Spirit's power, upwards of fifty sought the Saviour. The afternoon Bible classes were much appreciated. The meeting on Sunday afternoon for men only was crowded, and the same evening the building was densely packed. One outcome of the mission has been the bringing together of the Christian ladies of the town, who on Wednesday last started a Y.W.C.A., with about forty-five members. R. E. Thomas.

The late Mr. Basil Woodd Smith, J.P.

THE death of Mr. Basil Woodd Smith removes one who took a practical interest in many departments of Christian work.

Placed in circumstances which permitted him to give his time and his counsel where it was needed, he was able to assist a number of good causes. A man of strong religious convictions, not the less strong because in his life he had been content to learn from many and varied teachers, he found, perhaps, his chief interest in the work of the Bible Society. Few men now alive have attended its committees over a longer period, and he took a scholarly interest in its translation work. With him it was only a step from circulating the Bible to assisting in any enterprise that would substantiate its truth in matters of detail, so he was an ardent member of the Palestine Exploration Fund, and of any institution that gave itself to the study of Biblical archæology. Mr. Woodd Smith was in his seventieth year.

South Africa General Mission.

WE have had the honour, as a Mission, of planting the first missionary in British Amatongaland, North of Zululand. Last August, during a pioneer trip, I found a readiness to listen to the Gospel. We are needing very much a fully qualified medical missionary. He would have a grand sphere, and, while doing a little Government work, which would assist his missionary work, he would find open doors and a grand field.

This may come as a call to some reader. Mr. A. A. Mercer, 17, Homefield Road, Wimbledon, will supply further particulars. Six months or less in Durban would enable anyone, with a reasonable amount of ability, to fairly grip the language. W. Spencer Walton.

"The Fellowship of His Suffering."

MRS. HUDSON BROOMHALL writes from Shanghai (November 25): "It is almost too sacred to write of the fearful havoc which has fallen upon workers and converts; and our hearts would indeed be crushed did we not realize 'the eternal weight of glory.'

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints. It is a great responsibility to be left a missionary in China, and we would ask for the prayers of loved friends at home, that we may be filled with holy boldness, and deep love for this poor people.

"Heartrending accounts of the distress in Shansi and Shensi, owing to famine, reach us frequently. We were hearing last night that human flesh was sold in the markets, and that the officials were unable to put it down. The expenses of the Court in these poor districts, with some thousands of soldiers in its train, make an enormous drain upon the granaries. The Word of God is precious in these days. It abounds in comfort and strength. If the devil feels he has weakened our cause in this land, he has made a mistake. Never has the desire been greater to win this people to Christ, and one feels that the experience of the past few months will be stamped upon any further work we are privileged to do. The 'fellowship of his suffering' leads us to know experimentally what it means to be 'workers together with God.'"

BLINDNESS AND DEFORMITY.

The Rev. T. C. writes:—

During all the long period of my experience of forty years as parochial clergyman, I do not think that I have ever met with a sadder case than that of L. B. It is not only that she is totally blind, but painfully deformed. She has an abscess on the brain which affects the intellect. Life must indeed be bereft, in her case, of almost every pleasure and alleviation. It is a pitiful sight to witness such utter helplessness, and then feel how powerless one is to mitigate any of the many sad features of the case. The mother is a struggling widow, and her youngest child is consumptive.

About Books.

THE CALL OF GOD.

A VOLUME of peculiar interest at the present time is The Call of God: National Simultaneous Mission Sermons, by twenty-four of the workers engaged in the great effort now in progress. (3s. 6d. Thomas Law.) Familiar names appear on the title page; and although some of the deliverances are not specially evangelistic in structure and style, all have relation to fundamental truths, and spiritual questions and issues. Among the most pointed utterances we would specify Dr. Monro Gibson, on "Repent and Believe;" Rev. James Flanagan, on "Make Haste to be Saved;" and Rev. J. G. Greenhough, on "Traditional Belief and Real Faith." Among other notable sermons are those of Revs. F. B. Meyer on "Plenteous Redemption," Thomas Waugh on "The Necessity of the New Birth," Dr. Parker on "Christ Weeping over the City," and Dr. Clifford on "The Forgiveness of Sins." Needless to say the discourses of the well-known evangelists, Mr. W. R. Lane ("Ruin and Remedy") and Gipsy Smith ("The Rich Young Ruler") give forth no uncertain sound.

"SOCIAL SERVICE IDEALS."

"A PROGRAMME for the New Century," bearing the above title, has just been issued from the pen of Rev. Dr. W. Paterson Smyth. (1s. Sands & Co., London.) Voices from many quarters call for attention to the social evils existing around us, and the section of the Church which is alive to the call for reform is undoubtedly growing very fast. The world has sometimes demanded a higher ideal from the Church than that body has set before itself; but no more burning words could be used to arouse attention than those Dr. Smyth has sent forth. The case of the hard-working poor, who have no better prospect in old age than the workhouse, is pleaded with passionate earnestness. The question is faced, why the masses do not go to church. Admitting that there are many reasons, this one is given:

"Religious people have been busier about trying to get the masses to church than about trying to show to these masses what the Church really is. . . . To them Christianity appears a selfish religion, a 'plan of salvation for more privileged people.'"

But the author is not pessimistic; he goes on to say:

"After all, the Socialists' opposition to the Church is not always opposition to the Christ. . . . It is touching, and it is hopeful, to hear them in their better moments speaking of the ideal of 'the Workman of Nazareth,' as they call Him."

THE PHILOSOPHY OF DISSENT.

CHURCH principles and polity, from whatsoever platform they are propounded, demand thoughtful consideration. Among recent literature on the subject we recall nothing so comprehensive as The Philosophy of Dissent: Analytical Outlines of Some Free Church Principles. By J. Courtenay James, Ph.D. (5s. James Clarke & Co.) The author is careful to explain that by Philosophy he means "a rational explanation of the existence and principles of the Free Churches;" and by Dissent, "separation from the service of an Established Church." The pages deal with matters that are warmly controverted; and the author does not hesitate occasionally to criticise the positions of the Free Churches, of whose general cause he is advocate and champion. The subject is treated in relation to sacerdotalism and ecclesiastical assumption on the one hand, and in relation to New Testament teaching and Protestant liberty on the other. There are instructive chapters on the Conception of the Church and the Doctrine of Orders, also on Church Government and the Position of the Laity. The outstanding question of "Church and State" is discussed in instructive detail, both as to its history and its rationale. The author "has his say"; those who agree with him on some points will object to his position on others. All the same, the book will repay thoughtful perusal; it is informative regarding principles and practice, and suggestive in its statement of methods and procedure.

My Peafowl and My Favourite Peahen, by Lady Alicia Blackwood. (4d. Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Hackney, N.E.) An interesting booklet, informing and pathetic.

The January number of Ups and Downs, the American magazine published quarterly under the auspices of Dr. Barnardo's Homes (25c. per annum. 214, Farley Avenue, Toronto), comes to us with an almanac. The notes of the work and other reading matter are most interesting, and the illustrations add much to the attractiveness of the publication.

The Children's Treasury of pictures and stories is a budget of good things for the little ones. (1s. Nelson & Sons.)

Our Holiday in London, by Ellen Velvin, is a capital addition to the Green Nursery series. It is amply illustrated. (1s. Sunday School Union.)

Mr. S. Trevor Francis, the writer of two short poems which appeared in our last, is the author of a volume which takes its title from the principal poem in the collection: Whence—Whither? and Other Poems (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott).

A timely paper on the theatre, read in London last October by Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, M.A., of Blackheath, has been issued in booklet form, with the title, The Modern Stage and Christian Duty. (4d. Marshall Bros.) It is a bold word on a subject regarding which Christian teachers should speak out.

"Christopher King" sends us a poem, Victoria—Best Beloved (10d. per doz., post free. Mile End News Agency, 3, Mid Stocket Road, Aberdeen), which well expresses the true feeling of a Christian heart as to the Queen's home-going.

Dr. J. R. Miller's volume of Daily Readings, entitled Come Ye Apart, has been issued in a very handy form, printed on "Royal India" paper, and bound in limp leather. (1s. 6d. net. Nelson.) The type is small but clear, and utility is by no means qualified by the bijou daintiness of the book.

In The Shepherd Psalm for Children (1s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier) the language is simple, and the teaching marked by a healthy and vigorous tone throughout. Each clause of Psalm xxiii. forms the topic of a chapter, and well-chosen stories lead up to the presentation of spiritual truth in a fashion fitted to attract the attention of youthful readers.

Within and Without; or, the Christian's Foes, by Rev. Preb. Webb-Peploe, is another of the "Quiet Hour Series." (1s. nett. Marshall Bros.) The Christian is considered in his relation to (1) the World, or Holiness of Separation; (2) the Flesh, or Holiness of Subjugation; and (3) the Devil, or Holiness of Victory; and there is a fourth chapter on Progress, the Law of the Kingdom. These are very helpful pages.

Furnishing for Workers is the title of a manual of Scripture texts for Christian workers, compiled by L. W. Munhall, D.D. (1s. nett. Marshall Brothers.) The pages will assist those who would study Scripture with practical evangelistic aims. Above all, it is important that the worker should mentally and with the heart grasp the doctrines, sanctions, promises, and warnings that are classified in the little book—as well as in others of the kind.

Man and His Mirror, by George C. Needham (20 cents. Albert W. Needham, Germantown, Phila., Pa.) contains in a condensed form much sound teaching on the all-important subjects of sin, repentance, and redemption. The writer's purpose has been "to call attention to the origin, development, and present status of man in his independent course of rebellion and sin; and to unfold the divine procedure which rehabilitates him with a divine nature."

William Canton has gathered much that is interesting and entertaining in Children's Sayings: Edited with a Digression on the Small People. (2s. 6d. Isbister & Co.) The sublime and the ridiculous, the shrewd and the quaint, alternate on every page. Some of the speculations on religious matters were hardly worth giving; but taken as a whole the book is a collection of sayings well deserving to be preserved for the study of the psychologist, and the perusal of friends of the young.

Rev. Dr. Louis Albert Banks has produced in recent years many useful volumes for preachers and teachers In his hands simple facts and occurrences become illustrations of great truths and principles; and he knows both how to crystallize the points, and how to weave them into sermons and addresses. His latest work is in succession to his best: Poetry and Morals: Suggestive and Illustrative Anecdotes and Poetical Quotations for the use of Preachers. (6s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.) Here we have several hundred terse statements of truth, partly prose, partly verse, interesting for reading and useful for sermon building.

Valuable sidelights on the anxieties of Evangelicalism a hundred years ago, are afforded by Rev. Thomas Scott's little book, The Force of Truth. It would be difficult to ascertain how many editions this little work has seen; but it is significant that it should be brought out once more. For the information of young readers, we would explain that the author, the well-known commentator, gives us, as the title page sets forth, "an authentic narrative" of his moral and spiritual development. Here we have an admirable outline of Christian doctrine, as defended against the errors that prevailed in the eighteenth century. The Religious Tract Society is to be commended for reissuing this Evangelical classic (1s. 6d.), the perusal of which is calculated to yield much profit and satisfaction to Christians of the present generation.

An All-Round Ministry is a volume of addresses to ministers and students, by C. H. Spurgeon. (3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster). Its publication realizes a purpose which was in the mind of the great preacher some years before his death. Here we have a selection of his presidential addresses at the annual conferences of the Pastors' College. The first was delivered in 1872, and the last in 1890, so that the series embraces many of Mr. Spurgeon's most important utterances, as well as three of the "inaugurals" at meetings of the new Evangelical Association. It is hardly needful to add that the book is calculated to prove of great interest and value to Christian workers. As we have read the pages, we have praised God for the witness of his glorified servant, and prayed that many may be raised up to preach the Gospel in the same powerful and winning manner.

Among the recent publications of The Religious Tract Society, peculiar interest attaches to The Swearer's Prayer: the Marvellous Life-Story of a Tract for nearly a Century (6d. nett). It is just four years short of a century since the R.T.S. issued the tract, "The Swearer's Prayer; or, His Oath Explained." It has been brought out in five different forms, and is still upon the catalogue under two heads. It has been translated into at least twelve languages, and has had a circulation of between six and seven millions. Nearly 100 remarkable instances of blessing attending distribution of this tract are narrated in the present booklet, the perusal of which, it is hoped, will encourage Christians to persevere in tract work. Certain it is that the circulation of this tract—one of a very special character—has been greatly used of God. We have no doubt that a similar story could be written regarding many a modest publication.

There is much that is very beautiful in The Book of the Future Life, by Pauline W. Roose, assisted by David C. Roose (6s. Elliott Stock). As the preface informs us, the volume "was originally intended to be a mere collection of what the immortals of various ages and countries have said in prose or verse on immortality and the future life," with other related utterances. The thoughts have not only been gathered, but woven into chapters. The book is an anthology; it is more—a body of thought and sentiment, fact and fancy, regarding the life to come and man's anticipation thereof. The sources are as wide as the literature of faith, hope, and love; and occasionally the instructed Christian will find matter for criticism and ground of objection. Nevertheless, the volume is the result of considerable research, and will prove suggestive to those who would study the varied aspects of the subject with which it deals.

Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode have issued two deeply interesting editions of the sacred Scriptures. The Crimson Letter Testament exhibits the words of our Lord printed in red. The type is bold, and the pages emphasize the peculiar sanctity of certain sections of the inspired Word (2s. 3d. and upwards, according to binding). The second publication is The New Illustrated Bible—the Authorized Version, bound up with fifty illustrations in colour, based on photographs of sites and scenes in the Holy Land and Egypt. The pictures are designed to assist an understanding of Scripture story, and they are accompanied by helpful descriptive letterpress. These chromographs are bound up with the pearl reference Bible, and the ruby text edition, and they constitute a feature which will be specially appreciated by those who would select Bibles for presentation to young people. From an artistic point of view, the illustrations are all that could be desired (3s. 6d. upwards).

In THE BOOK OF LIFE Mr. J. T. Adams gives a thoughtful exposition of the register of God's elect. (1d. The Author, Reddal Hill, Old Hill, Staffs.)

THE PREACHER AND HIS WORK, by A Preacher (6d. nett. Passmore & Alabaster), is a chain of sententious sayings on a great subject. The booklet is now in its second edition.

A good booklet for young believers is PASTORAL COUNSELS FOR PERILOUS TIMES, by Pastor Frank H. White (1d. Passmore & Alabaster), which is addressed primarily to candidates for church fellowship.

CATHOLIC DECADENCE is an English translation of a remarkable letter by a French "Patriot." It is a repertory of significant facts bearing on the leakage from the Roman Church during recent years (4d. R. Banks & Son).

BEACHY HEAD is a thoughtful Bible study on God's use of man's memory and its two-fold purpose. The subject is treated from the standpoint of the Old Testament, and also considered in the light of the Gospels. (1d. Partridge.)

Rev. Arthur Finlayson has written a helpful and suggestive booklet—THE CHRISTIAN SOLDIER: Thoughts for the Battle of Life. By those who are young in Christian discipleship and experience especially, this message will prove worthy of careful study. (1d. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

Mr. E. Kaufmann, 5 and 6, Paternoster Square, issues some cheap and pretty books, printed in colour, for the young, in the "Emmanuel" series. Three already published are—THE CHILDREN'S SAVIOUR; OLD, OLD STORIES; and BOYS AND GIRLS OF THE BIBLE. (1d. each.)

The Vir Publishing Company, 7, Imperial Arcade, Ludgate Circus, E.C., promises the fourth volume in the "Self and Sex Series," entitled, WHAT A MAN OF FORTY-FIVE OUGHT TO KNOW, by Sylvanus Stall, D.D., on or before February 25. Some 75,000 copies of these highly commended purity books have already been sold.

A new and improved edition of Mr. Heyman Wreford's HOW CAN I BE SAVED? has been issued. This collection of personal incidents illustrating God's way of salvation has had a large sale, and its plain, simple teaching has been used of God to the spiritual enlightenment of many. (1d. each, 7s. 6d. per 100. Ernest Marsom, Keswick House, 17, Cathedral Yard, Exeter.)

Notes & Comments

THERE are signs of renewed discontent in Ritualistic and Roman Catholic quarters, and it seems possible that an agitation may be raised with a view to securing a change in the terms of the Declaration which, under the Act of Settlement, every Sovereign of this country is required at the time of coronation to "make, subscribe, and audibly repeat." In these circumstances it is worth recalling the terms used by Queen Victoria on November 20, 1837:—

I, Victoria, do solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, profess and testify and declare that I do believe that in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any Transubstantiation of the Elements of Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Christ, at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever; and that the Invocation or Adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other Saint, and the Sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitious and idolatrous. And I do solemnly, in the presence of God, profess, testify, and declare, that I do make this declaration and every part thereof in the plain and ordinary sense of the words read unto me, as they are commonly understood by English Protestants, without any Evasion, Equivocation, or mental Reservation, and without any dispensation already granted me for this purpose by the Pope, or any other authority or person whatsoever, or without any hope of any such dispensation from any person or authority whatsoever, or without thinking that I am or can be acquitted before God or man, or absolved of this declaration or any part thereof, although the Pope or any other person or perosns or power whatsoever shall dispense with or annul the same, or declare that it was null and void from its beginning.

Those who speak lightly of making a change in order to conciliate our Roman Catholic fellow subjects, and "many thousands of priests and laymen of the English Church who hold identical opinions upon the doctrine in question"—Transubstantiation—strangely misapprehend the gravity of the step proposed. Fortunately, we believe the great mass of the population would oppose such a change, yet the Lord's people should be kept alive to the importance of maintaining the Protestant nature of the constitution.

The doctrine of Rome in regard to our beloved Queen, as being in Purgatory, was thus expressed by Cardinal Vaughan in his recent letter in The Times:

No one would feel it right that in our grief we should so far forget ourselves, as even to appear to claim her as a member of our Church. At the same time, we may remind you that it is lawful to those who believe that any persons have departed out of this life in union with the soul of the Church, though not in her external communion, to offer privately prayers and good works for their release from Purgatory.

What a contrast is this to the hope for the Christian as presented in the Scriptures. "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." "Having the desire to depart, and be with Christ; for it is very far better." "Absent from the body, at home with the Lord." May the truth as it is in Jesus, enlighten and comfort many, Catholics or non-Catholics, whatever their guides may teach! And perhaps the heavy yoke which oppresses many may be broken, through the repugnance to the idea, which every rightly constituted mind must disown, of such an undoubtedly Christian woman being in Purgatory.

"One touch of nature makes the whole world kin," is a proverb which has been forcibly exemplified recently in the changed feelings of this country towards the German Emperor. His filial tenderness, which prompted him to break short the Prussian bicentenary festivities, hasten at a moment's notice to the bedside of his Royal grandmother, and sojourn among his sorrowing relatives for nearly a fortnight, has entirely won the hearts of the English people. The Emperor was so clearly lost in the man, and the man so nobly acknowledged the paramount claims of family ties, that a new bond of understanding and affection has been forged between the two great nations through the close affection of their reigning families. Queen Victoria, while alive, was ever one of the chief bulwarks of European peace. In her death she did not fail to deepen her influence in the same direction. We do not seek any formal alliance with Germany. None the less, but possibly all the more, is there a need for warm-hearted friendship between us.

We are glad to find that all High Churchmen do not agree with the truculent and very suspicious attitude of the Church Times towards the United Mission. Two noteworthy deliverances on the other side have been made, one in a sermon by Canon Armitage Robinson, containing generous references to the great work done by the Wesleyan ministry as proof of their Divine mission; and another, in a sermon by Rev. Dr. Cobb at St. Ethelburga's, Bishopsgate, who called the offensive paragraph in the Church Times a contrast to St. Paul's noble words to the Philippians, that whether the Gospel were preached of contention or love, he rejoiced that anyway Christ was preached. Dr. Cobb asked whether there was not sufficient generosity and charity and love of Christ among Churchmen to enable them to rejoice when the Gospel was preached and sinners converted by other agencies than theirs. We are glad that the Church Times is not permitted to arrogate to itself the function of expressing the real feelings of High Anglicans towards their Nonconformist fellow-Christians.

One of the pleasing incidental (but very significant) aspects of the Mission has been the large place given to its reports in the great London dailies, and the number of sympathetic leaders that have appeared on the subject. The Times, Daily News, Daily Chronicle, St. James's Gazette, and Westminster Gazette, have been conspicuous for their kindly and appreciative references to the good work that has been done. This attitude indeed is part of a general change of spirit that has come over the newspapers of late in regard to religious questions. The Churches and their doings, until a very few years ago, might have been almost non-existent so far as the notice taken of them in the Press was concerned. The fault did not lie altogether with the editors, but partly with the Churches. Now that the change has taken place, the religious public should see that the Press is adequately used for the purpose of keeping the spiritual life of the nation before the public.

A well-known authority on Chinese matters, Rev. James Johnston, writes a bright and optimistic article in the Mission World, in which he gives sound reasons for believing that the present disturbances in China offer much real encouragement for the future success of missions in that country. He mentions two points which are worth noting, i.e., the consciousness among the more intelligent Chinese, that both their Government and their religion are hopelessly inadequate in the matter of progress, and the growing sense of the powerlessness of the religions of China morally to regenerate the people. Mr. Johnston goes on to say that he thinks, when the country is again opened up, it will be found that the number of believers will be greater than before in every well-organized mission. In the present gloom which prevails concerning matters Chinese, it is most refreshing to read such a well-informed article as Mr. Johnston's.

Our readers are familiar with the utterances of Mrs. Bishop (Miss Isabella Bird) in regard to Christian Missions, as those of one of the greatest living authorities upon the question, so far at any rate as the East is concerned. We understand that this gifted lady, although advancing in years, has offered to take up active missionary work in India, in which land her help and counsel will be of the greatest value. Chiefly moved by medical mission work, she herself has erected five hospitals there, but her sympathies are wide, and include all branches of evangelistic effort. We trust and pray that she may be long spared to labour in that great field which is indeed ripe unto the harvest, and in which, alas! the labourers are yet so few.

Dr. Robert Anderson, well known to our readers as a Christian teacher, and Assistant Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, contributes an important article to the Nineteenth Century and After, upon "Our Absurd System of Punishing Crime." He speaks with authority, of course, when he declares that "professional crime is on the increase, and professional criminals are becoming a serious public danger." Dr. Anderson charges upon our social system much of the evil:

We permit hereditary criminals—men who are criminals both by nature and by habit—to beget children to follow in their steps. We allow such children to be reared in the midst of surroundings that would be morally fatal even to the offspring of the worthiest and best of men.

Dr. Anderson further advocates "asylum prisons, not for the punishment, but merely for the detention of prisoners committed for life." The periodical punishment of habitual criminals effects no real change in their lives. In the intervals of their liberty they become parents, and so continue the baneful work of peopling the world with a race of evil-doers. Society must protect itself against the menace of professional evil, and the only humane way in which it can do so is to incarcerate hardened evil-doers, finding them some healthy employment, but taking care that their species dies out with themselves. And if, during their detention, the Gospel could be really preached to them, there might be some hope of their salvation.

Very heartily do we join in the hope expressed in the circular calling the National Conference on Lord Peel's report, which was held last Tuesday in Manchester, that the result of it will be to unite the whole of the religious, temperance, and social forces of the country, on a policy wise, judicious, and effective. Never was the need for united effort against the drink curse more necessary, for the land is bleeding at every pore. It is an omen for good that not only were many hundreds of delegates in attendance, representing almost all the great temperance organizations, but that the circular bore the names of two archbishops, fifteen bishops, a cardinal, fifteen members of Parliament, and a host of other dignitaries in Church and State, including many of the best known Christian workers in the land.

After a private conference in the morning, and a public conference in the afternoon, at both of which there was the freest expression of opinion, a great public meeting was held in the evening in the Free Trade Hall. The dominant note of the proceedings was that of hope and determination that something effective will soon be done. If only a great wave of revival were to sweep over the land, and chase away the terrible indifference which prevails regarding the drink evil and so much else, we have not the slightest doubt that drastic temperance reform would follow almost as a matter of course. We hope to give some detailed notes and impressions of the Conference in our next issue.

The conditions under which large numbers of children, outside the hours during which they are compelled to attend the Board Schools, have to labour for daily bread, will shortly be made the subject of an inquiry by a Parliamentary Committee, the appointment of which was delayed by the changes in the Government. The evidence necessarily will be of a painful nature, and of great interest to all those who are anxious for the removal of the social hindrances which are responsible for so much of the irreligion and immorality in our modern life; but, unfortunately, experience has taught us not to be too hopeful in regard to the results of such Committees. As a rule there is no hurry about their report; frequently, if it escapes being pigeon-holed, it is made the battle ground of rival factions, and nothing practical follows. Meanwhile, the evils go on unchecked until they become a danger and a menace to the State which fails in its primary duty.

A contemporary remarks that the memorial which Mr. George Hookham has selected in remembrance of his late wife "must be ten thousand times more pleasing to the tender nature that inspired the wish than any triumph of painted windows." Mr. Hookham has arranged to provide, at any rate until the end of this winter, a nourishing breakfast for 6,000 miserably underfed Board School children of Birmingham, and as all the necessary arrangements have been very thoughtfully considered, we do not doubt that the act of Christian benevolence will be productive of great good. This is another of those striking instances in which private charity steps in to do that which the State simply "takes into consideration," and gets no further.

The Spectator of last week had a remarkable article—which we were somewhat surprised to see—upon the consequences to our religious beliefs of the possible discovery that Mars is inhabited. Supposing it should be really proved that Mars holds intelligent beings, The Spectator says > that such a discovery would be, at least for a time, terribly subversive of religion and morality, seems most probable; not that it would shake man's belief in a Creator, but it would at first sight alter his relation to men in this world, and minify the importance of man's opinions and actions.

How it could do either of these two things we fail to comprehend. God is God, and sustains the relation of God to creatures wherever they are found, whether upon this planet or upon any other. And no possible discovery of life upon other worlds can ever alter the facts that men upon this planet are sinners and need a Divine Saviour, and that such a Saviour is available for them. It would be much better if people would cease their vague speculations, and turn their attention to the patent practicalities of life—especially life as it directly concerns God.

A recent writer in the Westminster Gazette very pertinently draws attention to the decline of respect for old age, which is unquestionably a "note" of the present-day temper. "Its decay is borne witness to in the books we read, in the words we utter; it is boldly stamped on the passing face." For the first time in the history of the world, old age is held to be a synonym, not for wisdom and ripe experience, but for ignorance and narrowness. But lately a maiden of sixteen, when asked by the pastor preparing her for confirmation to illustrate the commandment to honour her father and mother, replied, "I ought to take them out for walks on Sundays; and I ought not to let them see how much more I know than they do." (!) This flippant assumption of superiority, is one of the perilous signs of the times; but we fear if is a feeling very deeply entrenched in the young mind of to-day. Are not parents partly responsible for its existence?

"Go Forth!"

So far as the Metropolis is concerned, the Simultaneous Mission is an event of the past, but the lessons it has yielded remain, fraught with importance for the Church at large. Much has been learned by missioners, pastors, and congregations, and the consensus of testimony is that, while the attention of the multitudes has scarcely been secured, on the whole, to the extent that was hoped, the churches have been deeply stirred and prepared to "go forth," preaching the Gospel to the masses that are without.

There is much evidence to show that the people, so far from being possessed by a spirit of acerbity, are ready to listen. The remarkable success which has attended some of the efforts put forth during the Mission to gain the earnest attention of outsiders is, in itself, sufficient to convince of this. The aggressive atheism which was popular among large sections of the working classes a decade or two since, is a spent force. The influence which sacerdotalism has gained is exercised chiefly among those who live at ease—the leisured and dilettante classes. As regards the masses, the bone and sinew of our population, it becomes increasingly obvious that "the fields are white to harvest." Evangelists who move among them tell us of a remarkable readiness, not only to hear, but to accept the Gospel. Recent events in the national experience have contributed to render the spirit of the people peculiarly susceptible to mellowing influences. The havoc wrought in family life through the war in South Africa, and the passing and solemn funeral of the beloved Queen Victoria have had weighty effect, and if the Church as a whole would rise to the responsibilities and opportunities of this crucial time, it must "go forth" to soul winning.

There are, of course, obvious difficulties. A revival cannot be made to order, nor is it a necessary outcome of church activities. There must be preparation in prayer, and the workers must be imbued with Evangelical truth. The thirst for Bible instruction shown during the London meetings is valuable evidence of a desire for heart-knowledge of God and of his Word, also of a desire to walk in his ways and do his will.

Taking a general survey of the Mission, we observe that in some places the spirit of revival thrust out many to seek the spiritually neglected. Bands of young men, stimulated by the absence of "the man in the street" from the mission gatherings, processioned the thoroughfares, singing, preaching, warning, and inviting. In other instances, the public-houses, lodging-houses, and, indeed, entire districts, house by house, were visited by godly workers. Their hopes were realized in the attendance of crowds of "outsiders," many of whom were subsequently led to decision. The battle was won by those devoted church members who were determined to "go forth."

Nearly all the workers are agreed that in order really to touch the outside world it is necessary to occupy public buildings and other places to which the people are accustomed to flock. There is a prejudice on the part of non-church-goers to enter a recognized place of worship. It may be, as a correspondent to a contemporary points out, that our churches are too conventional. In any case, we have reached the moment when the whole matter of reaching the outsiders should be solemnly faced. "Had a town hall or theatre been available," says a leading missioner, "many of us would have voted for that in preference to a church, for," he adds pathetically, "if the people will not come to churches, what are we to do?" And another says:

> If only the Mission does something to quicken in us the conviction that the command of Christ is to every disciple: "Go and preach the Gospel; and as you go, say The Kingdom of God, the gracious and redemptive rule of God, is here and now," its results will be incalculable.

The message comes, then, quick and powerful, to the people of God—"Go forth!" It is a message of hope, it brings with it the foretaste of supreme joy, it is the expression of highest wisdom, for "they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

A Soul upon My Heart.

"And he brought him to Jesus" (John i. 42).

Lord, lay some soul upon my heart,
And love that soul through me!—
That I may nobly do my part
To bring that soul to Thee.

Forbid that I should walk alone
Along the heav'nly way!
Within my heart implant thy groan,*
And lead me on to pray,

And toil, with strong desires and tears,
For one that's gone astray;
That sins of former days and years
May all be washed away,

And peace, and joy, and strength divine,
May fill the empty breast;
And cause that life for Thee to shine
Till multitudes are blessed.

O Saviour, heed my fervent cry!
Since Thou hast died for me
I long thy name to glorify,
In bringing souls to Thee.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—VI.

THE ATONEMENT.

By Rev. WILLIAM CROSBIE, M.A., LL.B.

AMONG "Foundation Truths" the Atonement may be said to be the chief, occupying the central place. What the keystone is to the arch in material structures, that the Atonement is to Evangelical theology.

In the thinking and preaching of the times on this all-important subject there is confessedly much that is vague, misty, uncertain, negative, unsatisfactory, and even positively erroneous. Theories of the Atonement must of necessity be imperfect, inadequate, because of the limits of the human mind. The death of Jesus has bearings, relationships, and meanings that transcend far and away our powers of thought. Still, definite views are, to an extent, possible; and they are absolutely necessary. It is not enough to speak of the Atonement simply as a fact; out of the fact something must be drawn, and built up, to satisfy the demands of the understanding and the moral sense.

The Atonement is a reasonable thing, though, in its reaches, it is infinitely vaster than our reason and its definitions; and that which the sanctified reason can interpret and appreciate must be set forth with all clearness. Where this is not done there is no strong, enduring basis for spiritual revival; nor are the conditions present for vigorous and rapid extensions of God's kingdom in the world. The doctrine of the Cross—and there is a doctrine of the Cross—is the truth the Holy Spirit honours, making it the power of God unto salvation. Churches languish, few conversions take place, and the piety of individual Christians is thin, sickly, nerveless, when Jesus is not exalted, and the significance of his death, in its relation to moral government, to sin, to the awakened conscience, and to forgiveness, is not apprehended and seen. How can the Cross be gloried in, as Paul gloried in it, unless it satisfies and meets all the wants of man's complex being, and all the demands of God's law?"

I want, then, if I can, to show, making it clear, how we have "remission of sins in Christ's name"—in what sense "Christ died for our sins." And may the Holy Spirit shed his light! May He "baptize" both the writer and the reader "into Christ's death," that there may be not only satisfying intellectual perception and knowledge, but deep, saving, joyous heart-experience also, expressing itself confidently in the words, "He loved ME, and gave Himself for ME!"

"Christ died for our sins" (1 Cor. xv. 3). "Him who knew no sin, He made to be sin on our behalf; that we might become the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. v. 21). "Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law, having become a curse for us" (Gal. iii. 13). "Whom God set forth to be a propitiation, through faith, by his blood, to shew his righteousness, because of the passing over of the sins done aforetime, in the forbearance of God; for the shewing, I say, of his righteousness at this present time: that He might Himself be just, and the Justifier of him that hath faith in Jesus" (Romans iii. 25, 26). "He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the whole world" (1 John ii. 2). "In due season Christ died for the ungodly" (Romans v. 6). "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister; and to give his life a ransom for many" (Mark x. 45). "Christ Jesus, who gave Himself a ransom for all" (1 Tim. ii. 6). "If the blood of goats and bulls, and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling them that have been defiled, sanctify unto the cleansing of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without blemish unto God, cleanse your conscience from dead works to serve the living God" (Heb. ix. 13, 14). "Redeemed . . . with precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, even the blood of Christ" (1 Peter i. 18, 19). "I lay down my life for the sheep" (John x. 16). "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" (Matt. xxvii. 46).

Put a man on to these Scriptures, and others of similar import that could easily be cited, and ask him to expound them, drawing out from them, and formulating by process of induction, an article of belief; and you will soon find out where he is theologically, experimentally, and spiritually.

"Christ died for our sins" (1 Cor. xv. 3). That is the succinct summary of the whole; the brief record of the greatest and most wonderful event in God's moral universe.

Christ died for our sins"! The patriot dies for his country; the martyr dies for his faith; the loving and devoted mother would willingly die for her suffering child; and "peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die." Self-sacrifice is common enough; and it is noble, beautiful. But, but, the self-sacrifice of Christ! Is there anything to compare with it? Comparison is impossible. It has no parallel, and can have none. It is altogether exceptional and unique. Christ died for OUR SINS. Of no one else can that be said, in the sense in which it is said of Him. Of no one is it said. Of no other being in the universe could it be said. And it could not have been said of Him if He had not been God as well as man. In these great, deep, glorious words I find an argument for the essential Deity of Jesus.

It is affirmed and taught that Christ came to restore the lost knowledge of God. That was one of the objects for which He came. It is affirmed also, and taught, that Christ came as the revelation, witness, and appeal of the Father's love, and to win sinners back to the Father by the exhibition of that love. That, too, was one of the objects for which He came. And it is affirmed and taught that Christ came to set an example, to show us how to live and act and suffer—to be to us a new ethical ideal and standard.

All these objects were included in his mission, and belong to what are designated "the moral aspects" of it. But the main and dominating object for which He came was "TO DIE FOR OUR SINS." Upon his death for sin everything depended. "Thus it is written, and thus it BEHOVED Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations." "Without shedding of blood is no remission."

His death is a fact of history. He was put to death at Jerusalem; crucified by wicked and cruel hands; the Sinless One—the absolutely Holy One—nailed to an accursed tree, numbered with the vilest malefactors; his, the middle cross, the cross of darkest shame. On his right hand and left hung notorious law-breakers. They died for their sins; they suffered the just and natural consequences of their transgressions; they had violated the law, and were enduring the penalty. There was no mystery or marvel about their death; contemned and offended justice was being vindicated. They died for THEIR sins—their own sins.

How different the significance of Jesus' death! He died for OUR sins. He was dying for sins just as much as they were dying for sins; but the sins for which He was dying were not his own; He was without sin—"holy, harmless, undefiled." The sins were ours. We were the law-breakers; and the Lawgiver Himself, and Ruler of the moral universe, had taken the place of the law-breakers, and was maintaining the authority of his own law, and upholding and vindicating its honour. He wanted to forgive and save the law-breakers, and He could only forgive and save them RIGHTEOUSLY by making Himself responsible for their guilt, and expiating it by his own death.

That is what is meant by the words, "Christ died for our sins." Can anything else, by fair exegetical process, be got out of the words? Death was the penalty of sin; and Christ died for our sins. He died physically; and He passed through a spiritual experience, mysterious, awful—a darkness, a mental anguish, a desertion, in which there was for Him the cup of God's wrath, the judgment of God against sin. "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" As man's Surety and Substitute, sin was condemned in Him; and its penalty was exhausted on the cross.

Does any one object to that view? Then tell me the meaning of the words, "Christ died for our sins." Can these words be made to square with the theories of Christ's death from which the idea of vicarious sacrifice is evacuated? I see not how they can. Christ restored the lost knowledge of God; that is admitted; but He died also, for our sins. He testified of the Father's love, Himself the gift of that love; but He died, also, for our sins. He set us an example, Himself the living and perfect embodiment of all his teaching; but He died, also, for our sins. And much else there was in his mission. He had experience of the common lot of humanity, passing through what we have to pass through, "in all points tempted like as we are," that, from personal and practical knowledge, He might be able to sympathize with us, and be "a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God"; but HE DIED, ALSO, FOR OUR SINS.

Through Him, therefore—and the inference is logical, legitimate, unchallengeable—there is forgiveness of sin, RIGHTEOUS forgiveness of sin; for every claim of justice has been met and satisfied. The holiness of God is not compromised when sin is forgiven; it is enhanced. The authority of law is not weakened when sin is forgiven; it is strengthened. None of the moral interests of the universe suffer when sin is forgiven; they are all upheld and re-enforced. Sin has not been lightly esteemed, or lightly dealt with.

The cross is God's estimate of its awful heinousness, and the sacrifice offered there is the ground He has laid for the sinner's pardon and restoration to favour and holiness. The tremendous necessity could be met in no other way than by the incarnation and life and death of God's only and well-beloved Son.

"Christ died for our sins." And the one simple condition of forgiveness is believing. There can be no other. Accepting the Substitute, identifying ourselves by faith with Him, his death becomes ours; all that He has done becomes ours; his merits and his righteousness become ours; they are placed to our account, and we are free. Justified—justified as the subjects of God's moral government, by an act of righteous and holy acquittal, and justified in the court of our own conscience—we are at peace with God, and with every principle of his rule; and we are at peace with, and within, ourselves. "There is now no condemnation."

"Christ died for our sins"! Oh, what a Gospel! What a Gospel for sinful men! "Through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins: and by Him every one that believeth is justified." "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest"! "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

There was a soul under deep concern; I remember it well. Conscience was aroused, and Satan was plying his accusations. It was the crisis of being. Despair, with its fearful chills and gloom, for a moment had come; and there was the anguished cry, "I perish." But just then a gentle hand was laid on the shoulder, and a voice, sweet as a tender mother's, whispered the words, "God loves thee." The message fell like healing balm upon the wounded, broken, burdened heart; and there was hope—the beginning of hope. Then the voice said, "Christ died for thy sins; He paid the debt—He paid it all. He was wounded for thy transgressions; He was bruised for thine iniquities; the chastisement of thy peace was upon Him. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." The Spirit of God was there where these two knelt; and He made everything plain and clear, unfolding and applying to the troubled conscience and the inner perceptions the precious truths; and that soul passed joyously into the light and liberty and peace and blessed rest of salvation.

I wonder whether any of the readers of these pages are as that soul was, deeply convinced of sin, and seeking forgiveness. Very precious is the thought of God's love—comforting, hope-inspiring. And in the love of God redemption originated. Jesus did not die that God might love the sinner; Jesus died because God did love the sinner. But the Gospel is more than a message of love; the Cross is more than a revelation of love—it is a demonstration of righteousness also. And because it is a demonstration of righteousness, as well as a revelation of love, it meets the whole case—the whole moral and spiritual need—of the Spirit-convinced, conscience-stricken, seeking sinner.

If thou wilt, therefore, anxious, burdened one. It is all now in that word "wilt"—narrowed to that point—hinging upon thy will—depending upon thy free choice. The responsibility is wholly thine. If thou wilt, thou shalt be saved as thou readest. The great matter is settled when the citadel of the will capitulates. God says "I will"; and if thy response is "I will," the line will be crossed, the passage made from death to life. The Holy Spirit, who is striving with thee, and graciously aiding thee, will lead thee into the embrace of Jesus.

"Close to God."

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

THE peace, the purity, and the power of every child of God depends very much upon his or her living very nigh to our Heavenly Father. It is well for us not only to sing "Nearer, my God, to Thee," but also to pray—"Nearer, O God, to me." We are too apt to think of Him as dwelling at an infinite distance from us—not as a Father close by us. His actual nearness should be both a solemn caution and a sweet comfort. Not a thought in our inmost heart is concealed from Him; not a secret sin we commit that is not as visible to his all-searching eye as the noonday sun. This ought to have a prodigious restraining power upon us.

What a comfort it is that God is so close to us that He is always within speaking distance! A Christian's prayer is not a message dispatched to a far-away throne; it is his intimate converse with One near at hand. Childlike faith reverently and lovingly talks with God, breathes confession of sin into his open ear, tells Him its secrets; and unbosoms the whole soul to him. In perplexity and trouble we want a helper near at hand.

Abraham Lincoln once said, "I have been driven many times to my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I had nowhere else to go. My own wisdom and that of all about me seemed insufficient for that day." What the heroic President often felt amid his distressing perplexities, we have often felt in life's dark hours. The child-feeling is awakened in us, and we want an Almighty Father close by us that we can talk to and lean upon. The persecuted Apostle in Cæsar's judgment-hall, with guards in iron mail on every side, realized this cheering truth when he said, "No man stood by me, but all men forsook me; notwithstanding, the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me."

The sincere prayer of the Christian is a breathing of the heart's desire into an ear that is close at hand. I do not believe that ear is ever deaf to the humble, honest prayer of faith. Every proper desire from the heart of God's child obtains recognition, and a proper answer in the heart of God Himself. The pull of our prayer may not seem to move the everlasting throne, but—like the pull on a line from the bow of a boat—it may draw us into closer fellowship with God, and into fuller harmony with his wise and holy will. When our desires chime with the will of God, we are sure to receive some blessing.

If we live near to our Heavenly Father, we shall strive to realize his constant companionship. Wherever a devout soul meets God is a sacred spot, whether it be like Jacob's solitary pillar of stone, or a Sabbath sanctuary. We ought to make the workshop, the counting-room, the study, the kitchen, and the farmer's field sacred with God's presence. The nursery in which the pious mother trains her child is one of God's dwelling-places; and I have seen many a sick chamber that was the vestibule of heaven. Happy the pastor who, returning to his study for his year's work, finds both his Bible open and the mercy-seat close beside him, with precious promises strewn thick about it! The nearer he gets to his Lord and Master in that study, the nearer will he get to the hearts of his people, both in his pastoral work and in his pulpit. The man of business who gets a little time with God in the morning, over his Bible or on his knees, will go into the tumult of the day all the stronger. To hem the day with prayer will keep it from ravelling out into many a folly or a sin. Stout old Luther used to say that he "could not get on without two hours a day in prayer and close fellowship with God."

The "higher life" is simply living close to God, on the Sabbath in his sanctuary, and through the week in our dwellings and places of business. It is keeping our citizenship in heaven, and our eyes above the blinding mists of worldliness, and our hearts in close touch with our Divine Master. They that thus wait on God shall renew their strength; they shall mount up as eagles. Their outlook is wide; their spiritual atmosphere is bracing; their fellowship with their Father and their Saviour is sweet; they rehearse a great deal of heaven before they get there. Close to God here, they will find the gates of pearl opening to them all in good time, and they will go in to be "for ever with the Lord!"

The Martyrs of Sinim.

In the terrible massacres and persecutions in China some 150 missionaries are known to have been killed, while sixty-three are still missing. Tens of thousands of native Christians have died for the testimony of Jesus. Nor is the end yet. Before their martyrdom the missionaries were hounded into caves in the mountains like wild beasts. They are those "of whom the world was not worthy."

O'er seas and lands, from kindred far,
To Sinim's peopled plain,
They bore the torch of truth and light,
Nor shed its wealth of love in vain.
Behold! the rising of his star
Breaks up the Asian night.

Wondrous the love they sang it o'er,
That sent us in his name,
To preach the riches of his grace,
And tell the heathen Jesus came
To liberate our fallen race,
And these on Sinim's shore.

In perils oft, in wanderings drear,
In caves, on mountain side,
In deserts pressed by alien horde,
In court and mart by mandate tried
Nor did they sword or scourging fear,
Brave witnesses of God.

Those all too short, though fruitful years
In China's storm-swept field,
Sealed though it be with blood to-day,
Seed to the kingdom's life must yield.
Then, Saviour, be with us who stay,
Thyself dispel our fears.

Jesus, who thus didst bear the cross,
To save this world of woe,
Did not thy sufferings suffice?
Why here this other cross bestow,
And seeming grant thy cause the loss?
Tell us the secret, Christ.

"O Saviour, God, forgive," they prayed,
"They know not what they do."
So we'd repeat this song divine,
Before Thee, Jesus, Master, too;
That through our lives it may be said,
"Thy will be done," not mine.

Light of the ages, be adored!
Exalt thy blood-stained sign:
Till all the sons of darkness see
The brightness of Thy glory shine;
Till earth redeemed shall own Thy word,
And worship only Thee.

West London Open-Air Mission.—This Mission, which was inaugurated by Mr. J. J. Salmon in 1894, continues to be maintained amid many tokens of blessing. Open-air Gospel meetings are held regularly at Kensal Road and Lancaster Road, where testimonies are often heard from the lips of those who have been brought to accept Christ through the preaching of the Mission workers. The Mission Hall has been enlarged during the year, and here Sunday school, Band of Hope, Clothing Club, &c., are carried on week by week. Gifts of literature for distribution in lodging-houses, public-houses, and at prison gates, and other help, may be addressed to Mr. Salmon, 21, Kensal Road, Westbourne Park, W.

Journeys in South America.

In a recent communication, Mr. A. R. Stark, of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, details a voyage round the coast of South America, calling at ports, interviewing missionaries, and seeing something of their labours. He proceeds:—For centuries South America has been under the galling yoke of a perverted Christianity. The influence of Rome has been destructive and ruinous. She came as a carnal conqueror. And from Pizarro to Pierola she has raised the crucifix in one hand, and wielded the sword with the other. But men of thought have ceased to believe in the lifeless mummeries of Romanism, and have turned from it to infidelity.

From Panama to Patagonia, from Patagonia toPará, from Valparaiso to Buenos Ayres, there are earnest missionaries preaching the Gospel, colporteurs scattering the Word of God, Christian schools influencing the rising generations, and Christian papers heralding the message of liberty by the truth.

Chili is open to the Gospel. The Chilians are called the Britishers of South America, and there is ground for the statement. They have a lot of energy, and every port is alive with commerce. Here a Protestant chapel may stand side by side with Rome's proud cathedral, and chimney stacks and factories take the place of steeples and churches. Iquique is the first port of note at which we touch. The Methodist Church of the States has a progressive work in this busy port of over 16,000 inhabitants. There are an English and native church, Sunday-schools, a large school which attracts boys from Peru and Bolivia. The Railway Mission, founded, and for years carried on, by Mr. and Mrs. Ridings, has the esteem and sympathy of the religious community.

Antofagasta is a port of considerable size and importance. From it a railway runs up into Bolivia. Factories and chimneys are more noticeable than church spires—there is only one Romish Church in Antofagasta. Here the Methodist Episcopal Church has one representative, who fills the triple office of pastor, Sunday-school superintendent, and colporteur. This faithful worker has into Bolivia, carrying with him his magic-lantern, and has preached the Gospel in Oruro, Uyuni, and several other towns near the railway.

The most imposing and progressive city of the West Coast of South America is Valparaiso. Here the flags of many nationalities fly. Chief among them are those of Protestant England and Germany. The English and German colonies sustain services in their mother tongue. In missionary enterprise the American Presbyterians and Methodists are both represented. There are also promising schools and active Christian Endeavour Societies.

Leaving Valparaiso, the South American Missionary Society has been labouring among the Araucanian Indians of the Lota region. The Christian Alliance and the Methodist Episcopal Church of the States are also at work among the Spanish-speaking people.

Over 1,100 miles south of Valparaiso is Punta Arenas, the most southerly city in the world. Nearly sixty years ago the heroic missionary Captain Allen Gardiner began work in this desolate region, which has been continued by the devoted workers of the South American Missionary Society.

From Punta Arenas we crossed to the Falkland Islands. These miserable islands present a desolate and wretched aspect. It is a treeless place. The land is everywhere covered with a peaty soil and wiry brown grass. Port Stanley, however, is a pretty little town, and, after South American republics, one is struck by the prosperity and cleanliness of this British outpost. There is a warm Christian spirit in the port. Mr. Browning is responsible for the work at present among the Nonconformists. They have a neat little iron building which they call the Tabernacle.

Monte Video, the capital of Uruguay, is a beautiful city of over 250,000 inhabitants. The University is the most notable building in the city and is in striking contrast with the dilapidated Cathedral.

The energetic pastor of the English Methodist Episcopal congregation is Rev. E. Howard. The church building was once a theatre, but has been reformed and has a seating capacity for over 500 people. Dr. Thompson, an orator and a missionary of many years' service, represents the Spanish congregation of the same denomination. His work is well organized: morning service, Sunday-school, and Bible classes. The young men of his congregation have formed an Anti-Clerical and Patriotic League, to battle against the abuses of Rome and

STAND FOR LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE.

Early in the morning we entered the harbour of Rio de Janeiro. It was a pleasure to shake hands with a large number of young Christian Brazilians who came on board to welcome Mr. Clarke, the Y.M.C.A. Secretary at Rio, who had been on a visit to Buenos Ayres. They are earnest young fellows, saved from Rome, infidelity, and immorality. As in other Republics of the Neglected Continent, the converts have suffered for their faith. We were deeply impressed by what we saw of the work here, especially that under the direction of native pastors. The Y.M.C.A., whose secretary is supported by the New York Association, has excellent premises, and meets a pressing need in this city. It has a membership of 200, and issues a fortnightly bulletin. No reference to missionary labour in Brazil would be complete without speaking of the splendid work which the Bible societies are accomplishing.

But with all that has been done, the fringe of this great continent has only been worked. Beyond the dominant races—Spanish and Portuguese—there are tribes and nations living amid the impenetrable gloom of a Brazilian forest, and on the great bleak punas of the Andean highlands of Peru, Ecuador, and Bolivia, without Christ and without hope. Prominent among this vast number are the Quechua, Aymará, and Guaraní races. Over the Aymará and the Quechua Indians of the Andes Papal Rome has cast her gloomy mantle, exercises a deep-rooted influence, and cultivates a more demoralising idolatry than their once simple worship of Nature. May the light of the Gospel soon be carried into these habitations of darkness!

Paris City Mission.

To fill the vacancy on the staff of the Paris City Mission, occasioned by the death of the lamented Mons. Claveau, another ex-Roman Catholic priest, M. Vigier, has been appointed, relying on the London Committee to raise, through subscriptions in Great Britain, the sum of £50 per annum, an equal amount being subscribed in France towards his support. Before his conversion to Protestantism, M. Vigier was a Professor in various establishments for the deaf and dumb, of whom there are 3,000 in Paris, and among these his ministry will be continued. He recently instituted regular worship in one of the McAll Mission Halls, where every Sunday a hundred or more deaf mutes assemble to receive the Gospel in the language of signs.

M. Vigier does not confine himself to preaching, but having obtained the addresses of some two thousand deaf mutes, he has already visited over 500, who have gratefully appreciated his sympathy and labour in as pronounced a manner as their affliction will allow. Many have been induced to legitimatize their unions by marriage; the Word of God is now read in many families; and numbers have been led to attend the sanctuary as a result of his visitation. Twelve missionaries are now employed by the Paris City Mission. The financial secretary is Mr. H. E. Weyland, 14, Nicoll Road, Harlesden, N.W.

Persecution in Portugal.

His Majesty the King of Portugal on Thursday last received at Buckingham Palace a deputation of the Evangelical Alliance with reference to recent invasion on religious liberty in Lisbon (particulars of which, it will be remembered, were given in our last issue). Lord Kinnaird, vice-president, and Mr. John Paton, hon. treasurer, attended on behalf of the Council, and presented a petition, which stated that the Evangelical Alliance is a union not of churches, but of individual Christians all over the world, allied together on the basis of a common faith in Christ and their common love to Him, and including representatives of all the churches; that this Alliance has been in operation since 1846, and that it has year by year, during the last fifty-four years, striven for the establishment of religious liberty in all parts of the world, believing that it is the principle established in our very nature, and affirmed also in the Word of God, that each man should be at liberty to approach and to worship his Creator without hindrance.

The petition stated that early in the present year, whilst the various Protestant congregations in Lisbon were assembled in the Week of Prayer arranged for all countries by the Evangelical Alliance, their representatives were summoned before the criminal judge, and were told that they must cease at once their religious meetings on pain of prosecution; that subsequently the Presbyterian native congregation, as well as the meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association, had been stopped by the police. Some assurance has since been given by the Civil Governor of Lisbon that the interruption of the services by the police would not be persisted in; but the Evangelical Alliance would feel most grateful to the King if he would consent to endorse such a promise for the future, and that he would of his free grace and sovereign mercy grant to all Christians throughout his dominions full liberty of religious worship, in the same manner as has long been bestowed upon all Roman Catholics throughout the British empire.

His Majesty received the Deputation most graciously. He said he was glad to welcome the Council of the Alliance, and to tell them that the matter had been brought under his notice by their letter. He also added that he at once ordered the authorities to cease further undue interference. He was much pleased to assure the members of the Alliance that it was his distinct wish that religious liberty should be granted to all Protestant Christians throughout his dominions, and that it was his determination to enforce this rule. He also said that he had now given the necessary orders to ensure this.

The deputation, on behalf of all Protestant Christians, expressed their sincere gratitude to the King for his kindness and the graciousness of his promise, and for the very friendly spirit which he had shown to the English people.

Darjeeling Memorial Hall.—The project for a Sunday School Hall in memory of the ten European and American lives lost in the Darjeeling disaster has met with general approval and a warm response. The sum at present contributed is insufficient to enable the committee to commence operations. £200 is needed before steps are taken to erect the building. Help may be forwarded to Rev. H. Rylands Brown, The Manse, Darjeeling.

Marseilles Seamen's Rest.—The year 1900 furnished many proofs of the necessity and usefulness of this institution. The rooms for reading and holding meetings were open all the year round, and were visited by thousands of sailors of many nationalities. The chief desire and aim of the workers is the conversion of the men, and many have been brought to the knowledge of the truth, as it is in Jésus. A neglectful son is befriended and nursed in his sickness; another to whom drink is a temptation is accompanied to the station and seen safely off by train; the money of another is handed to the kind-hearted directress to be held until his return from sea. Thus the daily round of varied service is fulfilled; and to the sailor of any country a helping hand is offered and Christian sympathy extended. The superintendent, Mdlle. Merz, may be addressed, Quai du Port, 38, Marseilles.

A Leper Village.

BEFORE starting on my tour of the leper asylums of India, I was well aware that a good work was being done by Rev. H. Uffmann in the asylum belonging to the Mission to Lepers at Purulia, Bengal. But I was not prepared for the sight that awaited me when I accompanied Mr. Uffmann to the institution a few days ago. After many difficulties and much opposition from interested persons within the bounds, Mr. Uffmann a year or two ago secured an ideal site on a low hill just outside the town. Here he is bestowing the most devoted pastoral care on a leper community of 518 souls, in addition to which there are fifty-eight boys and girls in the Home for untainted children.

On our arrival we were greeted by many smiles of welcome, as well as by decorations and inscriptions, all meant to testify the gratitude of these otherwise homeless outcasts to the Christian friends who have provided this haven of refuge for them. Could the many readers of The Christian, who have helped this work, have witnessed what I have seen these three weeks past, they would thank God that they had been permitted to have any part or lot in it. Not alone the "happy, contented bearing" of the inmates, which so impressed Sir John Woodburn (Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal) on a recent visit to this Asylum, but the fact that of the total number only a few remain unbaptized, testifies to the marked blessing resting upon this work.

So rapidly has the number of lepers increased, that we are only slowly replacing the temporary huts, in which we were obliged to house them, with permanent houses. More than half the inmates are still in poor, thatched sheds, but building is going forward briskly, and it is hoped that in a year the whole of the thirty-four or thirty-six houses, all of which will be needed for the lepers, may be completed.

The village occupies a well-wooded site, and the property includes tanks and rice fields, in which it is hoped to grow a considerable part of the food necessary for this large family.

Recently a new and airy church has been erected to provide completely for the spiritual side of the work; two prayer-rooms are also needed, in which a few of the men or women may gather of their own accord for short seasons of prayer by themselves. This they are most anxious to do, and from their own small allowance of seven farthings per week they collected over £3 towards the cost. But they heard of the famine in other parts, and gladly and spontaneously gave it all to feed the starving. £10 will suffice to provide these two rooms. A greater need still is a dispensary and hospital, in which Dr. Karl Uffmann (who has just been appointed to assist his father) could treat the many cases of illness to which the inmates are subject in addition to the leprosy, as well as give special care and attention to the dying. For this £100 would be needed. J. Jackson, Organizing Secretary, Mission to Lepers.

Open Doors in Austria.

WRITING from Graz, Pastor L. Fulin says: "In this city, out of 150,000 inhabitants, there are 4,000 Protestants, most of them poor people. As they are obliged to support their own church, an orphan house, a small hospital, their poor and widows, they cannot afford to support a girls' home. A lady offers a home to abandoned girls and boys. I am assured by this lady that a blessed work could be done. I would help, especially among the Italian population, my native language being Italian. The Protestant Hospital is in want, and is much too small. Many have to be nursed in Catholic hospitals, where they are tormented with the Catholic prayers from the Sisters of Charity. In the villages there are many Protestants who have no clergyman or Protestant teaching. Here in Graz, during the last two years, 500 came out of the Catholic Church. But these people need to be taught. Will not England have pity on her brethren in Austria?—a flock without a shepherd!"

Sidelights on the War.

THE illustrated papers seek to give the public peeps at the awful scenes of the war, but only those who have heard the cannon's roar, the crack of the rifle, the rattle of the Maxim or the bursting shell, are able fully to realize its awfulness. "Another death warrant," said a soldier standing next to me, as the 4·7 naval gun sent a lyddite shell into the Boer trenches. But it meant some mother's heart broken, some wife's home and life made desolate, and little children never again to know a father's care.

In visiting a hospital recently, I met with a wounded Boer. While fighting he had been shot through the lung. "Jesus is mine," he said with a smile, putting his hand on his heart as he spoke. His case, alas, represents many. Of three sons, the support and comfort of Christian parents, one was shot dead at the beginning of the campaign, another at the battle of Pieter's Hill, and the third is wounded, his lung breaking up, and he sent home to die!

Amongst the Boers the work of God has suffered terribly. Dutch Reformed churches have been closed, and congregations scattered, many members being shot or in prison. Both in Natal and Cape Colony the same thing happened to our churches and stations. Ministers are returning, and, with the missionaries, seeking to collect their scattered flocks; but the war has left a sad mark which

IT WILL TAKE LONG TO ERASE.

In the midst of all this gloom, the wonderful work of God done amongst our soldiers stands out in bright contrast. It is freely admitted that never before in the history of our country has such a united effort been made to reach the souls of our men. On all sides we hear of willingness to listen to the message of God's love. The South Africa General Mission has been privileged to help very considerably, and has sent forth a band of consecrated men and women who have been greatly used of God.

Words fail to tell of the blessing attending the distribution of the Marked Testament. We have given away quite 5,000 in Natal and parts of the Transvaal. Our stock is exhausted, and still we get daily urgent requests from the front for "that nice Testament I have seen my comrade use."

I close with an extract from a soldier's letter:—"The Testament has cleared the mist from my eyes, and caused a few comrades to see the right way, and I am pleased to say we are walking in the same. I have got a Christian wife in England. I was a bad drunkard, and I used to make fun of religious meetings in England before I came out here, but by the Lord's help I can go home a better and a happier man than I was when I came out to this war." This is one of many received. Eternity will reveal all the hidden blessing.

Thonon Mission, Haute Savoie.

AS the years go by, the influence of the Mission Evangélique, Thonon, Haute Savoie, is telling in many directions. The number of those who have come out on the side of right has been most encouraging, and where hitherto there has been indifference and hostility a little conversation often reveals a deep longing to know the "difference between your religion and ours, Mademoiselle."

The visitation of the poor, particularly during the winter months, means the relief of many distressed and impoverished families. It is pitiable to witness the helplessness of the people in times of sickness. The nursing of them is undertaken by the workers of the Mission, and often proves an opportunity for reaching their hearts. Among the people a deeper feeling of liberty is evidenced by the numbers who gather for the meetings in spite of the bitter persecution which is often brought to bear upon them. The poor especially are made to suffer. A list of the poor, sick, and aged in the town is kept, and when any gift or bequest be made, it is given out according to the list. The Sisters are the only dispensers of these charities, and when anyone is known to attend the meetings, their names are struck off the list.

Communications may be addressed to Mdlles. Larritt and Wilson, Mission Evangélique, Thonon, Haute Savoie, France.

American Notes.

THE ANTI-SALOON CAMPAIGN.

MRS. NATION, of Wichita, is still on the war-path against the liquor traffic carried on in defiance of the laws of the State of Kansas. She has had several exciting experiences during the last few days. On Wednesday (Jan. 16) she visited Enterprise, and after a temperance meeting at the house of a prominent citizen, started for one of the two saloons in the place, armed with a hatchet. On reaching it, she smashed the glass out of the frames of the doors, and stepped into the place, leaving her companions (several ladies belonging to the local W.C.T.U.) outside. She broke the large mirror behind the bar, and destroyed all the glasses and bottles on the shelves. She then proceeded to the refrigerator, and, taking out the cases of bottled beer, lifted them high into the air and dropped them on the floor, cracking each bottle left solid after the fall. She kept steadily at work until Marshal Benham came, and, taking her by the sleeve, said she must get out. She turned on him with indignation, saying, "What are you but a murderer and a perjurer in protecting this unholy traffic? Either let me alone or take off your star" (the metal badge of office worn on the coat)! She followed him out of the saloon, however, and gave him what is described as "a blistering harangue" before the interested crowd of onlookers. On proceeding to the other saloon, she found no plate glass exposed to attack, and the Marshal would not permit her to chop down the doors.

On Saturday Mrs. Nation encountered a hostile mob in Topeka, the capital of the State, and was quite roughly handled. She arrived in the city between six and seven o'clock in the evening, and immediately hunted up a newspaper reporter, with a request that she be shown some of

THE LEADING SALOONS OF THE CITY.

Two newspaper men volunteered to pilot her around. The keepers of the saloons had been apprised of her intentions, and when she arrived at one on Kansas Avenue, the wife of the proprietor rained blow after blow on her head with a broomstick, while the husband stood by and encouraged the effort. A large crowd gathered, among whom were numerous sympathizers with Mrs. Nation.

On Sunday she had an immense number of callers at the parsonage of the United Brethren Church, where she was staying. In the crowd of visitors were many prominent temperance workers and leading members of the State and local W.C.T.U. She was assured by them that her work for the temperance cause was appreciated, and many ladies volunteered to assist in her labour of breaking up the saloons of the country.

Mrs. Nation's campaign is not only meeting with great success in the Sunflower State, but inspiring similar action in other States where her imitators have not the support of the law. On Tuesday (Jan. 22) the Kansas State Temperance Union, which was holding its annual convention at Topeka (the State capital) subscribed over 100dols. to purchase

A GOLD MEDAL FOR MRS. NATION.

When Mrs. Nation heard of this, she cried a little, and then said she would not have any medal, but would take the money and turn it over to aid the fund for her work. Later in the day she addressed the convention. Among other things, she said she would stay in Topeka till all the 120 saloons were closed.

On Tuesday tobacco was officially barred from the rooms of students in South Divinity Hall at a meeting of University of Chicago students at that place, and three divinity students who smoke must give up the habit or be voted out of residence in the dormitory.

Mr. L. H. Creager, who owns an extensive stave and heading factory in Washington, Indiana, started his fifty employes at work on Monday morning with a religious service of fifteen minutes' duration. The pastor of the First Presbyterian Church has been engaged for one month to deliver short addresses every morning, and if these ministrations do good, the minister will be kept on the pay-roll of the factory indefinitely. Mr. Creager does not belong to any church.

Miss Helen Gould has just added a donation of 260,000dols. to her previous gifts for a new Y.M.C.A. building for the sailors of the U.S. Navy, which brings her contributions for this object up to 400,000dols. The building is to be seven stories high, and contain 200 sleeping rooms, plunge baths, bowling alleys, shooting gallery, library, reading and smoking rooms, and an auditorium with a capacity of 500. It is to be erected near the Navy Yard at Brooklyn. The Admiral Philip Endowment Fund, now amounting to 20,000dols., will, on the death of the Admiral's widow, provide an endowment for the institution. Roger Martin.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, February 17. Ezekiel xlv.

In the division of the land, a gift consisting of about fifty-six miles square was set apart for the temple and the priests; a similar portion for the Holy City and its suburbs; and a portion for the maintenance of the royal family, that they might be at no necessity to extort money from the people. The prescriptions of vv. 9-16 indicate that the royal family had been driven to many expedients for raising their maintenance, but in the newly-constituted state it would be needless for them to do unjustly. So far from this, the prince would be able to supply the burnt and meat and drink offerings in the solemnities of the house of Israel.

In vv. 18-25 the prince is personally addressed and bidden to prepare and offer the burnt offerings. By the Levitical code, the offices of priest and king were jealously kept apart. Uzziah was stricken with leprosy because he sought to combine the two. But it was a matter of prophetic anticipation with more than one of the later prophets, that finally One should arise who should be a Priest upon the throne. Of whom can this be true, save of the Priest-King our great Melchizedek, King of Salem, and Priest of the Most High God. It is impossible that the sacrifices of Leviticus can be literally restored. Mankind can never return to the rudiments of religious life which have passed away from the perfect economy of grace. It is necessary, therefore, to look upon these rites and sacrifices as emblems of great spiritual facts. Ezekiel was writing to Jews who could hardly realize a future from which the material sacrifices were abolished.

How touching to notice the provision made, not only for the erring, but the simple (20). This term simple stands for those who sin through ignorance, who know not what they do. Such are included in the tender priesthood of Jesus.

MONDAY, February 18. Ezekiel xlvi.

The soul must keep its Sabbath. There must be high times in our inner history, when gates of ordinary traffic are closed, and when others which are closed amid the absorbing duties of life are opened. It is a mistake to live always on the same dead level, without girding ourselves to open special gates of communion with God. Be sure, once a week, to throw open some special gate through which the Prince shall enter the temple of your life. And be sure that, when He comes, there be burnt offerings of devotion, and peace-offerings of communion. Be prepared for Him. If it be ever borne in mind that the temple is a synonym for the human heart, a flood of light would come upon the perplexities which beset the interpretation of this chapter.

The commands of v. 9 remind us that there should be no reversal of the development of our religious life. We are not to return by the way of the gate by which we have entered; there should be no going back upon solemn resolutions and acts of devotion. If you have passed through the grave of Christ, you must never return thither to go back to the world. Always forgetting the things that are behind, press onward, and see to it that the gates are shut behind you, forbidding your return.

In v. 13, the soul is bidden to prepare its daily burnt offering. Every morning claims its continual burnt offering. The one solemn act in which we consecrated ourselves to the service of God must be renewed perpetually, as a straight line is the perpetuation of the first dot which the pen made on the paper. Every morning, also, there must be the meal-offering for communion with God through his Word, and the oil of the Spirit's anointing.

TUESDAY, February 19. Ezekiel xlvii.

This chapter must have been in our Saviour's mind when he spoke of the rivers of water which should flow from the believing soul, "As the Scripture hath said," perhaps refers to this portion of Scripture. It is therefore to be interpreted primarily of the influence of the restored people of God, when from Jerusalem shall issue those streams of blessing and saving power which shall influence the entire world of humanity. What shall the restoring of Israel be but life from the dead for the teeming myriads of the globe? Surely the chosen people are now learning the languages of all the world, that some day they may speak them as the missionaries of the Cross. But if this is the primary significance of the word, it is equally clear from our Saviour's quotation that each individual who receives the gift of Pentecost may see a reflection of the possibilities of his own life.

Do not be content with being ankle-deep in spiritual power. It is good when the goings are under the control of the Divine Spirit, but there is something better. Do not be content to be knee-deep in spiritual power. It is great, indeed, when our prayers are suggested and inspired by the Holy Ghost, and when, as we bow our knees to the Father, we are conscious of becoming vehicles of prayer begotten in heaven; but there is something better. It is blessed to be loin-deep, so that the Holy Spirit may be as a girdle around us, keeping our natural propensities under his control. But there is something better. It is possible for the soul to be like a submerged channel, through which the river of God, full of water, is ever at flood. Waters to "swim in," are the synonym of the "life abundantly" which is within the reach of those who allow themselves to be used to the uttermost by the Holy Spirit.

WEDNESDAY, February 20. Ezekiel xlviii.

We have here a division of the Holy Land. It is evidently an ideal division. Instead of following the natural configuration of the country, as in the division under Joshua, straight lines are drawn from side to side, as in the American United States, and the curious fact is that the tribes which in the earlier apportionment were in the extreme north are now situated at the south. It will be noticed that the priests and Levites are also specified as having extended territories, instead of being scattered throughout the land in their own cities. It does not seem necessary to believe that these arrangements will be carried into literal effect, for that will involve the re-establishment of a human priesthood which surely is rendered needless by the all-sufficiency of our Saviour's intercession. The whole conception is an exquisite vision of order and beauty, a glimpse of God's ideal for his people, from which, alas, they have grievously fallen.

The description of the city is interesting as the basis of the New Jerusalem, which descended out of Heaven before the seer's enraptured gaze. It may be that such a city as this will never be seen on earth in its literal detail, but spiritually there is now in mystery, and some day shall be revealed in fact, a congregation of holy souls, as differing as the tribes, but as one as Israel.

The presence of God is the joy and blessedness of his people. For God to be in the midst is the guarantee of safety. Over every congregation of his saints, however small and feeble, it is possible to write the mystic word Jehovah-shammah, The Lord is in the midst.

THURSDAY, February 21. Daniel i.

Nebuchadnezzar had defeated the Egyptians at Carchemish, and reached Jerusalem in the beginning of Jehoiakim's reign. Daniel tells us when the expedition started; Jer. xxv. when it reached its goal. On the capture of the city, the king swept back to Babylon a number of the young Hebrew nobles, not merely as hostages, but that they might be brought up in the civil service, and fitted for posts of influence in various parts of the vast Babylonish empire. It was in this way that Daniel and his friends reached the court, at this time about fifteen or seventeen years old. Their names were altered, to break as far as possible their connection with the past. Everything was done to incorporate them into organic union with the empire.

The food which was provided was probably such as the Mosaic law forbade (Lev. iii. 17; xi. 4), and which had been, according to the usual custom, offered to idols (1 Cor. viii. 10). Note those words: "Daniel purposed in his heart." It is all-important to have a strong, undeviating resolution inwrought by the Spirit of God. Too many of us, in resisting temptation, have a secret reserve. We barricade the front door, but would not altogether object to the back door being open. We do not realize the utterness of the condition of death to which Paul referred, as being "crucified with Christ."

God always co-operates with those who dare to stand for Him. He brought Daniel into favour; He gave knowledge and skill; He caused their faces to be illumined by the glow of health. Let us trust Him to do his part. It is the one secret of continuance (v. 21).

FRIDAY, February 22. Daniel ii.

This dream was perhaps intended largely for Nebuchadnezzar himself. The throne of David had crumbled beneath his mailed fist, and he might have questioned whether the God of Israel was everything that he had been wont to believe. It was necessary, therefore, that God should show that the king's power was part of the Divine scheme, and that it, with all other kingdoms, would ultimately pass away before the setting up of that Divine order which would last for ever.

It is beautiful to watch the action of Daniel. He wished to save the aged men, the heads of the college in which he had been trained; he also espied a marvellous opportunity of setting forth the greatness of Jehovah. There seems to have been no hesitation in his promise to reveal the matter (v. 16). He seemed so absolutely able to reckon upon God. He knew that it was impossible for Him to forsake his servant in the awful crisis. A prayer-meeting was then called, at the close of which Daniel seems to have lain down to sleep in guileless simplicity and unwavering faith. Only a heart as pure and true, as trustful and godly, as his, could have slept at such a crisis (v. 19). And in the night-vision he beheld the majestic procession of empire, from gold of absolute monarchy, to the mixed clay and metal of constitutional government.

There can be no doubt that our Lord refers to these five empires when He speaks of the "times of the Gentiles." Babylon was succeeded by Medo-Persia under Cyrus; this again by Greece and Alexander; this, by Rome under the Cæsars; and this by the European kingdoms which have existed to the present. There is, therefore, now nothing between us and the final setting up of the Kingdom that is cut out of the mountain without hands.

SATURDAY, February 23. Daniel iii.

May we suppose that the dream was in the monarch's mind when he set up this great image? The mighty conquerors of those days were accustomed to usurp divine honour, and probably this image represented his consummate pride and audacity. Worship was demanded, as much as an expression of a subject's homage as of a disciple's prayer.

The scene has often been described. The assembled myriads under the Oriental sun; vast in numbers as those immense crowds of Hindus which assemble to the annual mêlas; the glittering array of princes, satraps, viceroys, and distinguished men; the grouped bands; and in the background the furnace.

It took no small degree of courage for the Hebrew youths to stand alone when, all around, the ground was strewn with prostrate throngs, and it would have been impossible, if they had not exercised that living faith in God which makes men valiant in the fight. They did not care to argue the matter with the king, but they could die. It is possible for us to be nonplussed in argument, and yet to know the truth.

The main lesson of the chapter is, how completely God vindicates those who trust Him. Where no one else stands beside them, He is there to deliver. "He is able to deliver," is a sublime refrain. Even if He does not exert his power to save from the furnace, He is able to save in it. The Son of God, who is also Son of Man, walked those coals as if they were dew-besprinkled pastures. His presence robbed the fire of all power to hurt. The sole effect of trial borne in the grace of Christ is to consume the bonds by which we were held, so that we walk loose.

The Simultaneous Mission.

NOTES AND IMPRESSIONS.

FURTHER tidings of the London meetings in connection with the Mission, confirms the view that there has been a remarkable spiritual stirring among church members, and that many regular attendants, who had sat under Gospel preaching without coming to the point of decision, have sought the Saviour. The Bible readings, which were held daily at a large number of centres, were full of force and instruction, and proved specially helpful to many members of the various congregations. Where efforts were put forth to arouse the attention of the non-church-going population they were crowned with a large measure of success. Rev. Thomas Law, secretary of the Free Church National Council, is applying the lessons gained in the metropolitan gatherings to the arrangements for the provincial mission, which begins on Saturday next. Mr. Law is able to report that interest in the country has been much stimulated by the accounts which have appeared of the proceedings in London, and anticipates that vigorous measures will be adopted to secure the attendance of "outsiders."

In the matter of following up the meetings of the Mission, a good example is being set at Regent Square Presbyterian Church, London. Last Lord's Day Rev. Alexander Connell said that as the district immediately surrounding the church had been faithfully visited within the last few weeks, the duty clearly devolved on the members of keeping the hold they had taken, and arrangements are being made for the revival of an old plan by the allocation of the houses among district visitors.

MR. GEO. CLARKE AT FOREST GATE.

Rev. J. H. French writes: "One of the most fruitful series of meetings in connection with the Simultaneous Mission has just concluded at Forest Gate, the missioner being Mr. George Clarke. For weeks previously the churches united in prayer, so that on the coming of the missioner there existed in the hearts of hundreds a spirit of expectancy. The meetings, held in Woodgrange Baptist Church, were crowded, many being unable to obtain admittance on the concluding Sunday evening. A characteristic feature was the large number of men who flocked to hear the word of life. About 800 gathered each Sunday afternoon to listen to addresses for 'men only.' Christians have been stimulated, and scores of the unconverted have accepted Christ."

ISLEWORTH AND ST. MARGARET'S.

Rev. Wm. Steen, of Isleworth, writes in the name of the local Free Church ministers respecting the work of the above outlying places, where Mr. John Hawkins was the missioner: "Many young men and women boldly confessed Jesus Christ as their Lord and Saviour. One minister had the joy of seeing all his family brought to Christ. There was a very interesting men's meeting on the last Sunday afternoon, in Isleworth Public Hall. The last meeting was marked by spiritual power and enthusiasm. Some thirty or forty were calculated as having decided for Christ during the Mission."

THE WESLEYAN SEAMEN'S MISSION, Brunswick Chapel, Three Colt Street, Limehouse, one of the centres of the Seamen's Mission, under the superintendence of Rev. David Roe, was well attended. The Gospel was presented by Mr. C. J. O. Sanders, and the important truths of the claim of God, personal salvation, life, death, and eternity, were faithfully pressed home to the people's hearts and minds. The poor people from the back streets and hidden courts heard the Word gladly. Many habitual neglecters of public worship attended the services. One working-man said that he had not been in a place of worship for twenty-seven years, and there were others who had "almost forgotten what the inside of a chapel was like." The Out-and-Out Mission Brass Band from Old Ford greatly assisted in rousing up the neighbourhood, and inviting the people to the meetings. The outcome of the week's services has been a good number added to the Church, many temperance pledges taken, and an influence for much good in the days to come.

AN AWAKENING AT DARTFORD.

Pastor C. T. Johnson, secretary, Free Church Council, writes: — "Mr. Leonard Weaver commenced the Mission at Dartford with addresses to Christian workers. The faithful messages stimulated the people to pray and work. Street processions were arranged, and the people attracted. The numbers attending the meetings increased, and soon the building was too small. Mr. Weaver spoke with power. The last Sunday of the Mission saw a general breakdown. Long before the opening time the church was packed from floor to ceiling. During the day men and women cried out for mercy. Several husbands and wives started the new life together. Rich and poor, old and young, indeed families, came out boldly to the front, and considerably over a hundred professed conversion. Many touching incidents took place, and we all praise God for breaking the spell of indifference which has so long been on this town. Dartford Christians are rejoicing! It is estimated that the converts will number 300, and it is hoped that this is only the commencement of a general spiritual uplifting in the place."

STIRRING SCENES AT DEPTFORD.

At Deptford, where Mr. Josiah Nix was the missioner, a feature of the week was an effort to reach the frequenters of the public-houses in the district. Several brass bands united for a march shortly before midnight, with the purpose of attracting the publicans and their customers to a special meeting. The result was that nearly 300 men and women attended, including many rough characters, a large number of whom were the worse for drink. Sixty-five signed the temperance pledge, and several were spiritually impressed. A friend who was present expresses the opinion that "such a sight was never witnessed in Deptford before."

HEARTY CO-OPERATION AT WALTHAMSTOW.

The Mission, which was conducted by Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, commenced in the Public Baths Hall, with an audience of about 1,000, which steadily increased until it reached 1,500. On Sunday evening there were over 1,600 sitting and standing, with an overflow meeting in the Congregational Church. On Sunday afternoon we had a meeting for men only. In preparation for this the ministers of the town arranged themselves in groups at our three railway stations at five o'clock on Friday morning to meet the men going up by the workman's train, remaining there till eight o'clock, and handing to each man an invitation card. The result of this work was a meeting of 900 men.

Several very interesting incidents occurred during the Mission. On Wednesday evening, when the invitation was given to those who surrendered to the Saviour, to rise in their places, a man, about fifty years of age, stood up in the front row. By his side was his son of about thirteen. "Shall I, too, dad?" said the boy, "Yes, my son," was the reply; and, joining hands, they stood together. A wife gave herself to the Lord one evening; and expressed, to the worker who was talking with her concern for her husband, who was at home. He went home with her, staying for an hour talking and praying with them. The husband came to the meeting next evening, and accepted the Saviour. A family of four have all been brought in, the mother and daughter at one of the meetings; the father and son since. There were many similar incidents. Perhaps a new feature in united missions was introduced. At the request of Mr. Wilson, ten of our ministers have each told the story of his conversion. This awakened great interest. W. H. G.

MR. C. INGLIS AT POPLAR.

The ministers and churches of Poplar have been filled with praise to God for the Mission. Mr. Charles Inglis was the missioner, and the searching character of his addresses produced conviction in many instances. The inquiry rooms have been filled nightly with men and women seeking the Saviour. All classes seem to have been brought under spiritual influences. One feature has been the large number of elder scholars from the various Sunday schools who have trusted Christ. The singing of Miss Inglis reached many hearts. J. J. E.

MR. W. R. LANE AT REGENT'S PARK.

During last week Mr. W. R. Lane conducted a mission in Regent's Park Baptist Chapel. The attendance night by night was encouraging, and the numbers who visited the inquiry rooms showed that the Word had been preached with power. Many were moved to penitence and confession of sin. On Sunday afternoon the body of the chapel was filled, when Mr. Lane gave an address to men only. The service was of an impressive character. The speaker said he did not intend lecturing his audience, but rather to have a brotherly talk. Passing over numerous evils which call for constant attention, and confront young men at every turn in life, he spoke of Paul's advice to Timothy, "Keep thyself pure," and the urgent need for the apostle's behest to be observed to-day. With sympathetic and candid earnestness Mr. Lane pleaded for from numerous standpoints. Without being morbidly explicit, the truth was brought home in straightforward and plain terms, as well as in words of prudent warning and judicious counsel. The regeneration of the social conscience must be the result of the regeneration of the individual conscience, and while young men could not purify mankind or business, the discipline of a pure and sacred life is the charge of every one.

On Monday evening, when the mission closed, the great church was filled in every part with an audience largely composed of young men and women. There was no excitement, but a quiet earnestness of purpose was manifested in various ways. At the opening of the service, Mr. Stentiford—whose services had been enlisted to conduct a children's meeting each evening before the adult gathering—spoke with deep gratitude of the hearty support he had received from a large band of workers, of the crowds of young people who came to hear the presentation of the Gospel in simple fashion, of the measure in which the blessing had been granted by the Holy Spirit, and of the way in which boys and girls had been led into a knowledge of the truth. The audiences had grown, till they crowded the accommodation available to its utmost capacity, and the hearts of the workers had been much cheered by a meeting that evening with boys and girls who had come under spiritual impression.

Mr. Lane also bore testimony to the hearty co-operation, not only of the pastor and members of the congregation, but also of their neighbours. His closing address consisted of an account of the Lord's dealing in his own case, and at the close he gathered together those who had received blessing, for a few parting words of counsel about the privileges and responsibilities of the new life on which they were entering.

MR. HENRY THORNE'S MEETINGS.

Mr. Henry Thorne laboured at Fulham, where the centre was Dawes Road Congregational Church. Large congregations came to gether. Special features included Bible readings and a united service for Sunday scholars, while on the second Sunday there was a meeting for men, and on the following day one solely for women. Upwards of 400 men, women, and children signified that they accepted Christ as their Saviour. Subsequently, Mr. Thorne proceeded to Thornton Heath and South Croydon, to fulfil engagements for Gipsy Smith, who was laid aside by illness. There were large congregations, and deep solemnity attended the Gospel preaching. The workers directed a number of inquirers into the way of life.

MRS. BAEYERTZ AT WIMBLEDON.

We had the advantage of Mrs. Baeyertz' services at one of our Wimbledon centres, the church of which I am the minister, and we have to testify to wonderful blessing resting on all her work, for all which we can only lift up our hearts in thankfulness. The afternoon Bible-readings were greatly helpful to believers, and steadily grew in interest and power to the end, whilst the evening meetings resulted in great blessing to the undecided. Over 300 persons sought aid in the inquiry rooms, and of these we have the brightest hope, especially as the inquiry room methods were so devoid of the sensational. A clear exposition of and calm reliance on the Word of God was the one feature which marked her dealing with anxious souls from beginning to end. We cannot speak too highly, and we certainly cannot hope too much, from such work. (Rev.) Chas. Ingram.

REV. F. MARRS AT RICHMOND.

The Theatre was taken for the Sunday evening services at Richmond. The result abundantly justified the council. On the two Sunday evenings the theatre soon filled, a large number standing, and some being unable to get room. The secular papers describe the audiences as the largest religious assemblies ever known in the borough. The missioner was Rev. F. Marrs, of Nottingham, a kindly, brotherly minister, who has throughout given good Gospel truth. The week evening services, in the Kew Road Wesleyan Church, were fairly well attended. Every house in Richmond had been conscientiously visited twice. The congregations increased nightly, and every evening inquirers went into the rooms allotted to them. One or two evenings there was a complete breakdown. The Richmond students rendered magnicent service. Night after night the town was paraded by what the papers described as a "choir of gentlemen, with top hats and frock coats," who held open-air services outside public-houses. The closing meeting was largely attended and full of power.

REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN'S BIBLE READINGS.

A feature of the Mission at Ferme Park Baptist Church, was the series of Bible readings conducted by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, each morning at eleven. The building was well filled. On the Thursday, the subject dealt with was, "Waiting upon God in prayer." One of the points insisted upon by the speaker was that the churches need nothing so much as a return to intelligent prayer, which is not merely subjective but objective—we seek and find, we knock and the door is opened. To whom are the prayers of those in the faith directed? To the Living God. Heine said that behind all phenomena of Nature there is a Double-faced Somewhat. It is admitted by scientists that behind all the mysteries of nature there is Force and Mind.

But we cannot pray to Force and Mind. When we remember that London is not the only place in England, and that England is not the only country in Europe, that Europe is not the world, and that the world itself pales before the infinite splendours of space, and that throughout all one Creator controls and orders everything, we cannot assert that what is behind all creation is merely Force and Mind. We are persuaded that everything is guided by heart—the Heart of God, who is Love. When we realize this truth, then we want to pray.

REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

Speaking of the necessity of preparation for prayer, Mr. Morgan said he would not utter one word to discourage the youngest Christian believer from sobbing out his or her supplication, or to deprive them of the great comfort of earnest prayer; but he must put it as strongly as possible that, remembering the sublime

PRESENCE AND MAJESTY OF GOD,

it is incumbent that there should be due preparation for thoughtful and fitting prayer. The speaker went on to deal with prayer as the special privilege of all who surrender themselves in allegiance to God, and the necessity for looking to Him with the continual desire—"Lord, teach us to pray."

The meeting on Friday morning was an occasion of much refreshing to God's heritage. The address was particularly searching in its application to every-day life and Christian testimony. The subject was "Witnessing for God," under the conditions set forth in 1 Pet. ii. 9—"But ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession, that ye may show forth the excellencies of Him who called you out of darkness into his marvellous light." (R.V.) At the outset, Mr. Morgan expressed his intention of dwelling upon witnessing for God in life and character. The world needs nothing so much as a vision of God. All through human history, God has been endeavouring to reveal Himself to man. The result of that endeavour does not mark God's inability, but man's incapacity, just as Christ said: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." Passing over the revelation of God in the messages of the the speaker came to the supreme, central fact of divine revelation in the Christian religion—God in Christ. And yet He was not known and understood. After three years, listening to his teaching and seeing his works, none of his disciples knew Him. The revelation of God did not break upon their life until Christ had died, risen and ascended, and the gift of the Holy Spirit had been poured out. After Pentecost, Christ was nearer to Peter than He had ever been in the days of his flesh. From the text much could be learnt of the of the duties and privileges of Christians. The key was found in the words, "Ye are . . . that ye may." God intends us to be channels of communication between Himself and other men. The ineffable light has broken upon our souls, that men who are groping in the dark may find the light. These words of Peter indicated that the Church of Christ must be a medium of the revelation of God to man. All that God wants the Church to be, it will be in proportion as we are that.

The apostle is here describing four distinct phases of the Christian Church. An Elect Race. The word race here implies the whole order of beings which springs from one common order of life; not an association of members, not a company of people drawn together by the same thought, feeling or capacity, but a body of men and women united by one life. It is in the light of this phrase "an elect race," that "We are not divided, all one body we," and because we share one common life, communicated by the Holy Spirit through the

DEATH AND RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

A Royal Priesthood. The priest was one who had right of access to God. Peter says to the Church, "Ye are a royal priesthood," revealing the Church's right of approach to God. The access is due to no office conferred but to the life lived. We do not pass into the presence of God by any ecclesiastical office, but in the right of the new life. Coming to the words a Holy Nation, the speaker said this phrase is realized in the confines of the Christian Church, meaning a tribe of people living under one rule in mutual relationship, the Church in its true social aspect. It means a company of men and women bearing each other's burdens, weeping with those that weep, and rejoicing with those that rejoice, so that on the threshold of the church all the little differences that divide men and women in the world cease. A People for his Own Possession.—To be possessed by Him in all the details of every-day life in the service rendered one to another. A God-possessed man is one through whom the light of God shines on the pathway of men. This is the most marvellous of truths—a people for Himself, upon whom He may lavish his love, that through them that same love may be lavished upon others.

Dealing with the last clause of the verse, Mr. Morgan said it was easy to discern the excellencies of God which are to be shown forth in the Christian life. The elect race show forth the excellency of God in creation; the royal priesthood, in redemption; the holy nation, in government; a people of his own possession, living in the light of his love, show forth the excellency of God in love.

Crowded children's services have been held at Battersea, where the missioner has been Rev. W. Y. Fullerton. The congregations have numbered from 1,000 to 1,500.

OTHER CENTRES.

Mr. E. P. Telford conducted the Mission in Lady Margaret Road Wesleyan Church, Kentish Town. A time of great blessing was given, and some 250 inquirers were helped by the workers.

At the Tabernacle, Stepney Green, Rev. J. Fleming Shearer's addresses held the attention of the people from the very first, and the audiences at all the meetings steadily increased. The after meetings were very large. Many professed to decide for Christ.

At Devonshire Square Chapel Rev. Thomas Waugh led. The chapel was crowded each evening. On the second Sunday an overflow meeting, conducted by Rev. G. P. McKay, was held in the schoolroom, accommodating upwards of 400 people. There were many inquirers.

The Wesleyan East London Mission united its various undertakings for a central effort at Stepney Temple. Rev Peter Thompson led at all the services. The choirs and orchestral bands were an attraction. The district had been systematically visited by 200 Christian workers.

The Mission of Mr. R. S. Bradbrook at Slough was fruitful in a high degree. About ninety (chiefly young people) were led to decision. The Bible readings grew in interest day by day, and many testified to their helpful character. The Free Churches worked in cordial co-operation. A united service was held on the closing Sunday evening, conducted by Pastor Theo. Cousens, and addressed by Rev. J. Marsden. Several yielded to the Saviour.

Rev. John Spence, of Chelsea Chapel, conducted the services at Belgrave Presbyterian Church, Belgrave Square, S.W. All the meetings were well attended, over seventy persons professed saving faith in the Lord Jesus, and God's people were revived. The churches connected with this centre were Sloane Terrace Wesleyan, Chelsea Baptist, Belgrave Presbyterian, and Pimlico Mission. Mr. Spence has been much used in the South-West to the salvation of souls.

At Kingston-on-Thames, the services were conducted by Rev. F. H. King, of Bow, in the Baptist Tabernacle. A gracious influence attended the mission throughout. There were large congregations, and many of the unconverted were brought to Christ. The afternoon Bible readings, the railway men's meeting, and the children's services were all profitable. Open-air services were conducted by a band of singers. The ministers of the various Free Churches entered heartily into the work.

Rev. D. H. Moore, of Vernon (Baptist) Chapel, King's Cross, was the missioner at Bow. His sermons have been effective. The congregations have grown each night, and the mission was continued by other ministers. The number of adult penitents up to the second Monday was seventy, all of whom came to the inquiry room. Rev. Arthur Wood, resident minister, and Rev. John Grierson (Presbyterian) assisted throughout the week, and the people are much encouraged.

At West Hampstead Rev. Dr. G. S. Barrett gave homely, warm-hearted addresses, with simple illustrations. One evening his text was, "If any man is in Christ, he is a new creature." Paul did not say that if any man is in Christ his life is improved; or that he becomes merely an altered man. He said, "If a man is in Christ, he is made over again, becomes a new creation," and it is only the Gospel of Jesus Christ that holds out that possibility. Dr. Horton took part, and Miss Barrett, daughter of the missioner, sang Gospel solos.

At Brockley Rev. George Eayres was the missioner. His addresses were earnest, manly utterances. The services throughout were well attended, 100 friends were present at the seven o'clock prayer-meeting on Sunday morning. About sixty persons sought guidance in the inquiry rooms. A large choir rendered valuable assistance. Children's services were held at Lewisham High Road Congregational Church lecture hall, under the direction of Mr. Harmsworth, and proved a source of blessing to the young people. The special meetings for men and for women were also very successful.

The missioner at the Barnes and Mortlake centre was Mr. Edward Hurditch, of Brighton. Results among the unconverted were realized, but Mr. Hurditch's earnest utterances were specially used in arousing Christians and awakening the churches to increased activity for the evangelization of the neighbourhood. The Bible readings were particularly appreciated. The services for children, conducted by local brethren, Revs. E. E. Cheal, C. H. Homer, and Messrs. Cosson and A. Ellis, were a feature of the Mission. Numbers of the young people expressed a desire to follow Jesus.

At Ealing the Victoria Hall was engaged for the services, and the missioner was Rev. J. Tolefree Parr. The Sunday services were arranged so as not to interfere with the hours of service at the several churches. The congregations were excellent, and the attention paid to the addresses was remarkable. The proportion of non-church-goers was not large, notwithstanding that the Mission was well advertised, and the whole neighbourhood visited. This may account for the fact that the number found in the inquiry rooms was smaller than at some of the centres. At the Saturday night Temperance meeting eighty pledges were taken.

MEETING OF CONVERTS.

One of the most remarkable meetings for gathering in the results of the Mission was held on Friday evening at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Tickets had been sent out to those who had passed through Gipsy Smith's services, and had given in their names as inquirers, asking them to come to a special meeting to be addressed by the pastors in the district who had co-operated. To the surprise and joy of all connected, the spacious lecture hall beneath the Tabernacle was crowded to its utmost capacity with a vast and deeply earnest congregation, in which young men and women predominated, and in which there were also young children and older people. Mingled with them were the workers who had had the joy of bringing many of them to Christ. The officers of the Tabernacle, the pastors, and several well-known ministers, occupied the platform.

Rev. F. B. Meyer presided, and in his opening address asked all who had recently decided for Christ to stand up. It seemed as if the whole audience rose, and the spectacle was very moving in its nature. Many could hardly restrain their tears at the sight of this army which had risen to serve Christ. After commending them to God in prayer, Mr. Meyer requested those who had suffered persecution for Christ to rise, and quite a large number stood up. These Mr. Meyer congratulated that they had been counted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake. He then asked those who had decided for Christ, but were as yet lacking the full joy of assurance, to indicate their condition, and about twenty rose. These were afterwards most tenderly addressed by Pastor Thos. Spurgeon.

Brief addresses were delivered by Revs. D. J. Rounsefell, R. Milne, C. B. Sawday, and R. Browell. Each of these gave the new converts a text of Scripture, around which helpful remarks were made to crystallize.

Mr. Meyer concluded the proceedings by some earnest practical words, advising each convert to attach himself or herself to some church, to find some sphere of Christian service, daily to seek the direct conversion of some soul to God, and to be careful in the maintenance of regular devotional habits.

The meeting was interspersed by the singing of bright hymns and choruses, and many felt that it was like the merrymaking of the Father's house on the return of the prodigal.

Among books that are fitted to be specially useful at this time, is Special Missions, by Rev. Thomas Waugh, a treatise which concentrates the experience gained in a long and fruitful career of evangelistic service. (2s. C. H. Kelly.) The late Dr. Saphir's Christ and the Scriptures, is a book that is calculated to be of great service to workers and converts; many have read it to permanent advantage. Christ's Claims on Women.

A MOST interesting topic for study and meditation is to be found in the gradual recognition, during the Christian centuries, of the position and influence of women; and alongside this truth we have the corresponding acknowledgment of the claims of Christ upon women. It was the women who fought their way through all difficulties to shower their love upon Him. It was they who ministered to Him of their substance. It was to them He turned for rest, when weary with the work of the day. It was to them He looked to be understood, when everybody else misunderstood Him. That He should want their appreciation, their sympathy, their love, was

A REVELATION TO THESE WOMEN!

The present century has seen a great stepping forward of woman to her proper place; but in this there is a real danger. There is no more fatal mistake than for woman to enter the lists against man—a competitor with him for the highest place. There is nothing more disastrous than for a woman to change her sphere. She cannot do it without tremendous loss, first to herself, next to the race. To attempt it is tacitly to deny the very object of her being, to defeat the very end for which Christ has emancipated her. This is whither the rebound from her former position is leading the woman of to-day.

But there are very many who have recognised the danger, and have taken the path which leads to the

for them. Thank God for the thousands of noble women who have risen to this ideal, and who are to-day fulfilling the Master's will. But it is to the thousands who are just taking up their life-work with no thought of such ideal that we speak. Sister! the Master claims you altogether. You professed to be a Christian; you have consecrated yourself to his service. Pause a moment, and look well at yourself; count up your abilities, your talents, your powers, your influence. All these the Master claims as absolutely his property, to be used how, and when, and where He will. He wants your wealth of love and sympathy, that He may Himself expend it on his needy ones.

The Welcome Home, Canning Town.—A very profitable time was spent at the muster of the "Christian Life Boat Crew," on Tuesday, February 5, at Miss Child's Welcome Home, Canning Town, when sailors and others, from distances and close by, gave their experiences of the Lord's goodness. The text given by Miss Child for the month was, "Enoch walked with God" (Gen. v. 24).

Tram-Men of Milan.—A promising work is being carried on among the tram-men of Milans Prior to the erection of a suitable building, services. were held in a small hall, where tram-men assembled with their friends, and invited their companions to the gatherings. To those who have visited lovely but priest-ridden Milan, it will be obvious how wide is the scope for such work to counteract the result of Romish teachers and leaders. Mrs. Jane Cox, Alveare, 25, Via Correggio, Porta Magenta, Milan, will be glad to communicate with friends interested in this effort.

Y.W.C.A.—New premises have been opened in connection with the Putney Association, and a dedication service was recently held, at which a large number of members and friends came together. Earnest addresses were given by Revs. Aylmer Rouse and Professor Radford Thompson.—The report recently issued by the Rome branch of the Y.W.C.A., indicates that much progress is being made. Visitors and residents of many nationalities have from time to time expressed their sense of the need of the work, and testified to its increasing usefulness. The Sunday Bible classes and week evening classes for languages continue to be largely attended, and the intelligence and progress of the students has been most encouraging. The "Foyer" is a Home for the benefit of workers and art students, as well as young women seeking employment. A working party for foreign missions has been carried on with much success, and promises to become a useful branch of the work. The secretary is Mlle. Roman, 107, Via Sistina p.p., Rome

The Blind Poor.

UNDER any circumstances the lot of the blind calls for sympathy, but when there is added to blindness the additional burden of extreme poverty, the sufferer has a double claim upon Christian compassion. In meeting the needs of such afflicted people the National Blind Relief Society has long served a useful purpose; and under the guidance of Rev. J. Pullein Thompson, the hon. secretary, it has of late years extended its sphere of influence, affording timely aid to many of the distressed in all parts of the country.

The Society's remedial efforts are not confined within any sectarian limit; it includes representatives of various denominations within the scope of its bounty. Voting is eschewed, all applicants being dealt with in the order of application. At present there are no fewer than 660 persons receiving pensions, and in view of the care exercised by the committee, it may be taken that all these are cases in which the help is deserved. The work is carried on by a well-organized and as there are no office expenses, it will be seen that the Society is economically managed. An additional method of relief, and one which is especially welcome during these days of frost, is to provide the blind poor of London with cheap coal in their own homes.

Here are a few cases typical of those now aided by the Society. Other instances, equally sad, are frequently brought to Mr. Pullein Thompson's notice :—

A poor woman of a farmer family, who is deaf as well as blind, and a great invalid, and entirely dependent on a sister, who also has the aged mother to support, single-handed. She is a house-keeper, and nothing can be more heroic than the lives of these three.

A man, aged fifty-nine, never married; he has no relatives who can help him. Has only one leg, having been a cripple from birth. Was a basket and chair maker for thirty years, but his sight became very bad, and he underwent two operations at the Free Eye Hospital, and lost the sight of both eyes completely. He receives 2s. 6d. per week from the parish, 2s. of which he has to pay for a miserable lodging.

A woman who, with her husband, had a little farm, and saved enough to build a cottage. A few years ago her husband died, and she—blind for many years in one eye, and in the other for three or four—has lived on money obtained by sale of reversion of her cottage, of which she has the use for life. This money has come to an end, and she is destitute; has been very ill, but is recovering. She has managed to keep her home going, with the help of neighbours; but can do so no longer after this illness. She is just on seventy-nine years of age, has a blameless character, and is a truly Christian woman.

An old couple, H—— E——, aged seventy-eight, who has been quite blind for the last four years, and his wife, S—— E——, aged sixty-four, is blind of one eye, and had a successful operation for cataract on the other, last December. All they have to depend on is 3s. each weekly from the workhouse, and what they receive through the kindness of friends. They are a deserving, respectable couple.

D—— H—— W—— for twenty-four years occupied the position of cashier in a large foundry, and for the last five years has been struggling for a livelihood by selling tea. His sight is gradually getting worse, and being sixty-three years of age he finds it more and more difficult to get about the long distances necessary. He has a wife and two children dependent upon him.

During the past eighteen months ninety-six pensioners have been elected, it being one of the maxims of the Society that necessitous cases should and it would be difficult indeed to specify any case that is not necessitous. The scale of relief is from five to twenty shillings a month. In a quiet way, and by the exercise of devotion and industry, a great amount of suffering has been alleviated, especially among those who have once occupied good positions, and who have been reduced to penury as a consequence of their affliction. Mr. Pullein Thompson, who has many demands upon his time, as vicar of Christ Church, Chelsea, deserves the support of Christian people in his efforts on behalf of the blind poor.

The Scriptures for Jews.

ANOTHER important work of circulating the Scriptures among the Hebrew people is in contemplation by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. In this instance, the effort is to meet the needs of those who cannot intelligently use the Hebrew version which has been so greatly blessed during recent years. The Jargon translation which is now being taken up, has been issued by the British and Foreign Bible Society. In asking for the prayers of God's people that abundant blessing may attend the work, Rev. Samuel Wilkinson writes :—

The need arose out of wide Scripture distribution in Russia, and from the experience therein gained that large numbers of Jews can only properly apprehend what is set before them in Jargon. Of all existing versions of the New Testament the Jargon one of the Bible Society (called Judeo-German-Polish) was the best appreciated, and during several years we purchased and distributed some 30,000 copies of it. But it required revision and improvement, and this work was carried out by three revisers, of whom Joseph Rabinowitz was one until his death.

At length the book is ready. We have the means for the purchase of 100,000 copies, but none for the expense of transport to various parts of the world, for Gospel messengers to carry them, for the systematic proclamation of the Gospel by lip as well as by print. We give thanks to God for a translation which will make his own message clear to thousands of the lost sheep of the House of Israel. There is no restriction whatever in Russia (the most important as the largest Jewish field in the world) for the setting forth of the Gospel message everywhere, when accompanied by the circulation of the Scriptures. The door is open for extension of the existing centres of distribution. Each depôt opened is not only a mission station, but a radiating centre from which testimony by book and lip may reach scores of Jewish villages around.

We praise God for all that is being done now in London and the larger towns of this country. But we have in the British Isles a total Jewish population far less than that of Warsaw, one Polish city. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He may send forth labourers into his harvest;" and may we not only pray, but see to it that we are squaring our efforts and our sacrifice with our prayers.

Thorough Bible Study.

AN interesting and comprehensive syllabus has reached us from the Bible Teachers' College, Montclair, New Jersey, giving the outlines of some of the courses of study. Special importance is placed on series of studies to be conducted by the Principal (Professor Wilbert W. White, who is affectionately remembered for the Bible studies he gave in this country), on "The Bible and Prayer," and on "The Bible and the Holy Spirit." In addition to a carefully arranged scheme in each case, topics, questions, and passages are proposed for the consideration of the students, who are themselves invited to suggest others. Courses are also given on the Gospels by Matthew and Mark, the Acts and Earlier Epistles, the Teachings of Jesus, Old Testament Prophecy of the Assyrian Period, the Missionary Idea and Work as Set Forth in the Scripture, and the Bible and Personal Work.

One of the lecturers (Dr. Henry G, Weston), on being asked to suggest what prospective students might do by way of preparation, referring to a previous course at Chester, wrote :—

I have taught the men to study the Bible as they would study Shakespeare, if they wished to become Shakespearean scholars—studies about Shakespeare, the Baconian authorship, the life of the author, &c., are interesting; but a man may be an adept in all these and kindred topics, and not have a spark of Shakespeare in his soul. So I have left studies about the Bible to others, and have turned out my men knowing the book they have studied, and capable of standing an examination on it.

The Essence of Scripture.

ON Wednesday of last week, Rev. Professor D. S. Margoliouth (Oxford) opened at Exeter Hall, London, a course of lectures on "The Essence of Scripture," under the auspices of the Central Y.M.C.A. The subject for the day was "The Religion of Israel and the Religions of the Surrounding Nations."

At the outset, it was shown that ancient pagan systems were generally, if not always, marked by a spirit of tolerance; the best conception of a supreme god being only that of one among many, and conquerors finding no difficulty in adding the deities of other nations to their pantheon. When monotheism prevailed, however, the pendulum swung to intolerance. Tolerance is inconsistent with dogmas: "Matter which is communicated by teaching must be either true or false. The majority of those who hold to religion do so because they believe its dogmas to be true; and if they can show scientific reason for doing so, such a position is not fanatical."

The lecturer showed that the Bible bears the same relation to the sacred books of the East as the rod of Moses to those of the magicians, containing, as it does, the power and the life of which they have only the symbols. We forget when reading the classics that the peoples were religious, and that the books are the record of their religion. The early Christian Church knew this, and would not have gone to them except with something better. The main features of ancient and modern heathen religions were brought together, and compared with one another, as well as with the religion of Christ; from which it appeared that in the nations surrounding Israel the philosophy of their systems was known to but a few persons, and these probably belonging to a special caste.

It has been claimed that the religion of Egypt was originally monotheistic, but of the polytheistic character of the popular worship there seems to be no question. While the ancient Persian system was more philosophic than many others, it was after all not unlike those of the classical nations; and the pantheon of Southern Arabia can without difficulty be also rendered in terms of the gods of Greece and Rome. The inscriptions of Northern Arabia scarcely go back beyond the Christian era, but they contain many ancient names; while the Aramaic inscriptions, belonging to a more remote period, contain many names of unknown deities.

The Bible commences with a cosmogony, and derives the human race from a common stock. Thus the portions of the world which the heathen ascribed to a multitude of gods are traced to the one origin. The theory of pantheism is that there is discord in nature, while science finds harmony. In the Bible we find harmony and a plan. The disappearance of all minor agencies solves the problem of the universe. Monotheism produces harmony in the world, in the state, and in the soul. The whole family in heaven and earth is united.

Jews in Hackney.

UNDER the direction of Mr. Joseph S. Davidson, a useful and much-needed work is carried on among Jews in North-East London. The organization is known as the "Christian Chief Corner Stone" Mission to Jews. Gospel meetings are held at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, and at the Y.M.C.A., Hackney, where free classes for teaching English to foreign Jews are also conducted. The Jewish poor and sick are visited, and a kindly interest is taken in prisoners and their relatives. During the summer months open-air meetings are held, and every opportunity is taken to bring before the misguided sons of Israel the Truth concerning Christ. As a result of these services many have commenced to study the New Testament, and have given evidence of a desire to reach the light. Mr. Davidson may be addressed—5, Aden Terrace, Green Lanes, London, N.

A Familiar Text.

"I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

I CAN quite imagine some one saying, when he or she reads this text—"I have read these words so often that I do not want to hear anything about them." But will you not read them once again, and let the Lord Jesus Himself say to you—"I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life"?

Our lives are often likened to a vessel upon the water. Each vessel, when it leaves port, has a destination in view; but it needs someone to guide and direct it, or else it will never reach its journey's end. So it is with you and me; we are all going on a journey, and we need someone to guide us. The Lord Jesus is longing and willing to take us by the hand, and to lead us gently and lovingly home. Shall we not let Him have his will?

Some little time ago, a vessel put out on her first voyage. For a short time all went well, but then something went wrong with the boilers. For many a mile she drifted about, and the crew hardly knew where they were. One day the gunner went down to his room, and there on his knees he asked God to save the vessel, and bring him and his companions safely home again. At the same time the captain looked over the side of the vessel and saw the rocks projecting out of the water on either side, and the vessel seemed just to glide between them. Do you see how wonderfully God answered that man's prayer? And He is just as willing and able to guide you and me safely along the path to heaven.

There are only two ways. One is very broad, and to all appearances is very pleasing to the eye, but it leads to destruction; the other is narrow, but it is the way in which Jesus would lead us, and it leads to the life and peace of heaven. Jesus is not only the Way, but also the Truth. Perhaps some of you do not quite understand how you are to walk the narrow way; the Lord Jesus will teach you. David himself had to pray, "Shew me thy ways, O Lord; teach me thy paths. Lead me in thy truth and teach me" (Psa. xxv. 4, 5). And if we really ask Him, Jesus will lead us in his truth and teach us.

A little girl, who could not think why her mother was so fond of reading her Bible, asked her the reason, saying that she was quite sure she must know the book by heart. "No doubt I know it very well," replied the mother, "but tell me, Emma, what you did with the letters I sent you when you were at boarding school?" "Oh, I read them over and over again till the paper was quite worn with being so often folded and unfolded." "And why? I thought you did not approve of reading anything you had already by heart!" "Oh, but," said the affectionate child, throwing her arms round her mother's neck, "I loved to read them, just because they came from you, and because they told me all about your own dear self." And "is not the Bible a letter from heaven, my dear child, telling me of the love of that Saviour to whom I ought to be infinitely more grateful than you require to be to me?" And you too, dear children, if you will read the words of your Savour, will find that He will fill your hearts with love for Him, which is, indeed, only a just return for all that He has done for you; and that He will lead you in his truth, and teach you.

Then, lastly, Jesus, says He is the Life. I expect most of you think that you have life, and so you have but only one kind; but there is another life, the all-important one which Jesus gives to all those who believe on Him. You know the life of all the beautiful flowers which so delight us in summer months is completely hidden under ground during the winter, and the flowers seem to all appearances quite dead, until brought to life again, as it were, by the warmth of the sun. And so you and I are dead in God's sight until brought in contact with Jesus Christ, the Sun of Righteousness. It is only Christ who can give us eternal life. "for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved" (Acts iv. 12). I pray you to ask God to forgive your sins through Jesus who died that you might have everlasting life.

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bidst me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I come.

Just as I am—Thou wilt receive,
Wilt welcome, pardon, cleanse, relieve.
Because thy promise I believe,
O Lamb of God, I come." E. C.

Evidences of Conversion.

FOR YOUNG CHRISTIANS.

By Rev. A. B. Earle, D.D.

1. A full surrender to the will of God.
2. The removal of a burden of sin, gradually or suddenly.
3. A new feeling of love to Christians and to Jesus.
4. A new relish for the Word of God.
5. Pleasure in secret prayer, at least at times.
6. Sin, or sinful thoughts, will cause pain.
7. Desire and efforts for the salvation of others.
8. A desire to obey Christ in his commands and ordinances.
9. Deep humility and self-abasement.
10. A growing desire to be holy and like Christ (1 John iii. 3).

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 17.

Confessing Christ (Matt. x. 32-39).

THE therefore with which this paragraph opens is significant. It reminds us of the watchful, fatherly care which is over each of us as we go forth to witness for Him. The great invisible hand shelters you young people; you are of more value than many sparrows, the very hairs of your head are numbered; therefore be strong to confess Christ before men, though you be flung down from the ridge of the precipice where you speak for God. He, without whom no sparrow falls to the ground unnoticed, will give his angels charge that they shall bear you up on outstretched wings. Even though He shall permit you to suffer unto death, your soul shall be precious in his sight, and some day you shall hear your name spoken, amid the hush of heaven itself, by the lips of Him who can neither fail nor forsake. "The river of the confessor's life may be plunged underground, and be lost amid persecutions, but it will emerge again into the bright sunshine that eradiates the other side of the mountains."

Of course, it must be understood that the confession to which Christ summons us is not to consist merely in a single utterance of the lip; it must be the constant acknowledgment by lip and life maintained to the end. The context makes it clear that this confession will have to be maintained in the face of opposition, and that opposition in its bitterest form—the opposition of the home. Many of us would find it easier to face the torture of the stake, to resist the tyrant's frown, and the priest's persecution, than to stand against the light banter, unkind suspicions, and cruel words of those who live within the home. It is perhaps fanciful, and yet worth observation, that the persons who are set at variance with their kindred are all junior members of families, as if the young will always be more likely to gather around Christ. In every age there have been young Christian Endeavourers, who have had to stand alone, not hating their dear ones, but being hated by them, and destined to find their most dutiful love and care repaid by stony indifference or active persecution. Nothing is harder to bear, and there is no course for us but by patient continuance in well-doing to silence the enemy and the avenger, always believing that God will not allow us to be tempted above that we are able.

How wonderful it is that in the 37th verse the Lord faces the whole race of men, and claims their supreme love, asking that they should love Him more than their dearest, from whom they have derived, or to whom they have given life. He does not attempt to justify his demand, and the only consideration that makes his claim reasonable is that He is the Son of God, who died for us, and that each of us has a separate place in his divine-human love. What a rebuke lies in that word, "Is not worthy of Me." What a rebuke in "More than Me!" Surely in this sense there is no one of us worthy of our Divine Lord.

Christ asks for the surrender not of the heart only, but of the life. Self-denial for his sake is the badge of the disciple. It is a strange procession, cross bearers following the Crucified. Note those words "Take," and "His." Each man has his own special form of self-denial which is required of him, and the work must be undertaken willingly. It is only through self-denial that we reach to our best life. We possess ourselves only when we give ourselves away. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The number of Societies now registered in the Union of Great Britain and Ireland is 7,142. These represent every branch of the Christian Church.

The Newport (Mon.) and District C.E. Union provide free breakfasts every Sunday morning in the Corn Exchange for poor children. Succeeding breakfast there is a brief Gospel service, for which the street arabs have evinced a remarkable strong liking; so loth are they to disband, that it is somewhat difficult to bring the meeting to an end.

Ireland is discovering that Christian Endeavour may find a place amongst those who are deprived of one or more of their senses. A society has been formed in connection with the Home for the Blind, in Great Victoria Street, Belfast. All the members, except two, are deprived of their eyesight, but notwithstanding these difficulties the spiritual life of these Endeavourers is bright and real. Belfast has also a Society of Deaf and Dumb which is making good progress.

International S.S. Lesson.

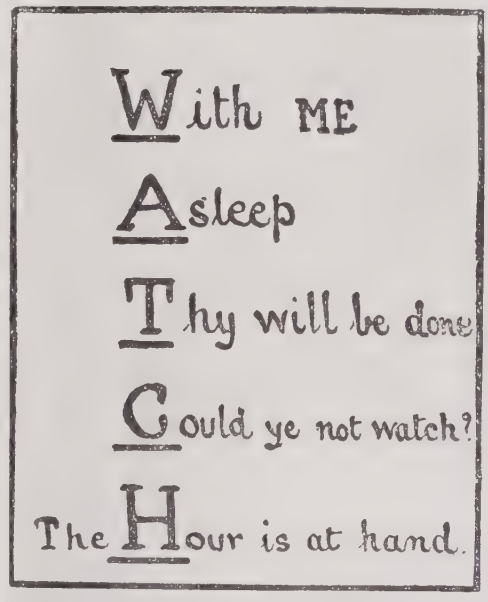
February 24, 1901.

Jesus in Gethsemane: Matt. xxvi. 36-46).

Golden Text: "Not my will, but thine be done." (Luke xxii. 42).

Introduction.

"SEE if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow" (Lam. i. 12). This sentence is about the clearest introduction we can have to the subject we study to-day. It is a sad scene in the earthly life of our Saviour. We may not go too close to that sorrowful and lonely Figure in the Garden of Gethsemane, for He even left his three chosen disciples a little distance off from the spot where He knelt in prayer before his Heavenly Father (39-44; Luke xxii. 41). And yet we may draw near enough to hear, while with bowed heart his gentle voice speaks and utters one warning word, "Watch."



Key to Blackboard Plan.—All the sentences which give us the word "Watch" come in our lesson, and we can learn how to watch by taking each one and looking at it closely.

1. With Me.

He had asked these three men (36-38), Peter, James, and John, to watch with Him, perhaps to pray with Him; what a request! And to-day He makes the same request to us. What shall we answer? With Him, in close communion, we do not know what peace, and rest, and calm we miss if we refuse. Come draw aside, and go with Him, it is needful for your soul's welfare (Mark vi. 31; Ez. iii. 22; xx. 35; Isa. xxxii. 18). Will you do this? You will never regret it. Do it daily, not only on Sunday.

2. Asleep.

"How could they sleep?" we query (40, 43, 45). We must not find fault, but first examine our own lives. "Asleep!" do we never let our thoughts wander when we are praying? Are we ever lazy and indolent over our prayers? Are we not sometimes asleep when we speak without thinking what we say to our God? or when we use a formal set prayer with no meaning? and which certainly does not come from our hearts? Let us awake, and rouse ourselves and pray in sincere earnestness. "Prayer is the Christian's vital breath."

3. "Thy Will Be Done."

Never was there a sweeter prayer, and yet how hard to utter (39, 42, 44). It comes from a life given over to God, a life in which He can work what He pleases, a life that holds all loosely down here. It is the highest-level living to live out that short sentence; yet Jesus did it, and He is our example. It is the spoilt child who wants his own way (John iv. 34; Heb. x. 7; Matt. vi. 10).

4. "Could ye not Watch?"

And only for one hour? (40) Is it too much to ask? Does not Christ say to-day to us—"You have twenty-four hours for yourself, can you not spare one to watch with Me?"

Oh ye that sigh and languish,
And mourn your "lack of power,"
Heed ye his gentle whisper,
Could ye not watch one hour?

Watch and pray (Mark xiii. 33-37). We have two other watchings to attend to.

1. To watch and pray against sin.
2. To watch and pray for his second coming.

5. The Hour is at Hand.

The time is over now (45,46), no more time for those three to watch with Him. He by prayer has conquered, and is ready to go forth and die. His will had merged into the Father's will (Heb. v. 7, 8), and by it He had gained strength to suffer right on to the end.

Our time for watching will soon be over, so let us henceforth watch and pray as we have never done before.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE annual meeting of the Eastbourne Association took place in the Town Hall on Wednesday, February 6. Mr. W. Langton, of Tunbridge Wells, and President of the S.E. district of Y.M.C.A.'s, who occupied the chair, remarked on the encouraging character of the report read by the secretary, and the prominence it gave to the religious side of the work. Stirring addresses were delivered by Rev. Hugh Rodger, of St. Leonards, and Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas. There was a large attendance, and it is many years since the Association has had such a stimulating and high-toned annual meeting.

There has been a substantial forward movement in the United States, where the membership has increased within the past year by many thousands, while no fewer than twenty-six new buildings have been erected.

Mr. D. A. Black has just concluded a three weeks' mission in connection with the Belfast Association. The attendances were most encouraging, at one time rising to the number of 900 young men only. The meetings were confined to young men, and numerous decisions for Christ were recorded.

The annual meeting of the Derby Association was held on Wednesday, February 6. Sir H. H. Bemrose, the President of the Association, presided. The report for the past year was received with great appreciation. Addresses were given by Rev. George Gladstone, of Glasgow, and Rev. J. Howell, M.A., both of whom urged the Churches to assist the Association by recommending their young men to join.

The English Year Book has just been published by the National Council. It is a well-printed quarto volume of more than two hundred pages, and possesses features of remarkable interest, not only to those actively identified with the work, but to all friends and well-wishers of young men in every part of the world. It is a comprehensive survey of Y.M.C.A. effort. It shows that the progress of the movement is steady and unvarying. It is a significant fact that for several years past over a hundred young men, encouraged and primarily trained in the Associations of the English Union alone, have each year entered the Christian ministry or the foreign mission field. The frontispiece is an excellent representation of the handsome stand which gained for the English Council a grand prize in the social science section of the Paris Exhibition. Striking pictures are also given of groups of coloured Association young men in Travancore and in Lagos; of buildings erected at Gothenburg and Cape Town and Chefoo; of a Y.M.C.A. dinner-hour service for working-men alongside H.M.S. Albion at the Thames Ironworks; and of a party of workers (belonging to the Soldiers' Christian Association, an auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A.) who wrought splendid service amongst the troops in South Africa.

Sailing Homeward.

I am sailing home to glory,
Over life's tempestuous sea,
God my many sins hath pardoned;
Jesus Christ hath died for me.

Sailing homeward, sailing homeward,
To the land of light and love,
To the many, many mansions
In our Father's house above.

Through the calm or joyous sunshine,
He is ever by my side;
'Midst the lash of angry billows,
He is still my Friend and Guide.

Yes, my Saviour is my Pilot,
Well He knoweth all the way;
Every quicksand, or cross current,
That may lead my soul astray.

Praise Him, praise Him, hallelujah,
I shall reach my home in peace,
Every baffling storm or head-wind
Shall for ever, ever cease.

I will surely reach the homeland,
He will lead me in his grace,
There to bow in endless worship
As I gaze upon his face.

Scottish Notes.

THE Chalmers Lectures, beginning this week in Edinburgh, are being delivered by Rev. John Macpherson, M.A., the general subject being "The Doctrine of the Church in Scottish Theology."

In connection with the approaching celebration of the jubilee of Rev. Principal Rainy, it is announced that it is his intention now to retire from the chair of Church History in the New College, Edinburgh, though he has consented to retain the principalship.

A proposal is at present before the Presbytery of Edinburgh "to consider how the Church can best assist parishes within the Presbytery where the regular ministry is unable to overtake the work," the mover in the matter declaring that some such step is necessary "for the purpose of disseminating the knowledge of the Gospel."

The accounts of the National Bible Society of Scotland show that the Society's income for 1900 was £28,647 15s., and the disbursements £29,096 11s. 9d. A request that the Society should publish a volume of Scripture selections in the Motu language (New Guinea) has been favourably received. Rev. Arch. Russell was appointed chairman for the next two years, in succession to Rev. Dr. Corbett, whose services were cordially acknowledged. The home grants of Scripture in January amounted to 1,524 Bibles, 385 Testaments, and 997 portions.

An interesting movement has been set on foot in Dundee for banding together ladies of the United Free Church in the carrying on of social and missionary work. In Edinburgh it has been demonstrated by a similar effort that women workers can do much good in seeking to reform those whose evil courses brought them before the Criminal Courts, particularly in exercising reformatory influences on youthful delinquents. Stress is being laid on the necessity for Presbyterial countenance and help in these as in the other branches of women's work in the Church.

In connection with the police-aided scheme in Edinburgh for clothing destitute children, it is stated that while during the winter of 1892 676 children were supplied with clothing, 712 in 1893, and 780 in 1894, through the vigilance of the police and warnings given to careless and drunken parents, the numbers had decreased until last year there were only 230 children to clothe. No case had come under the notice of the police where the articles were appropriated by the parents or guardians, and the constables kept a sharp lookout to see that the articles were worn by the children to whom they were given.

At Deer Presbytery an overture was adopted, asking the Assembly to consider the question of duplication and multiplication of Professorships, and to enter into correspondence with other churches as to the amalgamation of all divinity schools in the country, as well as the construction of one general faculty of theology. It was strongly urged that something should be done to prevent overlapping and needless expenditure of energy in keeping up separate seats of learning; and argued that if the Church of Scotland and other churches would agree to this unification, it might prove an important step towards a wider and a much desired union of Scottish Presbyterians.

The arrangements for the annual Christian Endeavour Convention, to be held in Edinburgh towards the end of March, have just been notified to the various secretaries throughout Scotland. These embrace a junior rally, Convention sermon, annual business meeting, reception of delegates, praise service, and public welcome meeting to be held in the Synod Hall. Prominence will be given to discussions on the attitude of the movement to present day evils and to home and foreign missions. The speakers expected to take part include—Rev. J. E. Roberts, Manchester; Rev. William Muir, B.D., Blairgowrie; Rev. Alex. Smellie, Carluke; Rev. J. Muir, B.D., Glasgow; Mr. T. Jays, Dr. J. J. Black, Inverness, and the presidents of the Scottish and Edinburgh Unions.

The Baird Lecturer, at Glasgow, for the current year, is Very Rev. Principal Lang (Aberdeen), his subject being "The Social Vocation of the Church." In the opening lecture this was viewed as interpreted (1) in the teaching of Christ, (2) in his constitution of the Church, and (3) in the thoughts which dominate the Christian consciousness and form the perennial springs of the Christian inspiration. It was then shown (1) that Jesus the Teacher is set before us in the Gospels as in correspondence with the moral reality of his Jewish environment. The Sermon on the Mount illustrates the social trend of his doctrine. Its summum bonum is the Old Testament ideal freed from the limitations of "them of old time," and clothed with a higher spiritual force and authority. (2) The social ideal thus impressed on the teaching is evidenced in the constitution of the Church. The reverent and intelligent apprehension of the incarnation contains an argument for social endeavour which is sovereign over the Christian mind.

Irish Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

IT is not unlikely that an order of Deaconesses will soon be established in Belfast. A committee has been appointed to consider the matter, and to report what would be the best way of securing the services in church work of a body of women.

The Indigent Room Keepers' Society at Cork, which was established as long ago as 1808, continues to do a good work, although it is hampered by want of funds, owing to the deaths of some of its best supporters.

Mr. J. B. Wookey, and a band of boys from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, have been visiting Belfast and the North of Ireland, and everywhere they have met with a cordial welcome, and have obtained generous collections.

Rev. Professor Heron has been nominated by the Presbytery of Belfast, and by several other Presbyteries, for the Moderatorship of the next General Assembly, and his election to that office may therefore be regarded as almost certain.

Miss Potter, daughter of Rev. Canon Potter, is going out to Uganda as worker in connection with the Church Missionary Society. Miss Chadwick, daughter of the Bishop of Derry, has been for some years in Uganda, and she will shortly be joined by her brother, Rev. Walter Chadwick, who has also been accepted for mission work in that country. Thus Derry will soon be well represented in the Uganda Mission.

Welsh Notes.

AN active and earnest Christian worker amongst sailors has passed away in the person of Mr. John Ellis. For over thirty years Mr. Ellis had been the Welsh sailors' missionary. At the time of his death he was seventy-three years of age. Mr. Ellis had the high privilege of being a personal friend of the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Toward the £100,000 which the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists hope to raise for their Twentieth Century Fund, no less a sum than £61,694, according to the latest report, has already come to hand. No difficulty is anticipated in reaching, and probably passing, the amount aimed at by the end of the present year.

The executive of the British Chautauqua has decided that this year's gatherings are to be held at Aberystwyth. This is the second time for the meetings to be held at the famous Mid-Wales watering-place, and the third time that the Principality has been favoured with a visit from this useful Association.

For the first time in the history of Welsh Wesleyanism, if we are not mistaken, an application will be made by a lady at the next meeting of the North Wales Synod for admission as a probationer for the ministry. The applicant has already passed the preliminary examinations, and her name appears on the plan of the Llanfyllin circuit, Montgomeryshire.

Some interesting facts concerning the Neath Mission are given in the last number of The Torch, the organ of the Welsh Forward Movement. As has already been intimated in these columns, this, one of the most successful of the undenominational missions in the Principality, is about to become part of the Welsh Forward Movement. At the present time the Mission can point to a membership of 300, with a Sunday-school of 600 scholars. Quite recently a wonderful revival took place, when some 130 professed conversion.

British Women's Temperance Association.

A SERIES of meetings has been held recently at Boston, in connection with the visit of the National Executive Committee.

At a public meeting in the Assembly Rooms, the Hon. Mrs. BERTRAND RUSSELL spoke on the present position of the work, and Sister MARGARET, Miss LILE, and others, gave addresses.

Mrs. PEARSALL SMITH presided at the executive meeting, at which it was agreed to send Miss Johannsdottir, of Iceland, as a World's White Ribbon Missionary to Scandinavia, and to advocate, among other matters of reform, the provision of temperance refreshment rooms at railway stations, and legislation on the lines of Lord Peel's report.

Jewish Almanack.—Workers among the Jews will find many openings by distributing the booklet prepared year by year by Mr. Henry Barnett. By an excellent arrangement, the great prophecies of the Old Testament concerning the Messiah are placed opposite Scripture excerpts for daily reading, in a manner that cannot but invite the attention of those who use the publication. Particulars may be had by addressing Mr. Barnett, at 94, Malmesbury Road, Bow, E.

Oxford Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

"THE Social Work of the Salvation Army," was the title of an address given by Mrs. Bramwell Booth at the Town Hall on Tuesday, the Mayor presiding. Mrs. Booth spoke of the members of the Army as a body of people raised from among the poor to help the poor. One of their greatest difficulties was the drink, and it was a fact that every member of the Salvation Army was a sworn teetotaler. The Social Scheme consisted of 536 different institutions, and every night they had an assembly of some 18,000 under their roof.

Bishop Chavasse preached the University sermon on Sunday week from the text, "Them that honour Me, I will honour" (1 Sam. ii. 30). Speaking of the death of the Queen, he said that the wonderful outburst of loyalty was the most remarkable evidence that our generation can produce of the far-reaching influence of a high and noble character in the high places of the land, a character which had for its mainspring the fear and love of God. It was a living witness to the world of the imperishable truth of the words of the unknown Hebrew seer, "Them that honour Me, I will honour."

Oxford had a visit from Mrs. Humphry Ward on Friday, when she spoke in the hall of Balliol, Dr. Caird (Principal) presiding. Her subject was the establishment of Day Schools for Crippled and Invalid Children. She made a powerful appeal, illustrating her address from the work of the London School Board, which of late years has added to its enormous work the care of the blind, deaf, lame, and feeble-minded children. Two years ago a school was opened specially for the lame and delicate, and very interesting was Mrs. Ward's account of the work going on. They have now forty-five children on the register. It had been suggested that to mass these children together would have a very depressing effect, but the opposite was the case; the cheerfulness and happiness of the little ones was the most marked feature of the place. Rev. R. L. Phelps, chairman of the Charity Organization Society, expressed a hope that such a school would be established at Oxford. The work is one which must please Him who loved the little ones, and who said, "It is not the will of your Father who is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

Canon Christopher's Missionary Breakfast was held on Saturday morning in the Town Hall, and was as representative as ever. It is a unique sight: men of all schools sitting together to hear an address from some tried missionary. The speaker this year was the Bishop of Mombasa, who has also spent nearly twenty years in India.

The venerable rector of St. Aldate's spoke an earnest word during the breakfast, and drew attention to a packet of missionary literature which had been placed on the tables. The Bishop told us he received his first missionary impulse from a newspaper taken up in a dining-room. One of the most hopeful signs of work in India the Bishop considers to be the building up of the better class of Hindoo Christians, who shall evangelize their own people. This work is being carried on largely by young university men. Turning from India to Africa, the Bishop dwelt on what he called the opening of East Africa to the Gospel. This was an invitation of a company of chiefs at present living in heathenism to send them teachers. Occasionally a missionary has passed through, and they have remembered him, but they want "the Book" and "the teaching." The Bishop thinks it is the lives of the missionaries which are telling even more than their teaching.

Springwell Rescue House, 7, Henderson Terrace, Edinburgh.—This Home has been in existence for twenty-four years, having been opened by Mrs. Millar, of Sheardale, who has continued during all these years to take the deepest interest in its welfare. It has done much good work as a temporary shelter for young women who have gone astray. After staying a few days, during which they recover somewhat from the evil effects of their lives, the girls are sent to training homes in the city, where, on remaining eighteen months, they are provided with an outfit and a situation, thereby making a fresh start in life. During the short time the girls remain in Springwell, they are under direct Christian influence, and often receive spiritual impressions which remain with them, and bear fruit even after many days. The Home is open day and night, and along with the matron there is a Bible-woman residing in the house, whose business is to go out to the streets and police-courts and bring in girls. More than 4,000 women have passed through the Home since its opening. The Home is supported by contributions from the public, which may be remitted to the secretary, or through the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN

About Books.

REV. DAVID BARON'S NEW BOOK.

MANY will welcome with a personal interest and gratitude the volume just issued by Rev. David Baron—The Ancient Scriptures and the Modern Jew. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The earlier part is devoted to Scripture exposition, the latter to a consideration of the ever-present "Jewish Question." Whether estimated in its sectional purposes, or in its intention as a whole, it is a book which cannot but instruct and help Bible students, and especially such as give attention to "the sure word of prophecy."

There is always a special interest in the view which a Christian Jew takes of his own Scriptures; and in his largely comprehensive yet minutely typical method of dealing with Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms, concerning Jesus, Mr. Baron has illuminated not only many passages, but the whole Bible. The chapter, "The Silence of God—how it shall be broken," has already proved of absorbing interest to many readers. We would there were more such interpreters of the Written Word.

The second part of the book—"The Modern Jew"—will answer the needs of many who cannot go to the various head sources of information regarding the "Scattered Nation." Mr. Baron gives us, to begin with, a Bird's-eye View of the Jewish People, with information regarding their numbers and distribution in the lands of their dispersion. He then reproduces the substance of Dr. Max Nordau's remarkable address at the Zionist Congress at Basle in 1897, on the General Condition of the Jews at the Close of the Nineteenth Century. Passing from this statement, strictly Jewish in its point of view, Mr. Baron gives us another, from a Christian point of view—The Religious Condition of the Jews, and Causes of Jewish Unbelief in Christ. This is from the pen of Rev. C. A. Schönberger, Mr. Baron's colleague in mission labour in connection with the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel. These pages are singularly forcible; their message could not have been presented more succinctly and with more convincing effect.

The remaining chapters will have special attractions for such as know little or nothing of the Jews from inside association. They include an account of the Religious Divisions and Sects found in Israel, a description of Anti-Semitism, notes on the Zionist Movement, and an inquiry regarding Israel's Mission to the World and the Church's Mission to Israel. There is also a chapter (originally a letter to an inquirer) on the True History of the Ten "Lost" Tribes, in which some very pertinent questions are propounded for the consideration of adherents of Anglo-Israelism. Other useful discussions are conducted in Appendices. As we have already intimated, this is a book which will minister instruction to many. An understanding of the Jews helps to an understanding of the Scriptures, both in history and prophecy. Mr. Baron's pages can be strongly commended for this end; and we cordially recognise their uniform spirituality of tone.

Anecdotes and Recollections of A.K.H.B., by D. R. Henderson, M.A., is a very interesting and readable booklet. (6d. nett. Alex. Gardner.)

Cash: How to Invest It, by "Experience," is a popularly-written and easily understood manual for the guidance of those who have the management of capital. (1s. Dawbarn & Ward.)

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin has issued a new and cheaper edition of Mother, Baby, and Nursery, a manual for mothers. By Géneviève Tucker, M.D. The illustrations of baby faces invest the pages with a peculiar charm. (1s.)

Speakers on temperance who find themselves at a loss for up-to-date facts, hints, and information, will find many useful "tools" ready to hand in Platform, Pulpit, and Desk (2s. Partridge), which gives 128 outline addresses.

In The Self-Witness of the Son of God, by Rev. F. E. Bury (6d. A. H. Stockwell), constant reference is made to the sacred text to show that the self-witness of the Son is the witness of the Father, and that it is true. It is then shown that there is, or ought to be, in the soul of the believer a confirmatory self-witness of all this by the Son.

An extra Double Number of The Graphic, published last week, contained an illustrated record of the Royal Funeral Ceremonies and Processions, from the time of leaving Osborne House to the final rites at Windsor. This number is in addition to the ordinary issue, also a double number, which contained further incidents of interest connected with what is reasonably described as the "most impressive funeral the world has ever seen."

The London Missionary Society has come to the help of those who need something to read at missionary working parties and similar gatherings. The help is embodied in a handy little book, Missionary Readings and Recitations. We heartily commend this very useful publication. (1s. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

Among numerous booklets published in view of the Simultaneous Mission, Rev. F. Bryan's Counsels to Young Christians is sympathetic and timely. To those on the threshold of a new life, its pages will minister spiritual direction and help for the sterner fight of faith. (1d. The Author, 15, Goldney Road, Clifton, Bristol.)

Mr. C. J. Thynne has reissued two works which, though small, are of great worth. Assurance, a study of 2 Tim. iv. 6-8, by the late Bishop Ryle, with notes and extracts from writers of the seventeenth century (9d. nett); and Christ Our Example, by Caroline Fry, with a preface by Canon Christopher, of Oxford (1s. nett). It is a pleasure to direct attention to two such excellent reissues.

Many will welcome Rev. Andrew Murray's new book: Thy Will Be Done: The Blessedness of a Life in the Will of God (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) It presents meditations for a month, and from beginning to end the pages display the spiritual insight and experimental purpose which characterize the best known of Dr. Murray's books. Here is expository light combined with practical stimulus.

The little volumes of "Heroes of the Covenant," which have been prepared by Rev. W. H. Carslaw, M.A., of Helensburgh, the well-known editor of "The Scots Worthies," have been admirably produced. After the sketches of William Guthrie and Donald Cargill, we welcome The Life and Times of James Renwick, M.A. (1s. 6d. Alexander Gardner.) The illustrations are an interesting embellishment to the volume.

A gardening annual which has reached its forty-third year must possess a good, healthy constitution, and have commended itself to at least two generations of lovers of horticulture, both professional and amateur. The Gardening Year Book for 1901 (Gardeners' Magazine Office, 148 and 149, Aldersgate Street. 1s.) is now published, and forms an excellent handbook and work of reference for those interested in the culture of plants and flowers.

Mr. Henry Frowde has issued from the Oxford University Press Warehouse, several editions of the Book of Common Prayer, as amended by the King's Orders in Council of the 24th and 29th ult., the second referring to the Form of Prayer for the day of His Majesty's Accession. They are of various sizes, and may be had bound up with "Hymns Ancient and Modern." The new Accession Service for January 22 is annexed by Royal Warrant. An interesting memento of recent events is furnished by the booklets, neatly bound in limp leather, and in various sizes, containing the Special Forms of Service in Commemoration of Her late Majesty.

Pardon and Assurance, by the late Rev. W. J. Patton, of Dromara, co. Down, is a book of special value, and from the fact that it is in its fifth edition one may judge that its worth has received fitting recognition. In a biographical sketch of the author, from the sympathetic pen of Rev. John McIlveen, of Belfast, we are reminded that Mr. Patton was a great winner of souls; in his ministry he aimed directly at the conversion of sinners, and sinners in large numbers were converted. The addresses which this volume contains are rich in teaching, striking in style, and eminently practical in drift. The pages abound in illustrative matter, and points well put; and the book will prove of special service to evangelists. Mr. Patton was remarkably direct in his preaching, and he has yet a ministry of help for those who would follow him in a service which is faithful alike to God and man. (2s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

We earnestly protest against the publication of higher criticism "made easy" for children, as it comes to us in The Bairns' Bible (No. 59, Books for the Bairns). We are entirely at a loss to understand who the "bairns" are for whom it is intended. The words may be simple, but the ideas certainly are not always so—for instance, when we read that, in what the author himself calls "the Word of God:" "No matter what difficulties there may be about it, what mistakes there may be in the old writings, or whatever defects it may have, these do not affect its power to change the lives and to give gladness and joy in the midst of sorrow and suffering." What is any child to make of the statement that—"it was quite right to call them the Books of Moses, but that did not mean that Moses wrote every word of them, or that he wrote any word of them"? We wonder what doctrine of inspiration covers such a statement as this—"The prophets did foretell things, and often very truly, and in a very remarkable way, and this they did because they knew the law of God"? Nor do we think any children stand in need of a warning that "we must not make" the Bible "an idol." The quotations we give are only a few from among many of the same tenour.

SOME STORY BOOKS.

Some Ups and Downs, by Raymond Jacberns, is a capital story for young children, admirably illustrated. (1s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.)

A touching picture of the life of a watercress girl is presented in the story, Busy Bee. The experiences of the little heroine in her struggle onward and heavenward are related with much pity and tenderness. (1s. Stoneman.)

Barfield's Blazer, and other school stories, is another piece of excellent work from the pen of W. E. Cule. (2s. 6d. Melrose.) The stories are bright, and replete with incidents and situations such as friends of our lads will enjoy.

Dorice; or, Not all Gold that Glitters, will charm and instruct the mind of youthful readers of both sexes. The story points to the cost of discarding the Apostle's admonition, "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers." (1s. Stoneman.)

Harold Avery is a capital writer of boys' stories, and his latest, Heads or Tails, the story of a friendship, is sure to be voted "A 1." It rehearses the scrapes in which its hero was involved, and from which he was saved by his faithful friend, first in the school world, and then in the world's school. There are striking illustrations. (5s. Nelson & Sons.)

Among recent issues by Cassell & Co. are: The Bravest of the Brave, by H. Atteridge. (1s. 6d.) The title designates a society, and the story rehearses the deeds of its members. A Self-Willed Family, by E. S. Buchheim (2s.) tells how a stepmother treated seven girls. There is life and fun in the pages. Ella's Golden Year, by E. Searchfield (1s.) is a story which little girls will read with interest.

Some secrets of successful Christian service by young people may be learnt from the pages of The Clayborough Endeavourers. It is the story of the inauguration and development of a Christian Endeavour Society, and the possibilities of the movement generally in its relation to citizenship are happily demonstrated. The book will command the appreciation of youthful Endeavourers, and the approval of those who are older. (2s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

WANTING IS—WHAT? By Maud Bosanquet. (1d. Partridge. A precious booklet on Christ the Satisfier.

Mr. A. H. Stockwell has issued a thoughtful booklet THE CHRISTIAN ORDINANCES, by Rev. George Menzies, of Arbroath, N.B. (1d.)

THE HIDDEN HAND—"Ireland's Sorrows: The Cause and Remedy"—has reached a fifth edition (68,000 copies). (3d. Marshall Brothers.)

DEPTHS OF COMFORT; or, Jesus Only, is reprinted from Home Words, as "a last paper by Frances Ridley Havergal." (1d. "Home Words" Office, 11, Ludgate Square, E.C.)

STOCKWELL GEMS is a collection of twelve numbers (1d. each), of attractive pieces sung by the Spurgeon Orphan Choir. Doubtless a wider circle than the listeners at the choir concerts will appreciate these taking melodies.

Two excellent booklets in the form of addresses for the young are: THE MYSTERIOUS ROOM, a striking story; and CHINA'S CHILDREN, a descriptive account by J. Forbes Moncrieff. (1½d. each. Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling.)

Rev. George Everard's facile pen has long been employed in the production of tracts of evangelical character and pointed in style. STILL THE SAME, and ONLY THREE WORDS will find a ready circulation, especially among members of the Church of England. (Drummond's Tract Depot.)

A WALK WITH JESUS, with another sermon, preached in the Metropolitan Tabernacle in September last, by Pastor Hugh D. Brown, M.A., B.L., of Dublin, have been issued in booklet form. (3d. A. H. Stockwell & Co.) We trust these sound words, earnestly spoken, will be widely disseminated and read to profit and comfort by many.

THE BARROW BIBLE BOOK MARKER, by G. H. T., presents the books of the Bible in their proper order, connected by rhyming words calculated to assist in memorizing. The proceeds of sale go towards building a church at New Holland, an outlying district of the parish of Barrow-on-Humber, Lincolnshire (One penny. W. D. Hayward, George Street, Croydon.)

Rev. N. Bothamley, rector of St. Leonard's, Exeter, has written an instructive booklet, THE BREAD AND THE BLESSING: A Short Explanation of What is Taught us about the Holy Communion in the Bible and Prayer Book. Professor Moule, in an introductory note, says:—"I believe that this brief treatise may be of the greatest help to candid minds." (6d. Exeter: J. Townsend & Son.)

A tract, entitled DELIVERANCE OF CHINESE CHRISTIANS, records the true and thrilling story of the remarkable deliverance of a body of native Christians in China, who in obedience to the advice of their missionary decided to depend entirely upon the defence of God in meeting the attacks of their enemies. (2s. per 100. The Orphans' Printing Press, Broad Street, Leominster.)

MISS MONCK MASON has brought out a second series of HYMN LOTTO—consisting of tickets and handbook, with which one may, in an interesting manner, study hymns and the particulars of their authorship, &c. (1s. 2d. post free. The Author, 41, Cheriton Road, Folkestone.) From the same address may be obtained THE CHURCHMAN'S ACROSTIC BIBLE SEARCHING ALMANACK for 1901. (1½d. post free.)

A cheap series of booklets has been published by Mr. H. A. Raymond, 16, Paternoster Square. Many of the incidents upon which the narratives are founded emanate from the field of battle; and while showing how effectively the Gospel has been presented to the wounded and dying, they tell the story of the Cross in a simple, faithful, manner, which cannot fail to touch the heart and conscience. (1s. per hundred).

The February issue of NATIONAL RIGHTEOUSNESS, contains, among numerous weighty items, a luminous article by Mr. Joshua Rowntree, J.P., on "The Menace of the Press." The writer deals with the many phases of this grave subject, and its bearing upon the religious and civic life of the nation. The present situation calls for earnest inquiry, and furnishes food for serious contemplation. (1d. Morgan & Scott.)

Obituary.

MR. W. SHRIMPTON.

A WELL-KNOWN Christian worker of Lee, S.E., Mr. W. Shrimpton, has been suddenly called home. Until recently he conducted afternoon Bible classes for children and young people; and as an evangelist, in fellowship with Dr. McKilliam, he carried on for many years a Gospel mission in the Alexandra Hall, Blackheath. He was specially used in dealing with young men, and only the Sunday prior to his death his voice was heard in the open air, proclaiming salvation to sinners. His death was the result of a fall from a lift.

REV. DR. ANDREW THOMSON.

The decease of Rev. Dr. Andrew Thomson last week removes one of the fathers of the United Free Church of Scotland. Born at Sanquhar in February, 1814, and educated at Glasgow University, Dr. Thomson was elected to the ministry of Lothian Road Secession Church, Edinburgh, in 1837. Five years later he was transferred to Broughton Place Church, where he laboured in the Gospel with zeal and success until health and strength failed, after which he was associated in the pastorate with Dr. John Smith. He was a warm advocate of Sabbath observance, having—among other efforts in that direction—at the Geneva Conference of the Evangelical Alliance in 1861 read a paper on the subject, which was translated into several languages and distributed widely throughout Europe. As early as 1851 the degree of D.D. was conferred on Mr. Thomson by Glasgow University, and in 1874 he filled the Moderator's chair at the United Presbyterian Synod. Many books issued from Dr. Thomson's pen, "Thomas Boston, of Ettrick: His Life and Times," being written after the author had passed his eightieth year.

Letters to the Editor.

Prayers for the Dead.

SIR,—The note on this subject in your last issue is well founded. At the late Bishop of London's Memorial Service at the Chapel Royal, St. James', his own Sub-Dean, after declaring he would not say anything "to vex the soul of the departed," stated the first lesson taught by his death was that we should pray for the rest of his soul, and that, too, after we had sung "In Paradise at rest!"

Thus, with a refinement of incongruity, all the more painful because not appreciated by the preacher, one of the doctrines of the Bishop's anarchical clergy, who largely worried him into a premature grave, is put into the forefront of the duty of the living!

This becomes positively ghastly when one (Mr. Stanton, St. Alban's) of the leaders of these lawless clergy, who gave the poor Bishop no rest during his life, on the same day asked the prayers of the congregation for the repose of the soul of their late Diocesan!

This is emphasized by Canon Gore in his sermon at Westminster Abbey, on the death of our Queen, who, adopting the dictum of an anonymous Irish preacher, defied anyone not to pray for the dead!

Thus these anarchical clerics take advantage of the Act which imposes silence on the laity, to fulminate the doctrines of Rome, and that too in regard to the soul of our noble Queen.

This, moreover, is the Canon who sought surreptitiously to spread Popish practices by advising the clergy to "squeeze the Bishops," and who now, I suppose, seeks to do the same by squeezing the people.—Yours, &c., JOHN M. R. TODD.

The Church and its Ministry.

DEAR SIR,—It has been well remarked that "What is new is not true, and what is true is not new." And this pre-eminently applies to the ministry. We cannot get safely beyond the old Gospel and the old Bible. No modern intellectualism, no new "professional training," no "Summer Schools," can be put in comparison with that prayerful adherence to the ordinary meaning of the inspired Scriptures, which has so well served the purpose, and the ministry of the best men and women in all the churches in the years gone by, and as still in the present. Nor can we safely go further.

That high authority, the Apostle Paul, emphatically exhorts Timothy to "Preach the Word." And the Apostles, collectively, declared, "We will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word." Again, St. Peter says: "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God"; that is to say, as the inspired Scriptures.

And these Scriptures have for their great topics Christ's incarnation and his eternal kingdom, to be impressed on the heart by the Holy Spirit, in answer to prayer—prayer both on the part of ministers and congregations. It is very easy to attach undue responsibility to ministers. If there is a defective ministry, it is mainly because the congregations do not sufficiently pray and arrange for a better one. Put the responsibility on the right shoulders.

I once heard an eminent Methodist minister say that he had preached a certain sermon with blessed results in one city. He soon afterwards preached exactly the same sermon in another town, but with apparently no result. What constituted the difference? In the first instance there had been earnest united prayers for God's blessing. In the other case such prayers were neglected.

It was prayer, with plain Biblical presentations of eternal realities—"the powers of the world to come"—which mainly, in the generation just passed, enabled such ministers as Charles H. Spurgeon, Dwight L. Moody, George Müller, Benjamin Seebohm, and Catharine Booth, to win souls to Christ. And there is no prospect, or probability, of any better way being found. And the great Divine Head of the Church said, when on earth, "I have given them thy word"; and He added the prayer, "Sanctify them through thy truth." There is the Divine answer to the question proposed to American friends—Prayer, the Word, and Christ. WILLIAM TALLACK.

61, Clapton Common, N.E.

The Three Graces.—Faith cometh of the Word of God; Hope cometh by faith; and Charity springeth from themboth. Faith believeth God's Word; Hope trusteth after that which is promised by the Word; Charity doeth good unto her neighbours through the love that she hath to God, and gladness that is within herself.—Patrick Hamilton (Scottish martyr, 16th century).

Notes & Comments

THE objection expressed by Roman Catholics to the Constitutional Declaration made by King Edward, anent the dogma of Transubstantiation, took shape on Thursday last. The Church of Rome glories in being semper eadem, and the men who framed the oath knew only too well what was her real nature. That it should have been, and be still, necessary to use such terms as we published last week, to safeguard against "evasion, equivocation, or mental reservation," dispensations already or to be granted, and the hope of absolution from the Declaration, might bring the blush of shame to any man with an English sense of honesty and honour. Even after generations of security from Papal encroachment, we have not forgotten the bitter lessons learned by our forefathers; and it is certain that any attempt to tamper with the Protestant bulwarks of the country would be strenuously opposed by a much larger body than the thirty peers who have addressed a protest to the Lord Chancellor.

Two facts have been brought home to the nation—(1) that the Reformation in England was genuinely "Protestant" in character, and (2) that the High Anglicans are going against the historic conditions of the Establishment of the Church of England in their teaching and practice concerning the Lord's Supper. The language of the Declaration, which has been repeated by every monarch since Edward VI., is so unmistakable that the Church Times thinks it > a pity that steps were not taken long ago to get rid of this survival from rude times, when men were nothing if not violent in language, and that instead of this outrageously offensive declaration the object of excluding a Romanist from the throne could be secured by a milder statement repudiating Papal authority.

It would seem that those who hold the views of the Church Times find little that is offensive in Romanism except the supreme authority of the Pope. As to "violent language," last Sabbath evening before a large Manchester congregation, Father Bernard Vaughan referred to the Declaration as a "stupidly silly, cruelly insulting, grossly wicked form of words;" a "gratuitous, wanton insult;" "painful and shameful words;" "grossly misrepresenting the very central act of the religious belief" of Catholics; a "wanton calumny;" and a "disgrace to the fair name of those who had supported it." Is this language a "survival from rude times?"

The following surprising and gratifying extract is from a letter of King Edward VII., when Prince of Wales, to the late Archbishop Benson:—"I have had a horror of gambling, and should always do my utmost to discourage others who have an inclination for it, as I consider that gambling, like intemperance, is one of the greatest curses which the country could be afflicted with"—has been much quoted lately; and the hope has been expressed that His Majesty will see his way to follow Lord Rosebery's example of selling his stud of race-horses. This would be a practical check upon one of the most demoralising sports in the country, the chief one indeed which is indissolubly associated with the vice in question. The withdrawal of the King from the race-course would do more than many Acts of Parliament to defeat "a vast engine of national demoralization."

Lessons of various kinds have been learned by ministers and congregations from their experience during the Simultaneous Mission. Many of these are, of course, local; but others are more common, and have a message for a wide field. That the Mission has proved in the providence of God to be one especially to the people already within the pale of the churches, has been generally recognised; and it is therefore eminently satisfactory that some of the lessons arise from, and have an important bearing on, that fact.

Last Lord's Day a London minister told his people of two points which had been specially borne in on his mind. First and mainly, it had been made quite clear to him that it is his duty to give a larger place than ever in the service to the simple presentation of the way of salvation, as the preaching most calculated to be profitable alike to those who have not and those who have received the Saviour; and this because he is convinced that no preaching of the Gospel can be admitted as worthy of the name unless it is what is commonly called evangelistic. In addition to this, he declared it to be his set purpose to press more frequently on the minds of his hearers, and especially the younger portion, that he regards it not merely as a part of his duty as a Christian minister, but the great joy of his life, to welcome those who are willing to have personal converse on the matters that concern most deeply their spiritual welfare.

If such be among the effects of the Mission in many quarters, there is good ground for an assured hope that the outcome is only beginning to be felt, that it will be far-reaching indeed, and that we shall yet see "greater things than these." Many ministers are realizing the distinction to be drawn between preaching the Gospel, and preaching about the Gospel.

An evangelist writes:—

> May I draw the attention of inquiry room workers to the article in this week's issue of The Christian—"Foundation Truths of the Gospel.—VI: The Atonement." It is a significant fact that we are finding in inquiry rooms during the Simultaneous Mission, numbers whose chief difficulty seems to be of an intellectual character. How very careful we need to be in this important department of the Mission! God forbid that any slip-shod work should creep in. Here is an article so clear and simple, so beautifully set forth, multum in parvo, that no inquiry room should be without it.

The letter on "Can Nothing More be Done?" from Mrs. Streatfeild, which appeared in our issue of January 10, has aroused interest in several quarters. One correspondent—who feels "sure that much of our negligence in this matter arises from want of serious thought"—makes the useful suggestion that > those Christians who think most deeply of this evil should form themselves into a praying band, and each bring some drinker or drunkard before the Lord, and so individually work and pray for some failing sister or brother.

The true worker, however great may be his responsibilities, knows that while audiences must be addressed in general terms, much of the permanent value of an effort will depend on the personal seeking and winning of wanderers one by one. Such work might well be undertaken by many of those who have received blessing in connection with the Simultaneous Mission of the Free Churches.

The remarkable meetings held at Manchester last week may fairly be regarded as the most advanced step yet taken by temperance workers in the direction of practical licensing reform. The proposals of Lord Peel's Report were enthusiastically adopted. This means a great deal more than appears upon the surface. For the first time, temperance workers of all opinions are pledged to seek a measure upon which they are all agreed. We are profoundly thankful for this, for it means that energies which have been sometimes divided will now be concentrated upon one thing only. Mr. Ritchie's last argument is now taken from him, and the Government which ordered the Royal Commission and accepted its Chairman's report is bound, unless it has been playing with the nation, to go forward with the work of reform. We shall now see whether Parliament is to be directed by brewers' interests, or by those of the people.

We gladly direct attention to the cheap sixpenny edition of Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell's book on the Temperance Problem. The publishers deserve the thanks of the community for placing this remarkable book within the reach of everyone. Any of our readers who have not yet studied this work should at once procure it. (Hodder & Stoughton).

It is stated in a contemporary, that on a recent Sunday evening, in Wigan, it was found that more men were assembled in the public-houses than in all the churches and chapels put together. The writer adds, what indeed is perfectly obvious, that the fields are white unto the harvest, and that beyond "seat accommodation," what is wanted above all is the fuller realization of the truth of the Gospel in its ample fulness, as that alone will "brighten the grey, deadening life of industrial Lancashire." This Gospel, however, should be taken to those who do not voluntarily come within its glad sound. Christ's teaching is that they should be compelled to come in. If they are sought for, they will undoubtedly be found.

The fact that the late Bishop of London died from overstrain raises the question once more of overworked ministers, and how to avoid the break-downs which so often fall on our popular and influential men. One of the provincial papers wrote: "London has killed its scholarly bishop." Is this a fair statement? When a man approves himself to the public as possessing great capacity for service of any kind, he is naturally run after, and pressed to go here and there. Those who accept these invitations indiscriminately may bear up for a time, but in the end they nearly always succumb to the drain on their vital functions. The ultimate responsibility rests with themselves. No man has a right to fritter away his energies in miscellaneous duties of a minor kind, but should concentrate them on a few supreme duties, and husband them jealously for that end. It is a striking fact that, while a score of brilliant preachers and leaders of the last generation could be mentioned who were taken away in their prime, the two greatest of them all, excluding Spurgeon—Drs. Maclaren and Parker—are still alive and in full efficiency of work. That is because they have known, and worked within, the limits of their strength.

The publication of the second part of the Twentieth Century New Testament by the company of revisers who have for some years past been engaged in translating the New Testament into "Modern English" may afford satisfaction to some minds, but we doubt if in the case of most of the altered passages anything is gained by the substitution of inflated and high flown language for the simple and expressive words to which from childhood we have been accustomed. Thus for 1 Cor. xiii. 4, 5 we are given

Love is long-suffering and is kind; love is never envious, never boastful, never conceited, never behaves unbecomingly. She is not self-seeking, not easily provoked, nor does she reckon up her wrongs.

To turn from this to the massive simplicity of Wycliffe's New Testament is like going out from an enervating atmosphere into the pure exhilarating air of the mountain and the moor.

In dealing with the question of recent changes in the presentation of truth, Rev. D. S. Cairns, M.A., has laid much stress on Harnack's dictum that a great historical figure must be judged, not only by his sayings, but by the broad effect he produces upon his followers. In applying this to Jesus, he draws attention to the notable fact that the broad effect of the apostolic picture of Christ is wholly inconsistent with any humanitarian view of his personality.

There is here something far beyond the reverence and affection of a disciple for his Master, far beyond the delight of a student at the opening of a new realm of truth by a supremely gifted Spirit. The writers with faltering lips and stammering tongue are trying to tell of something which has happened, and which they must proclaim to the world. God was in Christ. . . . It is just this strange thrill of amazement and worship and love that distinguishes the New Testament from every other book, and that gives it its dynamic power in regenerating and sanctifying the soul.

The following "Covenant of Membership" is extracted from a Church-book for January 20, 1809, at Ettrington, Stratford-on-Avon, and is interesting, both as indicating a brotherly love among those who differed on points of doctrine, very rare in those days, and also in view of the United Spring Meetings of the Congregational and Baptist Unions to be held for the first time in April next:—

And whereas some of us do verily believe that the sprinkling of an infant, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, is true Christian Baptism; and others of us do believe that the true Christian Baptism is that which is administered to the adult upon the profession of their repentance, faith, and experience of the grace of God, by immersion, in the name of the Sacred Three; yet, notwithstanding this difference of sentiment, we promise and agree to receive and treat one another with the same Christian affection and love. And this, among many other reasons, because we can find no warrant in the Word of God to make such difference of sentiment any bar to communion at the Lord's Table in particular, or to church fellowship in general; and because, as the Lord Jesus receives and owns them on both sides of the question, we think we ought to do so too.

The unique feature of this covenant is that there is no attempt to interfere with the personal convictions of those who conscientiously differ on the subject of Baptism, and that there is an acknowledgment of the deeper basis of Union that underlies the divergence in doctrinal position.

There are two ways in which the thought of the future may become a hindrance to the right performance of duty in the present. The first is by a spurious hopefulness. There are thousands who plunge recklessly into debt, who involve themselves in business entanglements, who play fast and loose with the known laws of health and well-being, in the "hope" that something will "turn up" to set matters right, and that all will be well presently. The other vice is a nervous dread of what the future may contain of disaster, or sorrow, or sickness. To-day's sunshine is often dimmed to us by regarding to-morrow's clouds (Eccles. xi. 4), and the joy and light-heartedness that should characterize all who believe in the "good hand of their Lord" upon them is darkened by the fear of troubles that will probably never come to pass. A wise balance between recklessness and apprehensiveness is the way of safety and happiness. Our hope should be our anchor, not our jetter.

Strenuous efforts are made by the better class of secularists to retain the notions of morality whilst they reject the claims of religion. They want to retain the fruit and at the same time disown the tree that bore it. Quite recently two sceptics, well known in the world of letters, have vainly laboured to prove that morality has no supernatural sanctions at all. We are, therefore, glad to see that the Professor of Moral Philosophy in Glasgow University last week made a stately defence of morality as indissolubly associated with religion. He went to the bottom of the whole question, and showed by irresistible logic that true morality was bound up with the Being and the law of God. This is a line which we must more and more pursue, since one of the most popular and fatal attitudes of mind to-day is that which professes to revere morality whilst rejecting God. We must not allow this without severe protest. That is the meanest kind of plagiarism which steals lofty ideas and then denies the source which produced them.

All who have carefully watched the progress of events upon the Continent during the last few years must have been struck with the rapid growth of the Anti-Jesuit movement. Italy, Hungary, Germany, and France have in turn revolted against ultramontane domination, and now it looks as though Spain—the last hope of the Roman Church—was preparing to follow the other nations. The riots which are reported from various parts of Spain possess a deep significance which it would be absurd to ignore. The thing to be feared is that when the people free themselves of the clerical yoke, they may swing to the opposite extreme from superstition and plunge into the darkness of atheism. Surely this is the psychological moment to be seized by Evangelicals for a missionary campaign in this darkest of Continental countries.

A recent return issued by the Home Office, shows that the First Offenders Act, which, when it became law, was cited as an illustration of "milk-and-water legislation," has proved eminently beneficial. It appears from the figures that during the past three years 2,191 such cases were dealt with in London alone under the lenient provisions of the Act, and that of these only 257 were again brought up charged with a further offence. Doubtless a large proportion of the remainder, nearly 2,000, would again have appeared in the courts had they not, by the exercise of a wise and good law, been saved from the stigma and disgrace of the prison cell.

Speaking recently at Dumbarton, Rev. Mr. Simpson stated that there were 600 churches in Scotland spending £120,000 per annum, "which were practically doing nothing so far as the religious needs of the various districts were concerned." A speaker who followed, added that although the Church of Scotland and the United Free Church required only 150 men a year, there were no fewer than seven Divinity Halls to provide that supply. It is not in Scotland alone, however, that this waste is going on year after year. In a small Sussex village a little while ago, we found, in addition to the parish church, three chapels, in each of which the same vital truths were being proclaimed, the only points of disunion being a few non-essentials. And this would apply to hundreds of places where it is difficult to provide even a wretchedly insufficient stipend for the pastor.

It would apparently be difficult to exaggerate the importance of the recently announced discoveries made by the American Expedition to Babylonia, and especially in regard to the unearthing of the library of the great temple of Bel at Nippur, the place which tradition declares to be the Biblical Calneh, one of the four cities, in the land of Shinar, referred to in Gen. x. 10 as the beginning of the kingdom of Nimrod. In this discovery, over twenty-five thousand cuneiform texts are included, and these have yet to be deciphered and translated; but already Dr. Hilprecht, who was the first to hit upon the site of the temple and the library, is already in a position to state that there are tablets "from the fifth pre-Christian millennium," and that in two texts he has found the name of the river Chebar, by which Ezekiel, among the captives, saw "visions of God" (Ezek. i. 1).

One of the great problems before the community is that of the housing of the population of London, and by many the solution is found in cheap and rapid communication with the suburbs. But, as a writer in a daily contemporary shows, recent experiences point to any gain through cheap fares being immediately neutralized by increased rents, and the benefit is, on the financial side at least, at once monopolized by the landlords. If it be true that speculators and property owners are ever on the watch to take advantage of every item of relief to the working classes, and so raise the rents as immediately to draw it into their own net, schemes for the erection of small houses by public bodies become even more important and urgent than has yet been recognised.

Our occasional comments in regard to the injurious influence of the stage have sometimes been considered somewhat severe, and it is, therefore, interesting to find an able critic who is friendly to the theatre, and who writes in support of a scheme for the municipalization of the drama, asserting that any improvement has been mainly outward, in the direction of "architectural decency," that the advance in the stage itself is barely visible, and that as regards the so-called music-halls—

The most popular "turns" are still conspicuous for their double meanings and vulgar inanities; the glorification of drunkenness and other vices, with an intermingling of washy sentimentality, is still rapturously applauded. The moral unhealthiness is still there, even if is not quite as palpable. This makes it, perhaps, all the more dangerous.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—VII.

FAITH.

By Rev. J. MONRO GIBSON, M.A., D.D.

FAITH is an energy of the soul in the exercise of which it goes out towards that which is unseen. When a man enters on business which he expects to make profitable, he is exercising his faculty of faith. The success which he hopes to attain, being in the future, is, from the nature of the case, unseen; therefore faith is necessary. Faith of this kind we are all exercising in countless ways, every day of our lives.

Christian faith is distinguished from ordinary faith only by its object. It is an energy of the soul in the exercise of which it goes out towards Christ, recognising Him as Lord, welcoming his message joyfully, accepting the forgiveness of sin through his atoning sacrifice, and yielding the life in willing obedience to his service.

The word "faith" is one of the strongest nouns in the language, and it is a great pity we have no verb to correspond with it. "Believing" is only a part of its rich meaning. Hence, especially in its more important applications, we find saving faith spoken of as "believing in," as when our Lord says, "Believe in God, believe also in Me."

1. If we bear this in mind we shall not make the mistake of confounding faith with the mere acceptance of a creed. It is perhaps not too much to say that the vast majority of those who stumble at faith as a condition of salvation do so from this misconception. What they say is equivalent to this: "A man may accept all the creeds of Christendom and be a bad man; another may reject them all and be a good man"; which is true in the popular sense of goodness and badness. But where in "the volume of the Book" is there any authority for this conception of faith? We have it certainly in the Athanasian Creed, but we decline to be held responsible for its unscriptural statements. Does our Lord ever give the remotest hint that what He asks of those who would belong to his Kingdom is subscription to a creed? Does He not make it perfectly plain that what is asked and expected is trust in God, and the outgoing of the soul to Him in loyalty, obedience, and devotion?

There is only one passage I can think of which might be imagined to suggest acceptance of a creed, namely, Mark i. 14. When our Lord says, "Believe the Gospel," does He not mean accepting such a good and comprehensive statement of it as is embodied in the Apostles' Creed? A glance at the Revised Version will shew the inadequacy of this interpretation. There it is, "believe in the Gospel." To believe a thing is very much less than to believe in it. "I believe it," may mean nothing more than, "I don't deny it"; it may mean "I care so little about it that I do not think it worth my while to question it." "I believe in it," means, "I reckon it good for me; I go in for it."

When you take to the capitalist the prospectus of a new company, he may look over it and find nothing in it he is in a position to contradict; you may give him information about the enterprise which he good-naturedly accepts; he counts you quite truthful and honest, does not join issue with you in a single statement; still that does not give you much encouragement. But the moment he says, "I believe in it," you look for his cheque, you expect him to go in for the investment. The former attitude is mere assent, which may mean more or less, but never much; the second is consent.

Suppose we take the Sermon on the Mount as the best prospectus of the Kingdom of God. It is almost universally admired. It is appealed to as a document not to be questioned, as a manifesto which carries on its face the stamp of authority. Everybody believes it. How many believe in it? None but true Christians. "Blessed are the pure in heart." How many believe this? Everybody. How many believe in it? Only those who make purity of heart their great ambition.

Or take the great argument to show the willingness of the Father in Heaven to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him. Everyone accepts it. No one will deny that the Heavenly Father must be at least as good as the best earthly father. But how many believe in it? How many of the innumerable admirers and eulogists of the Sermon on the Mount have set their hearts on this, and put to the proof the promise of the Lord? Alas! alas! the many may believe it, the very few believe in it. It is the latter kind of faith that the Lord requires.

2. Another misrepresentation which the true conception of faith ought to correct, is the idea that faith is asked instead of works. The misleading question is raised, "Would it not be far more reasonable to say that a man should be saved by honesty, truthfulness, sobriety, generosity, than by faith?" But why is faith singled out? Is it chosen in competition with these other virtues? On the contrary, it is chosen because it, and it alone, carries all the rest with it. Of course belief of a creed does not; but faith in Christ and in his Gospel does. Faith is the deep root out of which all the graces of the Christian character spring. It is quite true that a man may have particular virtues without faith in God—he may have sobriety, honesty, truthfulness; but all-round and through-and-through goodness he cannot have without faith. There may be a veneer of goodness without faith; but our Lord and Master does not believe in veneer work. He asks for a clean heart and a right spirit. He is not content with artificial fruit upon the tree of life; He must have it come from the life within the tree itself. "Make the tree good," He says, "and the fruit will be good." Faith is never opposed to works, but is always demanded for the sake of the works which necessarily follow it, when it is no mere belief of something, but a genuine belief in Christ and his Gospel. When the Jews came with the question, "What shall we do that we may work the works of God?" what was our Lord's answer? Was it "God does not ask works, He wants faith"? Not at all. It was, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent." Why the work? Because it is the central principle from which all good works necessarily proceed.

From this point of view we can see how genuine faith is necessarily accompanied by repentance. Faith is the surrender of the will to God; a man cannot, therefore, make this surrender without giving up the things which are contrary to God's will. We must give Him the heart—that is faith; it is also repentance, for "out of the heart are the issues of life." Let no one imagine that faith is an easier way of salvation, than if it were to be through such good works as honesty, integrity, beneficence. It goes much deeper, and calls for much more, even for the devotion of the entire life with all its faculties and powers. Salvation is by faith, that it may be unto all good works.

3. Another misrepresentation of faith is that which puts it in opposition to knowledge and certainty, the idea being suggested that, while the objects of knowledge are certain, the objects of faith are doubtful. Some even go the length of making it equivalent to credulity.

A man of strong faith, according to these people, is a man who is ready to believe anything without being too particular about the proof. The late Professor Huxley was a notable example of this kind of criticism. He delighted in representing faith as a vice of the soul, and doubt as one of the cardinal virtues. And he was correct enough in the narrow sphere in which his mind worked, namely, that of experiment in science. "Experiment in science," I say, because if we take science in a large sense we cannot dispense with faith as the foundation of all investigation. We must start with faith in the order of the universe, or all our inquiries are useless. This has been all along a familiar thought to those who think at all accurately on these matters; and a few years ago it became much more widely popularised by the extensive reading of Mr. Balfour's "Foundations of Belief." Even science itself, then, begins with faith—faith in the order of the universe and in the validity of the faculties by which we make observations, and of those by which we deduce the results of our experiments. But in the conducting of scientific experiment the greatest care is needed to eliminate every possibility of mistake; hence the advantage, the necessity in fact, of a sceptical attitude of mind, a perpetual questioning and cross-questioning of observed phenomena, till the truly significant facts come out into the light, and yield at last the longed-for secret.

But surely everyone recognises the difference between the sorting out of a multitude of facts in order to extract a secret from the world which lies beneath our gaze, and the attitude of a child to its father. Who will dare to say in this connection that the chief vice of the soul is faith and its highest virtue doubt? In this region there is nothing more beautiful than trust, and nothing more painful and hateful than suspicion. This is, after all, the same old error of confounding belief of a proposition with belief in a person. In the latter case we start with faith, and soon pass on to knowledge. We may take as an illustration of this the strong declaration of the Apostle Paul: "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day." His Christian experience started with an act of faith in Christ: "I have believed." He had, of course, known of the existence of Christ before, and was acquainted with the facts which were currently reported about Him among his associates. So far he believed; but not till the day of his conversion did he begin to believe in Christ. Then for the first time did he call Him Lord, and ask, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" There was the starting point of faith. As time passed on, his faith passed into knowledge, personal acquaintance—an acquaintance as definite and certain and verifiable as in the case of an ordinary friendship; and his acquaintance with Him gradually strengthened his original faith till it became the full assurance of knowledge: "I know whom I have believed."

It is the same process with which we are all perfectly familiar in daily life. On our first introduction to a stranger we have to begin with an act of faith. If we do not, there is no chance of friendship. The slender faith we have at first leads us to give him some of our time and attention, to take opportunities of cultivating his acquaintance. Thus we begin to know him. And if it be the case that the more we know him the more highly we think of him, our confidence increases until at last we place in him implicit confidence, so that we can trust him with anything. But now suppose we were to practise the virtue of doubt and suspicion which the late Professor Huxley so highly commended; suppose that we doubted our friend's motives at every turn, kept putting his friendship to the severest tests we could think of, maintained an attitude of criticism and scepticism on to the very end, should we ever reach that implicit confidence which happily is not an unfamiliar experience even in earthly friendship?

I hope it will be clear from all that has been said, that the demand for faith is by no means unreasonable, that it is the only way in which those relations to God and his Son Jesus Christ can be reached and maintained, which make it possible for Him to bestow upon us the unspeakable blessings of the Heavenly Kingdom.

It is the most natural thing in the world to ask men to believe in the Gospel; for, it must be remembered, every man believes in something. It is not a question of faith or no faith. It is a question of faith in this or in that. Many people believe in money. Mammon is their god. Others believe in a life of ease; others in athletics; and so on. There is no lack of faith. That is not the trouble. It is the object towards which we direct our faith. Christ summons us to believe in the Gospel. Well, suppose a man to be one of those who believe in money. His great ambition in life is to make a fortune. Christ comes to him, and delivers this message: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent and believe in the Gospel." Translated for his special benefit, it would read—"Give up your faith in money, and take up faith in the Gospel instead." This faith will mean the deliberate choice of Christ as our Lord and Master, the giving of ourselves over to Him to be guided by his counsel, to be forgiven through his sacrifice, to be sanctified by his grace, and to be kept from the power of every evil lust, until our faith in Christ passes into knowledge, and knowledge into full assurance, so that we shall be able to say without a falter of the lip, without a tremor of the tongue, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day."

Countess Schimmelmann's Meetings.—The Countess Schimmelmann is experiencing much of the blessing of God in connection with her present tour in Germany. It is believed that this is the first occasion on which a lady of rank has addressed an evangelistic meeting arranged by royalty, held in a palace, and with a Queen present. During four days spent in Stuttgart, the Countess was invited on three days to lunch or dine with the Royal Family. Then the unusual spectacle was seen of Socialistic workmen joining their voices with those of foreign envoys, military officers, clergymen, and noble ladies, in the singing of "Come to the Saviour, make no delay." Invitations are coming in from all parts of the Continent, but the resources available are already overtaxed, and friends in this country are invited to remember the needs of the case.

The Simultaneous Mission.

The Provincial Meetings.

THE widespread interest which has been aroused throughout the country by the news of the London meetings of the Mission, doubtless tended not only to draw public attention to the provincial effort, but also to arouse Christian people to a sense both of their individual responsibilities and of the magnitude of the present opportunity.

The tidings which has already come to hand shows that in many centres the Gospel has been heard with deep attention, and large numbers of "outsiders" have been attracted.

THE DEAN OF RIPON ON THE MISSION.

At Ripon the Mission was inaugurated at a united meeting in the Victoria Hall, Rev. J. C. Nesbitt (Congregationalist) presided, and was supported by the Hon. and Very Rev. the Dean of Ripon (Dr. Fremantle), J. H. Goodier (vicar of Trinity Church), and W. R. Brotherton (Primitive Methodist).—The Dean of Ripon said Christian society of our day is divided into two classes; on the one side persons of comparative leisure, who go to church and are not exposed to temptation to low vices; and on the other side, the struggling mass, comparatively poor, not very much influenced by church systems, beset with solicitations to the grosser forms of indulgence. Christ's warnings to-day would be addressed mainly to those who are at ease, but to all alike He would say, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness." It is the simple elements of religion which all men, women, and children can understand, that they were seeking on that occasion to hold fast, to deepen, and to strengthen. There are two things which are of prime importance in the development of religion in our day. The first of these is Christian unity. Many of the causes which kept Christians apart from each other have passed away; we must not seek to perpetuate them, but strive continually for union in heart and action. The century is to be the century of missions, and the conditions of success lie in united effort.

AN AWAKENING AT LEEDS.

The gatherings at Leeds on Sunday showed the "man in the street" that something unusual was taking place. Streams of scholars marched to the mission centres in the afternoon; singing bands were out in the evening; congregations marched to the strains of mission hymns from their own places of worship to the mission centres, to join in the prayer meetings. Briggate was invaded by an army of workers, and the human tide swept into the Empire Theatre, where Rev. T. Nightingale was preaching, and which was soon crowded. About the streets and chapels there was an activity in Christian work that has caused men everywhere to wonder what it is all about. Before this week is old, some lasting results of this activity will be gained.

The services in the Leeds Free Churches were chiefly of an evangelistic character. In the twenty-seven chapels which form mission centres the pulpits were occupied by the missioners, and in many other chapels there were exchanges amongst the ministers. Mr. Leonard Weaver telegraphs that in the meeting he conducted there were 200 cases of decision.

The inaugural sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Howie, of Glasgow. In addition to the Empire Theatre, St. James' Hall and the Philosophical Hall have been engaged. Rev. F. B. Meyer is conducting the campaign.

REV. H. PRICE HUGHES AT MANCHESTER.

The Mission opened with two great meetings in the Free Trade Hall. The afternoon service was for women only. At night the hall was filled in every part. On each occasion the service was conducted by the missioner, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. Overflow meetings were held in the evening in the Comedy Theatre and the Grand Theatre of Varieties. Mr. Hughes preached at the evening service from the words, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." A large number of persons remained for prayer at the close.

EXPECTATION AT LIVERPOOL.

At the inaugural reception at Liverpool on Saturday, a large number of missioners and friends assembled. In an address of welcome, Rev. R. Veitch gave statistics to show that much preparation had been made. In one week, for example, 220,000 copies of religious periodicals had been distributed. Liverpool is aglow with expectation. In all the five districts into which the city was divided, a notable degree of interest was manifested. Rev. Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, was at Balliol Road Wesleyan Chapel, where he addressed large congregations.

MR. HENRY VARLEY AT GAINSBOROUGH.

The meetings in connection with the Free Church Council in this Lincolnshire town have been marked with wide and increasing interest. Wesley Chapel was the centre fixed upon, and the capacious building has seen large numbers drawn together daily. The different churches have been well represented, and many believers tell of increased spiritual life and fresh perception of the beauty and excellency of the Word of God. Some fifteen meetings have been held, and from all directions comes the testimony of a real reviving.

The blessing has been mainly with Christians. The ministers have been greatly interested, and these speak of the hearty friendships and fellowships which the meetings have fostered and brought about. The indifference which exists in regard to the Gospel of Christ has been difficult to overcome, but Sunday last saw hundreds of working men at the meetings. Mr. Varley's addresses have produced very deep impressions; large numbers are interested and not a few convicted of sin.

The mess-room addresses, at the breakfast and dinner hour, at Messrs. Marshall's engineering works, where more than 3,000 men are employed, have been greatly valued. It is felt that the time of the Mission was all too short. The real hold upon the people is just beginning. It is not possible, humanly speaking in eight days to arouse the great mass of the people from the prevailing indifference, but, as Mr. Varley expressed it, the work will go on, and the ministers and Christians of Gainsborough will gather the harvest for months to come from this impressive and telling Mission. Mr. Varley gave his quaint and instructive lecture on "Billy Bray, the Cornish Miner and King's Son," in Wesley Church on Monday night. The commodious building was crowded with a deeply interested audience, and the occasion proved to be one of the most effective meetings of the Mission. The Free Church Council have been much encouraged by Mr. Varley's visit.

NEWCASTLE AROUSED.

A novel demonstration was made in Newcastle-on-Tyne on Saturday afternoon last. Free Church ministers and members assembled outside the Central Station, Newcastle, to the number of over a thousand, and, marshalled into processional order, paraded through the principal thoroughfares. They were escorted by a posse of police, who regulated the traffic, and a brass band at the head played sacred airs. Considerable attention was excited. Returning to Westgate Road, the large company sang a hymn, accompanied by the band, and, after the doxology and benediction, separated. The missioners for the week include Revs. Dr. J. Monro Gibson, John B. Meharry, and H. Howard May.

OTHER CENTRES.

Mr. George R. Cairns writes from Sheffield: "The Mission has begun well here."

In Liverpool, Manchester, Chester, and other towns in England there is special provision, in connection with the Mission, for the Welsh-speaking population.

In Cardiff, the Licensed Victuallers' Association, at a special meeting, passed a resolution—"That the whole of the trade be written to inviting them to close from three to five on Wednesday, February 20, with the object of allowing their employés an opportunity to hear Rev. John McNeill."

At Brighouse all sections of the Free Churches, including the Society of Friends, the two local Gospel Mission Bands, have united. The meetings are being held in St. Paul's Wesleyan Chapel. Rev. A. C. Perriam, of Bradford, is the missioner, and Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., also took part on Sunday last, conducting a service in Bridge End Congregational Church.

At Margate, on Sunday afternoon, there was a united service for young people in the Cecil Square Church. The workers were dealing with inquirers for an hour after the service had concluded. At night, the Grand Theatre was crowded with a most attentive audience. Some hundreds remained to the after meeting. The service was most impressive.

At Huddersfield preparations for the Mission have been afoot for some months under the direction of a representative committee. The town has been divided into districts for the purpose of house-to-house visitation. The missioners are Revs. R. Crawford Johnson, D.D., of Belfast, and J. G. Greenhough. The first meeting was full of encouragement.

At Llandudno the Mission was commenced by an interchange of pulpits at the various English Churches, Rev. Duncan Macrae, the special missioner, being at the Congregational Chapel. In the afternoon there was a united gathering of the four Sunday schools at the English Wesleyan Chapel, addressed by Mr. Macrae, and in the evening a united service in the same place, when Mr. Macrae preached. A feature of the service was the service of praise by the united choir of all the denominations.

The Free Churches of Worthing have for their missioner Rev. W. E. Sellers, of the Surrey Wesleyan Mission at Godalming. The campaign proper opened with a crowded young people's meeting at the theatre on Sunday afternoon, when Mr. Sellers, without taking a text, made a powerful appeal for decision, which led to the gathering of firstfruits. A like spirit of inquiry pervaded the mass meeting in the evening, when the missioner preached on the subject of the Barren Fig Tree. The week-night meetings are being held in the Baptist Church, the largest Free Church building in Worthing, and have begun well. On alternate afternoons meetings for Christian workers and others are held in other Free Churches. Two of the ministers of the town are absent in other centres, and the vacant Baptist pastorate has not been filled, so that only one minister of the town identified with the Free Church Federation (Rev. H. Adams), Wesleyan, is left to assist, but the laymen are working with right good will, and are showing in a practical way their recognition that this is essentially the people's mission to the people.

The Results in London.

Remarkable meetings were held in the City Temple on Thursday to gather up the results of the Mission. In the afternoon Rev. F. B. Meyer presided over a gathering attended by a large number of ministers and delegates from all parts of the country. Mr. Meyer opened the proceedings by saying that the best method of conserving the mighty spiritual impulses which had been realized was by opening further channels for aggressive Christian and Evangelistic work throughout the metropolis. He suggested: (1) That on the last Sunday evening of every month each Free Church minister should hold a mission service in his church, at which mission hymns should be sung, and to which visitors should be urged to bring the people from the neighbourhood; the ministers on such occasions to preach simple evangelistic sermons with the object of bringing men to decision. (2) During the approaching summer united open-air services should be held, in which the ministers should stand together in some suitable place, surrounded by their leading people and choirs, thus affording a demonstration of their essential unity. Vast numbers of outsiders would thus hear the Gospel. (3) Arrangements were in progress to hire a number of tents, which would be let, out to district councils during the summer months for special missions of a fortnight or a month's duration. (4) It had been decided to hold a united campaign to touch the masses of the people, in October, 1902, such a campaign to occupy all the available public halls, places of amusement, and buildings which are well known for public resort. An interesting discussion followed these suggestions, which were unanimously and enthusiastically adopted.

In the evening the spacious building was the scene of a vast assembly, which overflowed from the seating accommodation, and crowded the aisles. The attendance consisted in a large measure of those who had been brought to Christ during the recent mission in London, along with ministers and leading Christian workers. In the absence of Gipsy Smith, through indisposition, addresses were given to the converts by Revs. J. Tolefree Parr and G. Campbell Morgan. The tide of emotion was at times very deep, especially when Mr. Meyer called upon those who had lately given their hearts to God to indicate the same by rising in their places. Thereupon he commended them to God in prayer that they might be preserved blameless unto the Day of Christ, and be faithful witnesses of the Gospel. The proceedings were enlivened by the singing of well-known hymns, and the meeting dispersed to the strains of "Count your blessings." Clearly the leaders of the Free Church Mission movement look upon the results of recent endeavours as a stepping-stone to further efforts for the evangelizing of the great masses of the people.

Spurgeon Sermon Society.

The Spurgeon Memorial Sermon Society has celebrated its ninth anniversary, at the same time commemorating the decease of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon. Through the kindness of Rev. Frank H. White the meetings took place in Talbot Tabernacle, W., the attendance both afternoon and evening, of Monday last week, being very encouraging.

In the afternoon Pastor White delivered a helpful and inspiring address from Isaiah vi. 6: God's question, "Whom shall I send?" and the answer, "Here am I; send me." After the service Mr. White entertained a company of friends at tea, and he also presided over the evening meeting.

Mr. William Taverner, founder and secretary of the Society, presented the annual report. It was estimated that 4,791,800 visits had been made to as many homes during the year by 3,686 distributors who were connected with 588 distinct branches, each representing a separate church or mission, and embracing all sections of the Christian Church. The total visits made from the commencement of the Society were computed at 29,854,150; 12,539 sermons had been retained by the readers, and paid for within twelve months, many of which were posted to friends in foreign lands, making a total of 79,660 thus retained during the nine years. This is one of the surest signs of the sermons being appreciated. Mr. William Willett presented the Society with 500,000 copies of the sermons during the year, making a total of 1,808,733 copies purchased and received by the Society since its inception. Mr. and Mrs. Taverner had visited many of the branches during the year, travelling some 19,000 miles preaching and lecturing.

A number of interesting reports from the branches referred to conversions and other tokens of blessing. It was stated that three distinct churches had been established as a result of the sermon distribution in districts hitherto unprovided with any place of worship; a similar number was reported the year before.

Mr. F. L. Edwards, treasurer, presented the balance-sheet, showing that the readers of the sermons had contributed £249 14s. 2d. The gross receipts amounted to £492 9s. 6d., which showed a deficit on the year's working of £1 18s. compared with deficits of £21, £126, and £170 the three previous years, up to which time there had always been a balance in hand. He deplored the fact that there were liabilities of about £98, which needed urgently to be cleared so that the Society could go forward.

Addresses were delivered by Professor Gaussen, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Revs. G. Freeman and F. G. Wheeler, and others.

State Regulation of Vice.

Friends of the purity cause who mustered at Westminster Town Hall on Friday last, to hear accounts of the work of the British Committee for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice, were encouraged by the tidings of good work done in various parts of the world, as well as stimulated by accounts of opposition.

Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., gave a review of the committee's proceedings since the last public gathering, and of the present attitude of governments and peoples towards the principles maintained by the organization. In Cape Colony, regulation continues in force. From a reply by Mr. Chamberlain in the House of Commons to a question from Mr. Wilson, it appears that children of tender age have been brought under the operations of the Act.

As to India, there is reason to fear that, gradually and very quietly, the old system is being restored under the new rules. At the same time good effect has resulted from Mrs. Josephine Butler's circular, which pointed out that the "women hospital assistants" sought for by the Indian Government would be required in all probability, to make periodical examinations of the fallen with the aim of rendering vice "safe." Indignation at the official proposals was expressed by many Christian and philanthropic bodies in India, while the central committee of the Lady Dufferin Fund has ruled that any employé engaging in such work shall be dismissed.

Abolition principles were thoughtfully enunciated by the Bishop of Southampton, and Professor Stuart followed with an appeal for practical support, in the course of which he said that, on the return of our forces from South Africa, the party favouring regulation may be expected to re-agitate, in the alleged interests of the soldiery, for a re-instatement of the Acts, and that Purity workers must be ready to fight the battle once again. Helpful addresses were also given by Dr. J. Birkbeck Nevins, of Liverpool, and Miss Blanche Leppington. Mrs. Josephine Butler was prevented by indisposition from attending the meeting; but she is, of course, as enthusiastically interested as ever in the movement.

Mr. Bewley Weaver.

As we go to press, we learn with deep sorrow that Mr. Bewley Weaver is prostrated with an illness which the doctors fear will prove fatal. With his brother Frank, he has been holding a mission in the village of Wingate, in the county of Durham. The meetings are in connection with the Simultaneous Mission, and they were attended by much blessing. On Wednesday last, Mr. Bewley Weaver developed pneumonia, and at the beginning of the present week the case was given up as hopeless. Of course, the brothers had been obliged to cancel their engagement to hold meetings at Wisbech. Meantime, "while there is life there is hope"; and readers of The Christian are earnestly asked to pray that the life which has been so greatly used of God may still be spared for witness and service.

Vivisection.—We have received several communications, urging that earnest attention should be given to the question of Vivisection. The Surrey Branch of the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection is alarmed at the increase of the practice in connection with an institution in Lambeth, and insists that questions of utility or otherwise must not be allowed to obscure the issue. "Pity," it is pointed out, "is of its very nature entirely indifferent to all calculations of utility or the reverse"; and it is from this standpoint that the subject must be approached. Another correspondent reminds us of the decided attitude regarding the subject assumed by Queen Victoria, who "had an unconquerable antipathy to the practice of animal experimentation." In a third letter there is pointed out the untenable nature of the argument by which medical men "justify their immorality in experimenting on living animals and poor patients, by saying they do it in the interests of humanity, to discover how to cure and prevent disease."

Temperance Workers on Lord Peel's Report.

THE National Conference on Lord Peel's Report, which was held on Tuesday of last week, at Manchester, was successful even beyond the fondest expectations of its promoters. It was, indeed, one of the most remarkable temperance gatherings ever held in this country. If only it is followed up, as it is almost certain to be, by those who are now scattered again all over the land, and by the organizations they represented, it is beyond doubt that a great step forward has been taken towards that deliverance from the drink curse for which so many are crying to God.

One outstanding feature of the Conference was the attendance. The Town Hall, which holds somewhere about 1,500, was filled at the private conference in the morning, to which only delegates were admitted, and was crowded out at the public conference in the afternoon; while in the evening not only was the great Free Trade Hall, which holds 4,000, densely crowded, but an overflow meeting was held in another hall. A second noticeable feature of the gathering was its representative character. All sorts and conditions of temperance reformers were there, from speakers who caused a mild sensation by declaring that they were not themselves abstainers, to those who made of the most thorough-going sort. The great majority of the delegates were, of course, from English societies; but many were also present from Wales, and not a few from Scotland and Ireland. The moderate men were a good deal in evidence, especially among the speakers. But no one could fail to be impressed by the fact that, as the reception given to the strongest and most advanced statements and appeals so clearly showed, the gathering was very largely made up of abstainers and vetoists of the most pronounced order. Yet such was the spirit of unity throughout that these stalwarts pledged themselves with enthusiasm to the programme which commended itself to the moderates; and eager, earnest workers, led on by the hope that at last something effective is likely to be done, committed themselves to work meanwhile with heart and soul for what seems practicable and attainable, even when it comes far short of their ideal.

It is not enough to say that for once a great gathering of temperance reformers silenced their foes, and surprised their friends by their splendid unanimity. We must remember also that very many of those who were present were men and women of the most definite convictions and pronounced opinions on all the crucial points at issue. It is easy for the moderates to insist on unity, for that means that those who have gone further than they have are expected to come back to where they are. But to find hundreds of ardent advocates of all sorts of solutions, and of eager workers in this great reform, at one in their determination to advocate and work for this scheme, which is at once moderate and far-reaching, is so wonderful that it is not surprising that not a few felt that it was of God, and saw in it a pledge of victory in the sore fight.

Every speaker pleaded for unity. But even more powerful was the appeal which comes from the tremendous power of the foe and the enormous difficulties of the situation. Everyone sees that unless and rally round proposals which commend themselves to the moderate as well as the extreme, no true reform can come. Yet absolutely necessary as unity is, it must be attained without doing violence to the consciences of those who are united, and as the Conference went on it became increasingly evident that such is the unity in which it culminated.

No temperance reformer is asked to surrender any conviction or to lay any principle aside. Those who have been working for more than the report recommends will go on working as before, while at the same time not a few who have been despairing of ever getting prohibition see the way opening up to it through the Report. The immediate purpose of the union round the Report is to press for as much restrictive legislation of the liquor trade as there is a reasonable prospect of getting soon. But for very many what will thus be attained will only be a fresh starting point for new advance, with an ever-growing hope that the struggle for the mastery will end in the complete overthrow of the entire system of evil.

The only division of the Conference took place over the compensation proposals, and, few as those were who voted against them, it was recognised by all that for many the difficulty is a real one. Not only was it well-known that many who were present only accepted these proposals because they felt there could be no advance without them; it was also known that some were absent from the Conference because they were in the Report. These absentees might be few in number as compared with those who were present, but they included some who have nobly borne the heat and burden of the day, and who, far from being unwilling, as is sometimes alleged, to accept instalments of reform, have done yeoman service in connection with every instalment which has been won. Much was said about the proposals which was of little value, and some supported them with arguments which, if cogent at all, would warrant far more than Lord Peel proposes to give. On the other hand it was pointed out, that not only is whatever goes to dispossessed licence-holders to be taken from the remanent licence-holders, but that what is called compensation in the Report is at worst commutation for the loss of the whole or part of the proposed time-notice.

Another matter was cleared up in a way which gave great satisfaction to the representatives from Scotland and Wales. Doubt has been felt as to what was meant by the recommendation that "at the end of the given period, a wide measure of direct popular control might be applied under proper safeguards to Scotland and Wales;" and it was authoritatively stated that Lord Peel and the other members of the minority considered that recommendation an integral part of the Report, and as forming a necessary part of any bill founded on it.

Again and again while the Conference was going on the question must have pressed in on many a mind—"What prospect is there of the recommendations becoming law?" Some seemed to think that a bill would be introduced at once, but Lord Peel evidently is of opinion that such a bill, to have any chance, must be a Government measure, and that the task set before temperance reformers is to force the Government to take action. The discussion must also have been shadowed for not a few by the fact that it was not legislative proposals which were being discussed, but merely recommendations, and minority recommendations at that. Yet withal, the hope that the movement is bound to succeed, and to succeed soon, grew as the enthusiasm and the sense of a great unity of purpose grew; and by the close of the evening meeting the determination, by the help of God, to see the thing through, was overwhelming.

Those who ought to know say that there is an awakening on temperance matters both in the community and in Parliament. One very hopeful fact is that the tone adopted by Lord Salisbury and Mr. Ritchie is keenly resented by many of the supporters of the Government in the House of Commons, no fewer than seventy of whom have approached the Government in support of legislation on the lines of Lord Peel's Report.

A note which was struck by one speaker after another was that the Conference marked in Temperance Reform. There was also the sense of a new leader having been found in Lord Peel, who seemed greatly moved by the splendid reception he got. He has said that he entered on the work of the Royal Commission free from any bias except against fanaticism; but now, as the result of his experience there, his conviction is that "it has come to be a struggle for mastery between the State and a trade, and the time has fully come for the decision of the question, Who is to be Master?" Nor has his growth as leader in Temperance Reform come to an end. "I do believe in the ultimate control of the liquor traffic by local opinion," was one of his sayings last week, which seemed to show that he is on the way which may lead not merely to local control, but to local veto. And if, ere long, he is able to inscribe on the statute book of the realm a measure securing that fifty thousand drink shops shall be shut within seven years, or at their close that Scotland and Wales shall have the power of direct local control, and that the obstacles to further reform shall be so removed that the people will be able to write their sovereign wishes regarding this traffic of woe as on a clean sheet, generations yet unborn will bless him for his work, even if it falls to some one else to be the leader into the better land beyond. "They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing [marg. green]: to show that the Lord is upright; He is my Rock, and there is no unrighteousness in Him" (Psa. xcii. 14, 15).

THE BEGINNING OF A NEW ERA

In the Daily Mail of February 14, under the heading, "Lived in Five Reigns," there was a reference to one who is certainly known to some of the readers of The Christian. The D. M. says: "There are many old people living who have lived under five rulers," and proceeds to specify six or eight of "the most interesting cases." Amongst them comes in the well-known and honoured name of Mr. Robert C. Chapman.

AND for seventy years "Brother Chapman" has stood out before the men and women of Devon as a faithful witness of the Gospel of the grace of God. The writer of these lines well remembers meeting Mr. Chapman about fifty years ago at Bath. A prominent member of the religious body with which Mr. Chapman was identified said: "Ah yes, we talk; but Chapman lives." And the utterance came from one who bore a great historic name.

Howbeit, Robert Chapman could talk, as well as live. There exists a little volume full of pregnant sentences which fell from Mr. Chapman in the earlier days of his ministry, and which were taken down by some of his attached hearers.* And Mr. Chapman also wrote some few hymns worth remembering. One of these was penned by him when keeping a night vigil at the dying bed of a member of his congregation: it was called forth by the very earnest manner in which the sufferer expressed the longing of the soul to depart and be with Christ. Here it is:—

My soul, amid this stormy world,
Is like some fluttered dove,
And fain would be as swift of wing,
To flee to Him I love.

The cords that bound my heart to earth
Are loosed by Jesus' hand;
Before his cross I now am left
A stranger in the land.

That visage marred, those sorrows deep,
The thorns, the scourge, the gall,
These were the golden chains of love,
His captive to enthral.

My heart is with Him on his throne,
And ill can brook delay;
Each moment listening for the voice,
"Rise up, and come away."

Fain would I, Jesus, know thy love,
Which yet no measure knows;
Would search the depth of all thy wounds,
The secret of thy woes.

Fain would I strike the golden harp,
And wear the promised crown,
And at thy feet, while bending low,
Would sing what grace has done.

Then leave me not in this dark world,
A stranger, long to roam;
Come, Lord, and take me to Thyself,
Come, Jesus, quickly come. J. R. C.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, February 24. Daniel iv.

AN alarming dream which God sent to Nebuchadnezzar, and which his soothsayers were unable to interpret, greatly startled the king, whose empire at that time was enjoying a settled peace. How often when men are at rest in their houses, and flourishing in their palaces, they are nearer the blow of the axe than in hours of stress and storm. See to it that in seasons of prosperity you walk humbly with God, and bear fruit, that the axe may not be laid to the root of the tree.

What a remarkable description that is of God's angels given us in v. 13. They are watchers and also holy ones. God's angels watch over the saints, and it is in their interests that his chastisements fall upon their oppressors. O suffering saint!

The sentence which Daniel announced, that the king should become deranged in his mind, imagining himself a beast, and ranging with animals in the royal demesne, was a terrible one. But he did not hesitate in his duty to warn the proud monarch of the imminence of the worst, adding words of entreaty (v. 27). Men may secure a lengthening of their tranquillity, and a mitigation of their sentence, if they will forsake the sin with which God has a controversy.

O proud boast! How apt we are to speak of our fortunes, our prestige, our influence amongst men, as the great Babylon which we have built (v. 30). We are apt at attributing the success of our life to ourselves, and forgetting that after all there is only one Agent and Arbiter of events, to whom we must give praise and honour for ever (vv. 35, 36).

MONDAY, February 25. Daniel v.

The name of Belshazzar has been deciphered in inscriptions found at Babylon, from which it is inferred that he was associated with his father in the kingdom, and was left to defend Babylon. He was therefore a grandson of Nebuchadnezzar. The word "father" (v. 11) is obviously used in the sense of "ancestor."

What a feast this was! The great banqueting hall covered with sculptures, bedight with a thousand lights that flashed on golden plate and sumptuous decorations; the thousand lords, the most beautiful women of the land, the concourse of the magnates of religion and the state. How the wine flowed in rivers, and the laughter rang through the vaulted hall! There, upon the table, stood the vessels of the Temple, and notably the seven-branched candlestick, which cast its pure radiance upon the wall, clearly illumining the fingers of the hand that wrote.

Daniel recognized his Father's handwriting. He alone remained calm and composed amid the general dismay; nor did he hesitate to accost the grandson with his sins, as he had accosted his grandfather. That Belshazzar had not learnt the lesson of history; that he had lifted himself proudly against God; that he had not recognized with thankfulness the Divine Providence; that he had come short of the glory of the Most High—these were the faults that with unhesitating voice the servant of God charged home. Against the mercies of our lot, the opportunities of knowing better, the lessons of our individual and family life, and the revelations of his will, God is ever weighing us. O soul, what wilt thou do without the all-prevailing merit of Jesus Christ? We must ask Him to stand by us in the scale, that his worth may avail us; and that He may blot out the handwriting that is against us.

TUESDAY, February 26. Daniel vi.

God is able, as He had forced Nebuchadnezzar to acknowledge (iv. 35) to put whom He will into positions of authority. Promotion cometh neither from the east or west, but from God. Daniel, therefore, in spite of the change in the reigning dynasty, was placed in a position of great dignity and importance. At first he was appointed one of three presidents, and finally, through his ability and faithfulness, was preferred to be chief. We might describe him as the premier of the entire empire. What a marvellous tribute was afforded to his saintly character by his foes, when they could find no fault in him, except as concerned his religious life.

It was customary for Jews in prayer to turn the face towards the Holy City, which for so long had been the centre of their great religious system (1 Kings viii. 44; Jonah ii. 4). With us, the upturned face, and the references we make to the Great High Priest, who ever lives at God's right hand to intercede, are significant of a posture of soul analogous and yet superior to the open window. See to it that your windows are always open towards the New Jerusalem, of which you are citizen, but from which for a little while you are exiled (Psa. lv. 17).

Still God sends his angels to shut the lions' mouths, that they may not hurt his people, strongly conscious of uprightness before God and man. It is not necessary to suppose that Daniel saw the angel, any more than we behold the horses and chariots in the mountains around us. Dare to believe, child of God, that the ministering angels, though unseen, engirdle you and intercept the blows and plots of your adversaries. Only walk before God in righteousness and peace, and be sure that you are immortal till your work is done.

WEDNESDAY, February 27. Daniel vii.

Forty years after Nebuchadnezzar's dream, the prophet beholds in vision the same series of kingdoms. The king saw a graphic representation of their strength and splendour declining from gold to iron; the prophet beheld emblems of their rapacity, destructiveness, and hostility towards God and his people. Nothing could more graphically set forth the essential characteristics of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome, than the emergence of these four beasts from the Mediterranean. In the first, eagle's wings are added to the lion, to indicate the rapidity of its conquests, while their removal, and the substitution of the man's nature for the beast's, indicate the milder and more rational policy on which the Babylonian Empire rested in its later years. The bear raised up more on one side, symbolizes the preponderance of Medes over Persians; the leopard's four heads signify the division of Alexander's kingdom among his four generals; for the most part the fourth beast is identified by reliable commentators with Rome.

From disputed points of interpretation, we turn to that clear vision of the judgment of the Ancient of Days, who bestows on the Son of Man kingdom and glory. This prediction was referred to by our Lord in his answer to the solemn adjuration of Caiaphas in Matt. xxvi. 64; and what a glimpse is afforded of the awful conflict which must go on between the saints of the Most High and the great world-powers which desire to wear them out! But as we have seen recently in China, the judgment sits, and the dominion of the persecutor has an end. We are now witnessing the judgment of God which is being executed on the nations of the earth. Let it not be forgotten that Great Britain is standing at that bar!

THURSDAY, February 28. Daniel viii.

Shushan was the lily-palace. There, by the river Ulai, the prophet beheld in vision the attack which would subsequently be made on the Medo-Persian kingdom by Alexander. The great horn which was broken is, of course, Alexander, and the four notable ones are his four generals, who divided his conquests between them. The little horn is referred by many to Antiochus, whose conflict with the Maccabees was one of the most significant in later Jewish history. But others refer it to Mohammed and his followers, who have reigned over the same regions which formed the Empire, first of Persia, then of Alexander. In this case the little horn would stand for the Eastern apostasy, as distinguished from the Western, which is said to be represented by the little horn of the fourth beast (chap. vii. 8). It would be well if my readers would study the books of the Maccabees, included in the Apocrypha, and they would understand more clearly what is intended in vv. 11, 12.

Let us listen for the speech of saint with saint (v. 13). Let us believe that God wants to make us understand (v. 17). Let us know that suffering cannot be perpetual (v. 19). There is always an appointed time beyond which the surge of sorrow shall not overwhelm the soul. God is punctual to his time, and that time has been fixed with infinite precision, by perfect wisdom and love.

FRIDAY, March 1. Daniel ix.

What a prayer is this! In many respects it is a model for us all. It was based on the Divine Word. Having understood that the seventy years of desolation were nearly fulfilled, Daniel set himself to pray for the return of his people from the land of their captivity. That is the most successful kind of supplication, when we can put our hand upon the Divine promise, and claim it as our own.

It was very humble. Fasting, sackcloth, and ashes, were the outward habiliments, but notice the tone. "We have sinned, we have rebelled; to us belongeth confusion of face." He confessed his sin and the sin of his people. There is such a thing as vicarious confession, in which some holy soul takes to itself the task of bearing the sins of his people, and pouring out the story before God, as though they were his own. But we hardly need to go to our own country or people for sins to confess. We have plenty of our own, and the nearer we come to God's infinite light the more we abhor ourselves and repent in dust and ashes.

It was very earnest. The verses 17, 18, 19, are full of a Gethsemane tone of anguish which reminds us of our Lord's words as to the violence which takes the kingdom of heaven by force. It is not long prayers that prevail with God, but strong prayers do. God loves to see us in dead earnest. He even seems sometimes to deny us, that He may draw us out in supplication. Notice the response to such prayer. Before it was spoken, it was granted (23). Before he called, he was answered, and while he was yet speaking he was heard. Pray on, believer; even now the Divine answer is hastening towards thee, swifter than the speed of the morning beams across the vault of space.

The subject matter of the reply deserves much weighty pondering. The work of our Saviour is most clearly set forth, as shutting up transgression, expiating iniquity, fulfilling prophecy, and consecrating the true temple of God, which is the church.

SATURDAY, March 2. Daniel x.

Two years after the decree of Cyrus had been promulgated (Ezra i.), and the first Jewish exiles had departed for their own land, Daniel, after fasting three weeks, beheld in vision an angel, whose appearance he describes. If one of our Master's servants be so glorious, what must not He be; and if our comeliness is turned to shame and corruption in the presence of a fellow-being, who of us can stand before the great God?

And yet we are beloved! Daniel was greatly beloved (11 and 19). Is it not wonderful that such words should be addressed to us, who are not worthy to gather up the crumbs which fall from our Master's table? But He is the same Lord, who delighteth in mercy, and loves us because He will, according to the tenderness and sweetness of his own delectable character. "O man greatly beloved, fear not, peace be unto thee, be strong, yea, be strong." Such words strengthen us indeed. When God speaks to us, we are strengthened. "Speak, for Thou hast strengthened me."

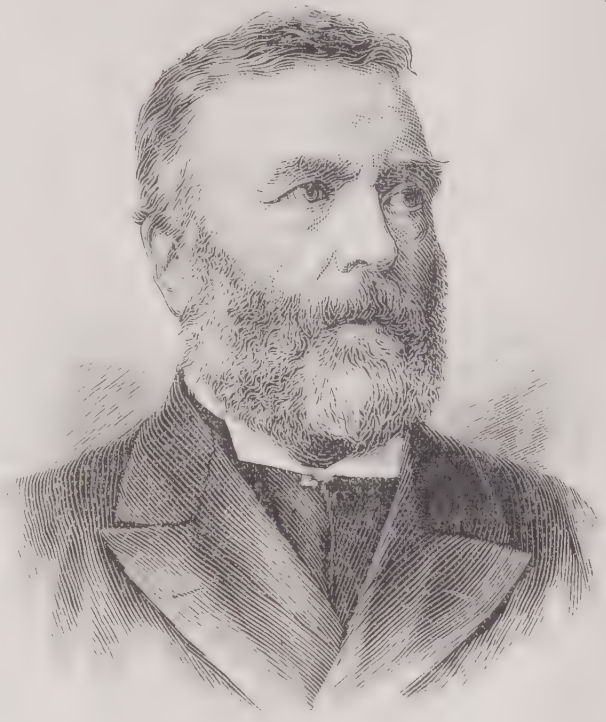
This delay in the angel's advent (v. 20, &c.) is very mysterious and instructive. There are adverse winds in the heavenly places, which delay the arrival of expected succour, so that it becomes overdue. Probably each great city and continent has its malevolent vicegerent, one of the devil's angels, and reference is made to such an one, in the 20th verse, for the kingdom of Persia. These are opposed by the hosts of light. For twenty-one days the conflict had lasted. For three weeks the expected succour was delayed. It may be that the commandment has gone forth to deliver us, but the grace of God is withstood and resisted. Nevertheless, though the vision tarry, wait for it: it will come, and will not tarry. In the meanwhile, do not relax your faith and prayer. God will strengthen you, till the answer arrives.

Rev. J. Bowen-Jones, LL.D.

ON a bright day in the summer of 1851, three young theological students about to leave college stood on the top of a high steeple on the banks of the Teify, discussing their plans, and hopes, and ideals in the ministry which they were about to enter. They were Thomas Davies, afterwards Rev. T. Davies, D.D., minister for many years of Siloah Chapel, Llanelly; E. Aeron Jones, who has since filled several of the most important pastorates in the Principality, and has been one of the most eloquent and suggestive preachers of his generation; and the subject of this sketch, who for the last twenty-six years has been the minister of the "Plough" Church, Brecon. These three bright and eager young spirits were destined to play a prominent part in the religious life of the last half century in Wales, and each attained in turn to the chairmanship of the Welsh Congregational Union, which is the highest mark of honour in the power of the denomination to bestow. The subject of this sketch was recently honoured with the degree of LL.D. from Yale University, U.S.A.

Rev. J. Bowen-Jones was born in the year 1829, at a farm called Blaen Corthyn, in the parish of Llanwenog, in Cardiganshire—a county that has produced an extraordinary number of Welsh preachers, scholars, and leaders in almost every walk in life during the last two centuries. The social and religious atmosphere of his up-bringing made it almost a matter of course that any "lad of parts" should aspire to be either a schoolmaster, or, if religiously inclined, a minister of the Gospel. Mr. Bowen-Jones was both in turn. He early displayed a strong aptitude for scholarship, having a prodigious memory, which assimilated facts, dates, and especially mathematical principles with avidity, and a mind of a keen and incisive logical quality. In 1847 he won the degree of B.A. in the London University, being the first Welshman to graduate in that institution, this being the year when the late Dr. R. W. Dale, of Birmingham, also graduated. He had previously entered the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, in 1845, as a student for the ministry. He was ordained to the pastorate of the two churches of Hermon and Tabor, in the Vale of Towy, in 1851, so that he will soon have completed half a century of work in the active ministry. He has thus well earned the honourable retirement which it is his purpose to seek when that period is completed. At Hermon and Tabor he followed the poet-preacher, Thomas Jones, afterwards well known as the minister of Albany and Bedford Chapels, London, and preceded Rev. E. Aeron Jones, who has already been mentioned as a preacher of rare endowment. These three ministries made a deep and abiding impression on the neighbourhood, and are vividly remembered to this day.

In 1859 Mr. Jones removed to Penybont-ar-Ogwy, where, in addition to the pastoral care of two churches, he undertook the management of a day school, and this arduous combination of tasks he continued to fulfil very successfully for ten years. The conditions of life in the Welsh country churches during the early and middle decades of the century were such that almost all the ministers were obliged to supplement their scanty salaries by following some kind of secular occupation. This was usually farming, but occasionally, as in this instance, the same man fulfilled the two functions of minister and "dominie." Wales, indeed, owed to her ministers almost all the mental enlightenment, as well as spiritual instruction, the nation received for two centuries, till the advent of the modern system of popular education. In many a far-off village and lonely hamlet, the two fountains of knowledge—of things human and things Divine—flowed from the same source—the manse—and ran together in the twin channels of the day-school and the Sunday-school. Who shall measure the amount of formative influence on successive generations of the Welsh people exercised by these modest, unrecognised, but heroically conducted little seminaries, where men were prepared for the business of life, and for the work of the ministry, and for the varied channels of the service, without any help or recognition from the State, but in which was steadily fed that appetite for learning and that passion for theology which are the two outstanding features of the typical Welsh nature? The day of these schools is done, and their place knoweth them no more. Handsome Board-Schools and secondary schools and noble universities now minister to the culture of the people; indeed, probably the finest and most complete system of popular education to be found within the broad confines of the British Empire is to be found in Wales, and its advantages are eagerly prized.



From Photograph by Mr. Ll. G. Edwards, Llanfaes, Brecon.

But while we thankfully recognise what the State has done during these latter days for the Principality, we should not forget the humble sources from which these educational privileges sprang, nor the men who quickened the mind and heart of the nation till it was fit for its new advantages, with no outward encouragement, and but a pittance by way of reward. Dr. Bowen-Jones and men of the same stamp have been truly national benefactors in this direction.

After fifteen years of very hard work at Penybont, Dr. Bowen-Jones removed in 1874 to Brecon, where he has laboured ever since. Here he has filled the varied and interesting duties of the ministry with efficiency and acceptance. In addition he has been for many years an editor. Earlier in his life he conducted a quarterly review, called Y Beirniad (The Critic), in which some of the finest theological essays in the Welsh language were published. This periodical was after the model of the British Quarterly and such substantial publications. The Critic was never a source of financial profit, but it had a profound influence on the minds that read it, and, as is the case with the Quarterly, it is still regretted by those who used to read its stirring and profound pages. Later, Dr. Jones undertook the editorship of a religious monthly, Cenad Hedd (The Messenger of Peace), which aims at a more modest, but nevertheless useful and interesting programme. The Welsh love their religious periodicals, and read them eagerly from cover to cover.

This sketch of public service would be incomplete without a word or two about a singularly interesting personality. Dr. Bowen-Jones is a man of striking individuality. He is many-sided in nature. His mental alertness at his advanced age is extraordinary. Problems in mathematics, "riders" in Euclid, theological mysteries and points of disputation, the structure and beauties of Welsh poetry, quotations from great authors and divines—these and many other varied topics form the subjects on which he will pour forth a stream of bright and interesting talk by the hour. In theology he is thoroughly Puritan in his sympathies, and he preaches a whole-hearted Evangelical Gospel, without compromise or qualification. But, like the earliest Puritans, he is far from being a gloomy ascetic, and has no sympathy with those who would banish innocent joys out of the programme of the Christian life. As a draughts, or chess, or croquet player, he will hold his own against all comers, varying his sterner labours with these intellectual games, and entering into them with the same eagerness and thoroughness that he shows for the more solemn duties of life. His excellent health he puts down largely to the facts that he tills his own garden, which is one-fifth of an acre in extent, all the year round, and that he is a strong teetotaler and non-smoker. As a preacher he is an excellent exponent of what may be called "sanctified common sense," rather than a stirring orator. He does not aim at making his audience laugh or weep, but he instructs it patiently and thoroughly in the principles and duties of the faith, and appeals to the sturdy devotion and practical allegiance of the heart of the believer. In many ways this strong-brained, strong-hearted, strong-willed man is one of the most typical Welshmen of his age—a type that, we fear, is not being repeated amid the softer influences and vaguer ideals that seem to rule at this, the dawn of the Twentieth Century. We can ill spare this type from our midst; it forms the vertebral element in our social and religious life in Wales, and if it lacks some of the graces that are popular, it supplies the foundation and the support of all that is noble and good in the national character.

Irish Coastguards.—There is ample opportunity for earnest servants of God to join with others in seeking to spread his kingdom among the coastguards of Ireland by corresponding with them at intervals, and supplying them with small packets of Gospel papers monthly. Many of the men are stationed in remote parts of the country, far distant from any place of worship. Friends willing to kindly help in this direction should communicate (stating the number they can take) with Mr. William A. Garratt, Glenvar, Blackrock, co. Dublin.

The late Rev. Thomas Lydiatt,

LIVERPOOL.

BORN at the village of Tarporley in 1837, Rev. Thomas Lydiatt came under a saving knowledge of the truth while a member of a class taught by his uncle—Mr. Joseph Charlesworth—in the Sunday-school of the local Baptist chapel, the minister being at the time Rev. Michael Shore. Early in his "teens" he was received as a member of the congregation, and was found a useful helper in the aggressive work, assisting at and conducting services in the surrounding villages. From his youth he had the advantage of being surrounded by influences highly favourable to progress in the Christian life. He was apprenticed to the iron trade with a local preacher of the Methodist New Connexion.

Removing at the age of seventeen to St. Helens, Mr. Lydiatt continued to hold evangelistic meetings on the Lord's Day, with open-air services on week evenings; and his work is still borne in loving memory in the district. Another change took him to Birkenhead, where, as a foreman mechanic, his personal influence over the large number of men under his control was of the most salutary character, many having expressed in various ways their regard for his consistent life among them, ever testifying to the grace and power of the Saviour.

At this period the late Mr. Scroggie was associated with Mr. Lydiatt in the evangelistic work. Sunday was an especially busy day, beginning in summer with an open-air service as early as five o'clock in the morning, and all the hours being filled with devoted service cheerfully rendered for Christ.

A large number of men and women whose hearts the Lord had touched gathered round, till a congregation of between 300 and 400 persons claimed his constant care. One place of meeting after another was found unsuitable, till the Aberdeen Mission Hall was specially erected. This in turn gave place to the beautiful building known as Jackson Street Baptist Church, where Mr. Lydiatt continued in charge till six years before his death, the state of his health then making some lessening of his labours imperative.

DETERMINED OPPOSITION.

In early days, persecution and annoyance were frequently met with. He was summoned before the magistrates on a simple charge of carrying on open-air preaching, and dismissed with a caution. At one time his life was threatened, bricks and stones being thrown at the windows of his house, till he was obliged to seek a place of refuge from the fury of the mob. On another occasion, when he was surrounded by an excited crowd, a friendly Roman Catholic priest helped to still the tumult by walking off arm-in-arm with Mr. Lydiatt. A number of Roman Catholics had at that time been converted, one of whom—Mr. Henry Taylor—subsequently offered himself to, and was accepted by, the China Inland Mission, ultimately laying down his life in his distant field of labour.

When the Liverpool Evangelization Society was formed in 1876, after the memorable visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, many among both ministers and laymen held that there should be only one name put forward for the superintendentship. For twenty-five years Mr. Lydiatt held the office, and his removal was a very serious loss to the work. The testimony of the Committee was that "he was and his knowledge of Scripture made him also a helper of believers in training them for earnest useful Christian work. His Bible readings were much appreciated for their clear views of truth and their simplicity." The Committee also testify "to his devotion to the cause of Christ, his gentleness and tact in dealing with souls, and his readiness to endure hardness and fatigue in any special service. The Society's work necessitated the employment of numerous volunteers, who were sent out to preach the Gospel in some parts of the city and in distant country places, and Mr. Lydiatt maintained loving fellowship with these."

Before the largest assemblies he was at ease, and would turn over the leaves of his Bible to a particular text with a facility which proved his intimate acquaintance with the whole range of Scripture, bringing forth the beauty and harmony of the teaching, and the unmistakable "Thus saith the Lord." His powerful voice and distinct utterance added much to his usefulness, aged people being delighted to find they could hear all he said. His discourses were evangelical and practical, being illustrated with marked aptness and power. The great day alone will reveal how many were directed to the Saviour by him, helped to holy living and active zeal, and trained for service like his own.

The gift of prayer was truly his, as well as the gift of preaching. He would lead the devotions of a worshipping assembly helpfully and comprehensively, and the unction of the Holy One was ever present. The Noon Prayer Meeting was a delight to him, and his fellowship was valued by all—he was always ready to remain for personal conversation on spiritual things with any who desired it. He had a keen perception of the needs of particular cases, a frequent remark to others being, "Life first, and fruit will follow." Another piece of advice which more than one worker received from him was, "Lay hands suddenly on no man."

INCIDENTS OF THE WORK.

Many interesting incidents have been put on record in connection with Mr. Lydiatt's tent work. Just before one service two little street arabs walked in arm in arm. "Well," said a kind-hearted worker, "what do you boys want?" "Please, sir," replied one of them, "Bill, here, says he's happy, and I ain't. I've come to see if I can't be happy too."

After another gathering a group of boys gathered round. "Well, boys," he said, as they looked anxiously into his face, "have you understood the preaching to-night?" "Yes," said the eldest, who acted as spokesman, "but I do not see how believing in Christ is going to save me." "If God says so, as his Word proclaims, can you not take Him at his word?" "Oh," they all responded, "I never thought of that." They desired to be left alone for a time, and then all came forward to make a public profession of having accepted Christ.

Yet another blessed experience was an awakening among a company of young women, who had been brought by companions in business, and of whom more than twenty were led to accept the Saviour. A man who helped to take down the tent in one place declined any payment, saying, "I got a great blessing out of that tent, which

IS BETTER THAN MONEY."

Among the striking cases which were regularly met with at the various halls, was one in which six members of a family were brought to the Lord during the course of a single mission.

Afternoon Bible Readings on several occasions aroused widespread interest. A blacksmith in one district closed his shop on two afternoons in order that he might be able to attend.

The story of the regular congregational work was one of continuous blessing, the power of God being manifested through the preaching of the Word. Of one meeting of young converts—when 120 attended, and testified to having recently undergone the great change—a friend wrote that it "was the most extraordinary meeting I have seen in connection with any church. Some of the most respectable people in the district, and some of the very lowest, met together to praise and magnify the Lord for his great salvation; and now, after more than two months, most of these are giving testimony that they have been truly saved."

Only those who have actually done work in common lodging-houses know how hard it is. The subject of our sketch was a pioneer in this direction. In rescue work—admittedly the most difficult to which consecrated men and women can put their hands—Mr. Lydiatt was peculiarly successful. As the result of one midnight meeting, fifteen young women were taken to different refuges and homes. "Such a meeting I never saw; we never had so many unfortunates present."

One important change brought about by the death of Mr. Lydiatt is that the Evangelization Society for Liverpool and neighbourhood commenced the new century as the Liverpool Branch of the London Evangelization Society.

Songs in the Night.

Moan—moan—moan!
Ye winds of the darksome night,
Under a moonless, starless sky,
Draped in cloud of the blackest dye,
Bewailing the sweet and bright,
Lying dead in the autumn blight!
In this hour of gloom with the weird winds sighing
The world seems a field of the dead and dying:
The youthful fade and the aged groan;
And the wretched perish—alone, alone!
The sinner writhes with his face aghast
At a coming doom, at a guilty past!
With none to tell the departing soul,
Of the blood of Christ that could make it whole.

Sing—sing—sing!
Ye waves of the western main,
Under the stars and the full-orbed moon,
Skies as blue as the cope of June,
Chanting soft in the minor strain,
Your plaintive wail with a glad refrain.
But the grandest music in earth or heaven
Is the song in the heart of the sin-forgiven—
From an ocean of love where no wild winds break,
And no gallant ship leaves a foaming wake;
From an ocean of peace where no storm-clouds rest
To shadow the sheen on its glassy breast;
'Tis the victor's shout in the Jordan's flood:
The crowning hymn to the Son of God.

Martyred Missionaries.

On Tuesday evening of last week a remarkable gathering was held in Mildmay Conference Hall, in memory of the members of the China Inland Mission who have met a martyr's death in China, and in thanksgiving for those who, through peril and suffering, have been mercifully delivered. The dominant note of the meeting was that of victory, while there was manifest a settled determination to obey the call of God, and to "go forward."

When Mr. F. Marcus Wood read the death-roll, he added that within a few days it had been found necessary to add the names of six missionaries and four children, of whom definite tidings had only now been received. Every heart was moved to its depth as the fact was brought home that no fewer than forty-eight members, ten associates from the Swedish Holiness Union and twenty children, belonging to this one Mission, have sealed their testimony with their blood. It was felt that words were inadequate to express the sense of the loss which the Mission had sustained, as well as that which had been brought on China through the action of misguided men. The hand of sympathy was held out to the other societies whose records brought up the terrible list of missionary murders to 133. "I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord . . . and their works do follow them."

The Chairman (Mr. J. E. Mathieson) spoke of the difficulty which even believing people find in fathoming such events as these, and went on to show how God condescends to reveal some of his secrets to those who wait upon Him in meditation and prayer. "We are very apt to overlook the fact that martyrdom is merely the closing scene of a life of witnessing to the Lord Jesus Christ. The blessed title of witness (martyr) is given in a very signal way in Rev. 1/5, where greater honour is put upon Him as 'the faithful witness' than as the ruler over all. This agrees with Isaiah 55/4, where before being 'a leader and commander to the people,' He must first be a witness.'"

"GO AND TELL JESUS."

A most helpful and spiritual address was based by Rev. H. E. Fox (Church Missionary Society) on "They went and told Jesus" (Matthew 14/12). "When the agony of your heart was greatest did you feel that you helped yourself by speaking to no one? I think not. I think it is a truer instinct to seek out some friend into whose heart you can pour your heart. For what reason have you told Jesus when you were in trouble?

"(1) Not because He did not know. You knew and He knew all about it. There was not a cry which He did not hear, or a detail which He did not know. You need not tell Him, but you do for all that. You tell Him, for you are sure He understands you.

"(2) Because of his human heart and infinite sympathy. Not only did He know, but his heart went out to you and your friends. He loved with an intensity of affection which even you could not bestow upon them. The Lord loved, and you appealed to that love just as those two sisters sent that pathetic message, 'Lord, he whom Thou lovest is sick.' You know that his heart has been going out to you, and it has helped you to bear the strain.

"(3) Because you knew that all power is with Him. You knew that He could have stopped all this. You knew that He might have stretched his hand out and sheltered these dear ones. Yet as you have read* in that book story after story, you must have realised that the days of miracles are not over. There are more miracles recorded in that book than in any since the Bible was written. There is many a heathen man in China wondering at the way in which God protected his servants. 'Why did not He protect them all?' Because He had a better resurrection for them, a better way of escape, even through the suffering and sharpness of death. He would not stretch out his hand for Himself in those moments when one word would have set legions of angels free to defend Him. He willed that He should suffer and die, and what if He willed that these should share his crown?

"(4) Because they have won the day. Glory be to Jesus, they did win. There will be a greater victory when He comes again with these dear saints of his, and with many a man and woman who hated and persecuted them. Think how Jesus won, out of the crowd that stoned Stephen, the greatest of the apostles."

LOOKING BEHIND AND BEFORE.

An object-lesson in the grace of God was given when Mr. Theodore Howard referred to the survivors who were present, and nineteen missionaries rose as their names were mentioned. Turning to them, he welcomed them in the name of the Lord. Thereafter three of these friends addressed the meeting. Probably few had realised before the fiery trial of the native church, as they did after the vivid description of Mr. A. Lutley, who closed by declaring his belief that God is now going to do such a work among the Chinese as has been longed for by many. The keynote of Rev. A. R. Saunders' address was praise to the "mighty miracle-working God," and after describing incident after incident of which no explanation could be given save that God had stepped in, he quoted Dr. Griffith John's words, that "It was one of the most marvellous things he had ever heard of that the party did not die of sunstroke." "What of the future?" was Mr. F. C. H. Dreyer's question. "We mean to return. There are many who would have us retreat, but thank God there are thousands who cry 'No, go forward.'"

The application of the whole gathering was made by Pastor Frank White. "Let us say with Isaiah, 'Here am I.' That was the presentation, the surrender. Then comes the petition, 'Send me.' If God sends you, He will suit you for the work, fit you, furnish you, and use you for his glory; and you will be numbered among the noble army of martyrs (witnesses)." When Rev. F. B. Meyer led in the closing prayer, there were fervent "Amens" as he besought forgiveness for the Chinese; and very many joined audibly in a dedication of themselves to be—"Ever, only, all for Thee."

A CONSUL-GENERAL'S EXPERIENCE.

At a reception of the Presbyterian Union, held in New York, the Hon. John Goodnow (United States Consul-General at Shanghai) made a very emphatic denial of the allegation that the recent troubles in China were due either to the missionaries or their propaganda. He spoke simply as a Government official, and gave no hint whatever as to his own religious views—if he has any,—but his words were plain, straight, definite, and related to facts within his own knowledge.

On his return to America, he had been "much surprised" to hear that "the whole thing" had been an uprising of the Chinese against the missionaries and their work. "That," said he, "is absolute nonsense." Last February, a high official, who is now one of the Empress Dowager's most trusted advisers, and who is considered one of the most anti-foreign members of her Court, gave him seven acres of land, worth 35,000dols. in gold, for the benefit of a missionary hospital, as a mark of appreciation for the good work done by it for the people. Last March he saw Liu Kün Tih, the Viceroy of Nanking, with regard to a dispute in one of his provinces between a mission board and a wealthy Chinese corporation. He finished the interview by saying to the Viceroy: "'Take all the evidence yourself, and decide it yourself.' I felt quite confident that he would do the right thing," and the result justified his expectations.

"In my last interview with Li Hung Chang," he proceeded, "he said he hoped that in the new treaties provision would be made for limiting the number of missionaries allowed to come into the Empire for some time to come. I replied that the Chinese had gone about securing that end in quite the wrong way, and that for every missionary killed fifteen or twenty more would come, and that for every native Christian killed a hundred would spring up to take their places.

"When I went to China I did not believe it possible to convert a single grown Chinaman. During these troubles tens of thousands have had the opportunity to recant and thereby save their lives, and because they refused they have gone to the block, and whole villages have been wiped off the face of the earth. I shall never talk of 'rice Christians' any more, nor do I believe will any honest man who knows the facts about what happened in North China last summer.

"We have reached the Chinese people in one very effective way—by helping their women and children through our hospital work.

"I do not know any hospital in China that is not a missionary one. Last summer all the trouble took place in practically three provinces. By agreement with us in Shanghai, sixteen provinces kept the peace, and protected foreigners and their property; and, in cases where property has been destroyed, it has in almost every case been paid for by the local people. The average Chinaman in South and Central China is just beginning to find out that there is a world outside China. The assaults that have been made on Chinese isolation for the last seventy-five years have tended to unify the Empire, and there is now being created, for the first time in its history, a middle class public opinion—that of merchants, traders, bankers, &c., and this public opinion will be very susceptible to good influences from missionaries and teachers.

"The United States, by the events of the last three or four years, has been placed in possession of the strategic point of all that side of the Pacific Ocean, and it is impressed on me more and more that we have been placed there with duty on our shoulder; that we have been put there to be the dominant factor in the development of the Chinese people. How are we to do it? By so acting with kindness, firmness, justice, and consideration that we shall keep them our friends, and, instead of making war upon them, work good for them, and in doing so effect reflex good upon ourselves."

The Philippine Islands.

THE condition of the Islands, as viewed from within, vastly differs from the ideas gathered before entering them. A missionary is not here many days before finding out that seekers are everywhere, and in the most extraordinary numbers. An ordinary visit to a family brings in a crowd of eager listeners, some with a thirst to know the truth which is painful in its intensity.

In the city of Manila the converts in many cases are themselves spreading the knowledge of the way of salvation which, but such a short time before, had been unknown to them, though it had doubtless been sought after. In the capital and its near surroundings over two thousand—probably three thousand—hear the Gospel week by week.

The need of experienced Christian missionaries on this field during these extraordinary, days of revival is already felt, and more than one worker fears for the stability of the converts who are being brought to the Lord Jesus by their countrymen, who so recently have found the way of life themselves.

It is touching to hear, from the missionaries, converts, and seekers, of the vast numbers who are earnestly desiring to have the Gospel sent to them. It is no uncommon thing for the leading people of a town to send a petition to the missionaries either to come to them with the Gospel themselves, or else to send one of their converted countrymen to them with the Gospel. The church in many cases is offered, and the support of the bearer of the message of Life. Alas, it is also no uncommon thing for the missionaries to find themselves unable to go themselves, and unable to spare the native Christians from the work already filling their time. Lack of abundant supplies of Gospels and tracts, &c., which would be silent messengers of life to those seekers, has much retarded the knowledge of the Gospel in reaching them. Also the lack of funds for travelling expenses makes it impossible for some of the workers to press out into those parts of the field from which the cry for help so constantly comes, even when free to do so.

The almost wholesale turning from Romanist darkness by these religiously-inclined Philippinos means a turning toward the living, pitiful Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. The Bible Societies are doing a grand work. Spanish priests do not dare to return to the provinces, and so intense is the feeling against the friars, that the American Government has found itself obliged to protect the provinces and towns from which the friars are expelled by the people.

Ecumenical Missionary Conference Report.

AT length we welcome the report* of the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, held in New York in the spring of last year. It is a handsome work in two volumes, containing over 1,000 full-size pages. Here we have presented in a useable form, the latest intelligence from all parts of the mission field; and, as the bearers of the news were for the most part persons actively engaged in missionary labour, there is authority as well as charm in the many narratives of the unfolded tale.

A brief history of the Conference has been prefixed as a record of its organization and characteristics. The subject-matter of the book is divided as follows:—(1) The Story of the Conference. (2) The Missionary Idea. (3) The Survey of the Field. (4) Missionary Work. (5) Appendix, containing the detailed Programme and Organization of the Conference, Statistics, Bibliography and Index.

These five divisions include thirty-six subdivisions; and these latter, in many cases, comprehend quite a number of distinct sections. For instance, under "The Missionary Idea," we have papers on Prayer and Beneficence, Comity and Co-operation, Missionary Qualifications and Methods of Work. As to "The Survey of the Field," it is sufficient to say that it is very full, and deals with the Anti-Christian forces as well as religious operations in many lands, by workers representing various societies and nationalities. "The Missionary Work" occupies the bulk of the second volume; here we read what may be said of manifold operations—Bible Work, Evangelization, Educational, Industrial, and Medical Work, and the Self-Support of Native Churches.

To compile such a report was an exacting task. A formal reproduction of addresses would have resulted in a series of volumes weighted with verbiage and repetition. Therefore the editors decided upon a topical arrangement, and dealt with the addresses as contributed material. The reports have obviously been manipulated with judgment and discretion. In the words of the preface: "The controlling thought in the selection and arrangement of the material was to give a true conception of the Conference, to increase the motive power of the Church, to enlarge its vision of the great world field, and to promote the development of a science of missions."

Readers of The Christian will remember that the Conference commanded the attention of distinguished men—the Hon. Benjamin Harrison being President—and that many thousands of people were present at the seventy sessions. Neither patronage nor attendance, influential as they were, made the Conference the success which it actually was. Purpose was greater than both these, and the manifestation of Christian union and Evangelical enthusiasm afforded ground of devout praise to God. To speak at such meetings was a privilege, and those who did so, said much that was worthy of world-wide attention. These volumes give their words. There are errors by the way; but we all do well to remember the old-time question—"Who can understand his errors?" (Ps. xix. 12).

Students of foreign missions will not need to be told that the Reports of the great conferences on the subject are repositories of facts and principles that cannot but prove of service to such as write or speak on the good cause. From time to time we have consulted with much satisfaction Reports of past conferences:—Liverpool, 1860; Mildmay, 1878; London, 1888. We like also to include the less comprehensive volume on the Mildmay Conference in 1886. Having in mind the all-round interest and service of past reports, we place this on our shelves with peculiar confidence that it will, on consultation, answer a thousand questions regarding various fields and labourers therein, and supply valuable information as to methods of work as the years go by.

Soldiers in South Africa.

CHRISTIAN work among the men is still going on. Although many have returned home, the need is as great as ever. Mr. and Mrs. Osborn Howe propose keeping their Camp Homes open until peace is declared, and then the South Africa General Mission will carry on work among the soldiers as a permanent part of their mission.

I give the following extract from a letter I have received from one of the men:—"We are having some good times, spiritually, in Bloemfontein. The daily Bible reading at 5.30 p.m., in the little tent, is fruitful of blessing. All who can do so, come together daily at noon, for half-an-hour of prayer, with the special object of pleading for a blessing on the Gospel message to be spoken in the evening in the 'Green Tent.' God is blessing his work in the Camp. 'My soul, wait thou on God; my expectation is from Him.' I am rejoicing that every day finds me with a clearer and better knowledge of God."

There has been a feeling that our workers among the soldiers would not have the sympathy of the present Commander-in-Chief. A junior officer gave expression to this feeling to Mr. Osborn Howe, who wrote to Lord Kitchener on the subject. I cannot do better than give the following extract from his Lordship's reply:—"His Lordship much regrets that you should have been led to imagine that his attitude towards your work differs from that of Lord Roberts; and I am to inform you that, so far from this being the case, he is very deeply impressed by the value of your work, and hopes that it may long continue and increase.—Yours faithfully, "W. H. Congreve, Major,
"Private Secretary."

Nothing could be more satisfactory to all Christian workers in the Army in South Africa than this frank and kindly recognition of their services by the present Commander-in-Chief.

Turks & Christian Prisoners.

SO jealous are the Turks concerning their religion that we are continually hearing of their cruelty towards any whom they even suspect to be inquiring after Christianity. Many are thrown into prison without trial. Prison life is terrible; no food or clothing is supplied, and, in fact, sometimes the prisoners' whereabouts is concealed in order that their friends should not give them the bare necessaries of life.

For some time past, friends in connection with the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society have supplied funds for the support of ten prisoners, who, with several others, were in bonds for their loyalty to Jesus Christ. The last mail brings us the good news that all of their number have at last been released; two, more fortunate than the others, were acquitted some months ago. One, a young man who had been a member of the theological class, has gone to Diabekir as assistant teacher in the schools of the Protestant community there; the other young man, who was just about to start off with his father's family to join the force of the Arabian Mission at Muscat, is settled for the present as teacher and preacher in a village near Mardin. The father, who was a suspect, but not imprisoned, has also resumed work. A number of years before the massacres, he had been employed as a colporteur. He has met with a good deal of opposition, and was delayed for some two months in Diabekir, being arrested, fined, and obliged to take out a licence; but it is hoped that he will get along in future without further molestation.

The Bible Lands Society is now anxious to get the remaining eight to work, as well as several promising men who have received a theological course, and have shown ability to carry to their fellow-countrymen the Gospel they themselves have received. Open doors await them, but the Armenian Evangelization fund of the Society is so low that there is hesitation in bidding them to start work.

The "New Reformation" in France.

In a recent issue of Le Siècle, M. le Pasteur Robert, of Pons, Charente Inférieure, had a remarkable letter on the campaign for freeing France from the Clerical yoke. As founder and director of L'Œuvre de Pons, M. Robert is a well-known and highly esteemed worker. Addressing M. Y. Guyot, he writes:

"EDGAR QUINET says—'We only completely destroy that which we have replaced with something better instead.' And in agreement with him, I consider the completest way of accomplishing the liberty of our people is to replace their present religion, which rests exclusively on superstition and clerical domination, with one which satisfies the instinct for worship born with every man, and bases its principles and faith solely on the Gospel.

"The public begin to understand this. Everywhere Protestantism is being expounded, I may say revealed; for it is absolutely unknown to three-fourths of our fellow-countrymen, and it meets with sympathy. . . . It will interest your readers to hear that the Reformation in La Corrèze is not an isolated movement. In another direction, La Saintonge has been for several years the centre of a most fruitful Protestant propaganda. Several evangelical stations have been established in Les Charentes in response to the wants and appeals of the Roman Catholics themselves. Among those which have obtained the most recent and striking results, I single out the mission at Barbézieux, that of Saint Aubin de Blaye, and that of Pons.

"I was led to establish the mission at Pons, five years ago, in consequence of the sympathy for Protestantism which was excited in that part of La Saintonge by the conversion of a priest, M. l'Abbé Bonhomme, curé of Saint Palais de Phiolin. We have received many invitations, some most pressing, from thirty-four communes situated in a circumference of from twenty to twenty-five kilometres around Pons. Thanks to the assistance of four very active fellow-workers, we have been able to carry on our Protestant propaganda without interruption for the last five years in each of these places by means of popular conferences.

"In consequence of this missionary activity, fourteen Protestant stations have been organized in connection with the parish of Pons, where there was not a single Protestant by birth. Nearly a thousand Roman Catholics have become Protestants, not alone by showing sympathy to us, or by attending our services occasionally, but by signing themselves as members on our register, and formally abjuring Catholicism.

The number of Protestant parochial electors at Pons are five times as many as they were three years ago, they have increased from twenty-nine to 142. The funds for carrying on the work come from the members."

"HARVEST GREAT . . LABOURERS FEW."

In a long letter in a later issue of Le Siècle, "Catholicus" writes:—"It is not alone in La Corrèze that the movement in favour of Protestantism shows itself. Communications from various departments indicate analogous movements; and year by year Catholic populations have called for pastors, attended lectures, and inscribed their names on the Protestant registers. In a word, the movement in La Corrèze is but part of a larger one, which tends to become general, and to influence most seriously the future of our country."

The writer goes on to describe the rise and remarkable progress of the new Reformation, especially in Les Charentes, and then observes: "The movement would have been much more intense, and would have spread with much greater rapidity, but for the failure of pecuniary resources. Meeting houses and temples were not sufficiently numerous for the new converts. 'If we could be sure of pastors,' say the villagers, 'we should be many more in numbers.' Forty heads of families in Médillac petitioned for regular worship in their midst; but months passed before anything could be done in the way of meeting their demand. The harvest is great and the labourers are few."

The Schoolmaster Abroad.

I DESIRE to interest my young friends in the homeland in the children of the Congo country. I will tell you something about our school examination. You will like to hear a little about how hard the children worked beforehand, and how eager they were that the people in "Mpoto" (Europe) should not hear a bad report of them. I announced the time of the examinations about six weeks in advance, for I thought that they would need some time to study up before the ordeal. During those weeks the children all worked with a will, and the result was that when the time came they were ready for the trial, and came through it with flying colours.

On the Saturday before the examination began, there was scrubbing and polishing of the two school-rooms, and everything that was to be used during the eventful week! The native teachers turned the school upside down; they cleaned the desks, they washed the slates, they sharpened pencils, until everything was in quite an unusual state of perfection for Central Africa. Now, no doubt, you will think that this was quite right and natural, and just what ought to be done under the circumstances, although you would not like to have to do it all yourselves. But please remember where we are, and that it is not natural to to like to be clean or even to like to be in a clean place. In fact, they often tell us "Mama, we see that it is your custon to be clean and to like cleanliness, but we like dirt, and think dirt is good." Now you will understand how much it meant to those boys to do all that cleaning of their own accord. And how proud they were of it when it was done.

Mr. Bowen acted as H.M.I. (His Majesty's Inspector) for the occasion, and on the following Monday morning we commenced proceedings. The lusty way in which the children sang the first hymn showed they were in good form and happy. The infants were the first to be examined; there were about eighty of them, so you may imagine that it took a good long time. We went on for four days and a half, two examinations every day, closing with the teachers on the Friday. All through the same interest was kept up, and when we remember that only a few years ago these boys and girls had never seen a book, and did not know what writing or arithmetic was, I think you will say that they did very well indeed. The prizes will be awarded as follows:—First class: Batangu, boy aged about fifteen, 499 marks out of 501. Second class: Lomindo, boy aged about thirteen, 239 marks out of 256. Third class: Esanga, boy aged about fifteen, 114 marks out of 120. Fourth class: Bokecu, girl aged about twelve, maximum 60. Fifth class: Likumba, boy aged about twelve, Bokecu, girl aged about eleven, 90 marks out of 100. Sixth class: Enjolo, Ekotaka, and Longemba, all boys from eight to ten, marked "excellent."

I give you their names that you may think of them and pray for them, that they may use the knowledge thus gained to the best of their ability, and that they may soon be able not only to read but understand the Word of God. Batangu and Esanga are Church members, but the others are not yet Christians.

There is one boy of whom I must tell you, for I am sure you will be interested to hear about him. His name is Lokisi, and

HE IS BOTH DEAF AND DUMB.

He is a member of the tribe of Bafoto, or elephant-hunters, and a tall thin lad of about twelve years of age. There are but a very few of these little people (for they are all dwarfs) in this district, and it is only within the last two years that any of their children have come to our school. At first they were very shy indeed, and could not understand what it all meant; but gradually they got used to our ways, and began to make headway. Now they are getting on nicely; one is in the fourth class already, and is doing just as well as the Mongo children. Well, when first they came to school Lokisi came too, just because he always went everywhere that his sisters did; and he has kept on coming ever since. Poor Lokisi, he can hear nothing, he cannot speak a word, and yet he comes day after day. Whoever else is absent, he is in his place, and he never misbehaves himself. When the examination was taking place this time, Lokisi would insist on being examined with the other children. As soon as his turn came, he walked up to the platform and stared at the A B C card, and uttered a series of sounds of some kind, though quite incomprehensible to us, yet he was quite satisfied that he had done as well as anyone else, and ran off to town as proud as any. Poor laddie, he knows so little, and it seems so impossible to teach him anything except what he can see or point to. Will you not pray for him that some way God may cause his light to shine into his dark heart?

I want you all to pray for this work among the children. It is a most hopeful field; the young hearts are more ready to receive the truths we have to teach than are the older people. The station school is steadily increasing in numbers, and our influence is also spreading in area, for now we have the children of two whole towns coming to us daily, whereas at the end of last year they came only from one. Certainly the interest in learning is spreading among the young people, and they work harder in the schools now than when I first came. I also find a very real spirit of inquiry among the older lads about the truths of Scripture history, and also as to the spiritual teaching of the parables of Christ.

The influence of this work may extend much farther than we ourselves ever know, for when once a boy or girl who can read, and has been supplied with books, goes away from us, it means that he or she will go and read these books to many others, if from no better motive than that of pride. And so Christ will be preached, and we shall feel as Paul did when he wrote Phil. i. 18.—Yours in missionary service,

Bongandanga, Congo-Balolo. Lily Ruskin.

I AM glad to have received so many letters, expressive of delight, from the successful Prize and Certificate winners in the last Competition. I cannot answer all personally, there are so many. I give extracts from a few of the letters.

"Thank you so much for the beautiful prize. There is no other book I should have cared to have more than that; and I shall value it all the more, coming as it did at this time, when our minds are so full of our dear Queen and her noble life."

"I cannot tell you how pleased I am with the splendid book which you have sent me. Thank you very, very much for it. I was very glad to see my name in the Prize List, and I am more delighted still because the book is about the Queen."

"Thank you very much for the beautiful prize you so kindly sent me. Mary and Edward also desire me to thank you for the lovely certificates."

"I thank you very much for the nice book. I will keep it all my life. I am sure having such a book will help me to like to search the Bible still more."

"I have received my prize all right, and I must say I think a great deal of it. When I saw the beautiful book I was much pleased, and I thought what a lot of boys and girls would be receiving prizes also, and how happy they would be. Ella wishes me to thank you for the beautiful certificate you sent her."

"I must write to thank you for the very nice certificate received. I like it so much, and hope I may pass even better next time."

"Je vous remercie beaucoup pour le certificat que vous m'avez donné. Je tacherai la prochaine fois de recevoir un prix."

"Thank you very much for the pretty certificate you sent me. I am going to hang it up in my room."

"My prize arrived safely, and I am writing to thank you very much for it. I was very glad to get it, especially as it was my first attempt. Still more glad when I saw its title, as a good biography of our late beloved Queen was just the book I wanted."

"The prize is lovely! It is so interesting, and I thank you so much."

"I thank you very much for the beautiful certificate. It is much better than any other I have ever had."

"Thank you very much for the lovely prize. I was so glad to get a book about our dear departed Queen."

"Thank you very much for the pretty certificate. I like doing the 'Searcher,' and I get much blessing from it."

"I have the pleasure of writing to thank you for my certificate. I think this is the prettiest one I have had."

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 267).

Word Pictures.

1. Here is a sad picture. A dear little girl is lying dead, and many people are sorrowing round the bed. Who is this coming in? He turns the weeping people out of the room, and steps forward. He takes the child's hand, and she lives!

(a) Who is this person? (b) Who were with him? (c) Who is the little girl? (d) How old was she? (Mark).

2. A battle has been fought and won. Among the conquered who where taken captives was a Hebrew. A servant escapes, and carries the news to the Hebrew's uncle, who arms his men, and starts in pursuit. After a long journey, the enemy is sighted; another battle is fought, the enemy slain, and the Hebrew brought back in triumph.

(a) What battles were these? (b) Who was the Hebrew? (c) Who was the uncle?

3. This picture has for its centre a young boy. He is questioning some learned men, and they do not appear to understand him. They are much astonished. His friends find him here; and he is taken home.

(a) Who is the boy? (b) Where was he? (c) Who are the men with whom he is talking? (d) Who sought and found him? (e) Where is his home?

4. A great procession, headed by women and children, is wending its way. A man steps from their midst, and bows himself seven times upon the ground before an approaching army, from the ranks of which another man runs, with his arms outstretched in welcome to the bowing figure. In the embrace which follows, a breach of many years' standing is healed.

(a) Who were the two men? (b) Relate briefly the cause of the quarrel.

5. A great feast is being held. At the height of the merriment a blind man is led into the hall. He requests that he may rest against the pillars that support the building. Twining his arms round them, he exerts all his strength. The pillars bow, they break, and the crashing ruins bury onlookers and destroyer alike.

(a) Who were the merrymakers? (b) Who was the blind man? (c) About how many were killed?

[Children under ten, do No. 1; under thirteen, do Nos. 1 and 3; under seventeen, any 4 pictures. Chapter and verse to be given.]

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 24.

TRUST IN THE LORD JESUS CHRIST FOR STRENGTH (Phil. iv. 4-13).

AS we glance down this chapter, how many are the demands made on strength. We need strength to stand fast (1); strength to rejoice in the Lord (4); strength to yield and forbear (5); strength to pray (8); strength to be abased; strength to abound (12). Yes, and we need strength to confess Christ, to do what we know to be right, and to overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil. We have no strength of our own that will avail for all these incessant demands. Our lives are sadly marked by failure, because we found ourselves unable to be and do what we had set our hearts on. Let us look away, then, to Christ, who is the Power of God, and dare to say, in confident faith, "I can do all things, through Christ which strengtheneth me."

Mind, the Apostle does not say that the Lord Jesus will do them for us, so that we shall become like automatons, worked by machinery from within, whose movements are not their own act or deed. We are still to exercise our lofty right as choosing, willing, and acting for ourselves; but our Saviour will supply us with strength; through the medium of our faith his strength will pass into us; nay more, He will work in us to will and do of his own good pleasure. Whatever He works in us to reveal, He will work in us to effect.

In a church in Spain there is a sculpture of the crucifixion, which arrests every visitor with its unique conception, as it stands in the light of a hidden window. One only of the Saviour's hands is nailed to the wood, the other is stretched out towards the spectator. The legend is that there a couple pledged themselves to be true to each. But the man proved faithless, and the girl came there alone, to claim justice; and the voice of the stone was heard crying, "I am witness," and the hand detached itself from the cross. But it seems to me as though a more probable idea is that the old painter desired to set forth for all after time, his belief in the power of Christ to help, even in the hour of his greatest weakness, for "the weakness of God is stronger than men." And if He was strong in his death, what must He not be now that He liveth for evermore in the power of an indissoluble life?

Directly we trust Christ the Holy Spirit causes the power of God which is in Jesus to enter our hearts, just as the power of the dynamo makes the tramcar able to carry such heavy weights of passengers, because the arm of the tramcar holds to the overhead wire along which the electric current is passing. When Dr. Cuyler was in Princeton, he says that Professor Hemy had so constructed a large bar of iron, bent into the form of a horse-shoe, that it hung suspended from another iron bar above it. Not only did it hang there, but it upheld 4,000lbs. weight attached to it. The horse-shoe magnet was not welded nor glued to the metal above it, but through the iron wire coiled round it there ran a subtle current of electricity from a galvanic battery. Stop the flow of that current for a moment, and the huge horseshoe dropped. So does all the lifting power of the Christian life come from the currents of spiritual influence which flow into our hearts from the living Christ. The strong Son of God enters and possesses us. If our connection with Christ is cut off, it is with us as with Samson, when the locks of his Nazariteship were shorn, we become as other men.

The R.V. for "through Christ" substitutes in Him. We must be in Jesus Christ our Lord before He can be in us. In Him as Noah was in the ark, as the jewel is in the casket, as the limb is in the body, and as the branch is in the vine. And it is well, when we have learnt, beneath the grace of the Holy Spirit, to realize our union, and make it the daily subject of our believing appropriation. The late Mr. Spurgeon was wont to say that he never passed more than a quarter of an hour without communion with his Saviour. Oh, that such a heavenly frame of mind might be true of us all.

C.E. NOTES.

At the Annual Convention of the Scottish National Christian Endeavour Union, to be held in the Synod Hall, Edinburgh, from March 23 to 26, the Convention sermon will be preached by Rev. John Pollock, of St. Enoch's, Belfast, and the representative of the British Union will be Rev. J. E. Roberts, B.D., of Manchester. Other well-known speakers will be Rev. John Smith, Rev. Dr. Black, of Inverness, and Rev. Alex. Smellie, M.A.

There are several C. E. Societies in the Samoan Islands. The members call themselves the "Company of Endeavourers for Jesus." At one meeting, attended by a visitor, over 100 members were present, there being a roll-call of ninety-six active members. Many took part in the prayer chain, and the whole meeting was characterized by reverence and earnestness. Several pastors on various islands testify to the usefulness of the societies in their churches.

The following is the story of Christian Endeavour: In 1881 a single society; in 1901 societies to the number of 60,750. In 1881 a membership of 57; in 1901 a membership of 3,500,000. In 1881 a single denomination touched. In 1901 more than forty denominations permeated. In 1881 an extreme corner of one country; in 1901 all countries on the face of the earth. In 1881 the English language; in 1901 literature in Chinese, Japanese, Malagasy, Persian, Arabic, Turkish, Bulgarian, Armenian, Siamese, German, French, Italian, Greek, Spanish, Swedish, Dutch, Norwegian, Welsh, Austrian, Coptic, Mexican, Portuguese, Indian, the many tongues of India and Africa.

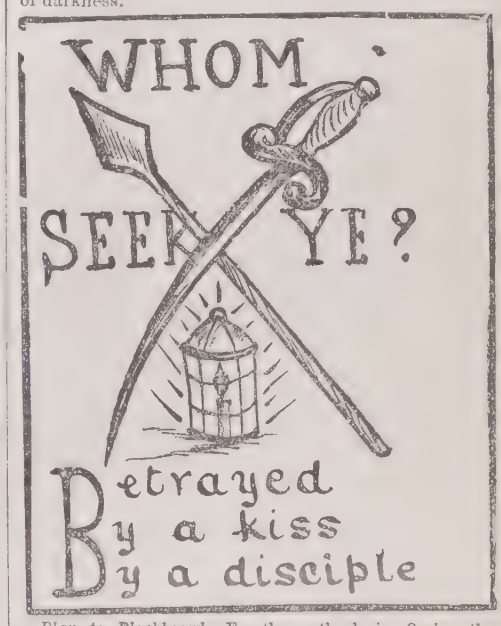
JESUS BETRAYED: John xviii. 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners" (Matt. xxvi. 45).

INTRODUCTION.

LAST week we saw Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane in his loneliness and agony; and the lesson to-day follows closely on (see Golden Text; Luke xxii. 53). It was indeed "the hour of darkness."



Plan to Blackboard.—For the gentle, loving Saviour they must needs bring swords and weapons, as though they had some ruffian to deal with. Torches and lanterns they wanted, for it was dark; but worst of all was the mean action of Judas, a disciple, who betrayed his Master by a kiss.

1. THE BETRAYER.

Judas, the one false disciple among the twelve, was just ripe for the act of treachery he committed in the Garden of Gethsemane; study his character again as we learnt it on January 6 (John xii. 6; vi. 70, 71; xiii. 27). This was a man Satan could handle as his tool to do what he would with. Judas led the way (5) he drew near to Jesus (Luke xxii. 47, 48); but his heart was far away (Matt. xv. 8); he kissed his Master (Mark xiv. 44, 45), but he never calls Jesus "Lord" (1 Cor. xii. 3). Oh! let us beware lest Satan get control over us and we be led by him even to betray our Lord and Master (2 Cor. ii. 11). "His we are whom we obey" (Rom. vi. 16). Judas obeyed Satan, and he belonged to him.

2. THE BETRAYAL.

In the quiet peaceful garden was the King of Glory, who allowed Himself to be led as "a Lamb to the slaughter" (Isa. liii. 7). How unnecessary was everything that Judas did (3). He brought bands of men (soldiers); they had swords and staves in their hands; they also carried torches and lanterns, although the full Paschal moon was brightly shining; they brought ropes and bound Him (12; Matt. xxvi. 48); Judas said, "hold Him fast," but the Lamb of God was full of gentleness and kindness, He was ready to go (11), without all the roughness with which they treated Him as though He were some great criminal (Mark xiv. 48; Matt. xxvi. 54).

3. THE BETRAYED.

Jesus Christ, Son of God, Redeemer of the world. See his divine power (6), and He also said that his Father would send legions of angels to his aid had He asked (Matt. xxvi. 53). A Roman legion consisted of 6,000 infantry, besides cavalry, so that to these men it would seem a great number.

His forgiveness to Judas (Matt. xxvi. 49-50). His wish to fulfil all prophecy (9; Matt. xxvi. 54). His thought for others (10; Luke xxii. 51). His perfect self-surrender (John xviii. 11). Let us add Isaiah liii., and study it as well.

A Special Mission at Tunis.—Miss Case (24, Cité Samana) writes in grateful terms of a visit Mr. Anderson (of Italy) paid to Tunis a few weeks ago. For the first time a fortnight's mission was conducted in the city on lines familiar at home. The missionaries were strengthened and cheered, the Christians were refreshed and enlightened, and the Lord added to the number of his witnesses. It is gratifying to learn that the Italian vice-consul came, without solicitation, to the children's fête on New Year's Day, and spoke a few kind words of public commendation.

The Essence of Scripture.

Prof. MARGOLIOUTH'S LECTURES.

CONTINUING his course of lectures at Exeter Hall on "The Essence of Scripture," Rev. Professor Margoliouth's subject last Wednesday was, "The Bible and Other Sacred Books." It was shown at the outset that the idea of the embodiment of Divine revelation in a book has for long ages been thoroughly familiar in the East. False prophets have, with scarcely an exception, tried this plan, and real reformers have adopted the same method of making known their ideas.

Of the books of the East, some are sacred by accident, some by intention. To the Koran no title can be applied but deliberate fabrication. Texts of a personal character were almost from the first the scandal of the supposed revelation. The prophet often found himself involved in contradictions, and so had to resort to various shifts. One plan was to suppress the preceding revelation, another to declare that revelations might hold good only for a time and then be withdrawn, and a third to declare that the earlier texts had a meaning known only to God Himself and to a very few individuals. Thomas Carlyle, who thought Mohammed must have been a good and great man because he succeeded, could not find it in his heart to say he admired the Koran. One or two of the shorter chapters are spells, which are supposed to act by virtue of the sound of the words. The idea is that the unseen agency understands some language or other, and that it is possible to persuade or frighten it into doing what is desired.

The use of the charm in medicine was taken from the Greeks, but to this practice there is scarcely an allusion in the Old Testament. The treatment of leprosy was left to the priests, but even they were directed how to diagnose rather than how to cure it. The author of Ecclesiasticus says that a sensible man will not despise the physician, because God created herbs, and the miracle of the healing of the waters pointed to their force. The physician only sometimes succeeds, but he may add his prayers to those of the patient, and this idea is the monotheistic analogue of the use of the charm.

Of the Indian sacred books, the lecturer pointed out that one class consists of charms, a second deals with ritual, a third is full of philosophic speculation, and a fourth is legal. The translation of the Scriptures into the vernaculars has shown that what is equally effective in each language cannot derive its power from the sounds, but only from their meaning. The Psalms were contrasted with the Indian hymns, and it was shown that in the former the natural agencies are regarded as at God's disposal and as weapons in his hand. There is no identifying of God with them. In the books of the Zoroastrians the similarity is closer to the Pentateuch, but the matter is often barbarous and pagan in the extreme.

The Old Testament stands alone in recording the failings of the chief persons. Referring to the criticism of the Old Testament, it was pointed out that no such literature exists with regard to the other books. "Men only attack a foe worth attacking." What we know of the authors makes it certain that they could stand the serious test of disinterestedness, and the fact that the Gospel rests on the Law, and presupposes it, is of the first importance.

London Omnibus Men.—The London City Mission contemplate shortly placing an extra missionary to work among omnibus men in the North-West of London. The agent who has been selected for the post has had much experience among drivers and conductors, and is well qualified to deal with men in this rank of life.

Hastings Protestant Home of Rest.—This Home, which has been established for thirty years, is now carried on by Miss F. Tripp and Miss I. M. Leicester. It meets the needs of Christian workers and gentlewomen of reduced means, and the higher class of hospital trained nurses requiring a season of rest and change. The prospectus for 1901, and full particulars, may be obtained from either of the above ladies at 98, High Street, Hastings, Sussex.

Scottish Notes.

THE circulation of the Monthly Visitor during 1900 was 5,084,428, making the aggregate since the beginning of the Society 243,004,406.

Mr. Quarrier has received the sum required to add a new home to the "Children's City," in memory of a dear and honoured mother. This gift makes possible the addition of thirty children to the Homes, and is particularly opportune, all the other houses being full.

Dr. Howie was able to intimate last week, at the annual meeting of St. Mary's U.F. Church, Govan, that Lady Pearce had handed over to the session the Fairfield Works Mission and Day Nursery, for many years superintended by Mrs. Macgregor, and had promised £340 per annum to meet the necessary outlay. Steps will at once be taken to make use of the opening thus afforded for church extension in the district.

The Glasgow Christian Workers' Union held its twenty-second annual meeting last Wednesday, when the president (Mr. A. B. Munro) gave an encouraging and helpful address, in which he pointed out the importance of the common meeting ground provided for workers from churches, missions, and undenominational meetings throughout the Glasgow area. Probably, he said, the city contained a larger number than any other of open-air workers for Christ, who often met with very little encouragement, and were inclined to abandon the work, but by association with the Union they were stimulated, and returned from the monthly conferences encouraged and determined to pursue their work steadfastly. The hall in which the conferences are held is, as a rule, filled to its utmost capacity, though accommodating 2,800 persons.

The annual report of the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society, presented last week, says that the society was originated in 1822. During 1900 over 133,000 visits were made to the rooms, and 1,525 religious services held, with an attendance at the indoor meetings of over 106,000. There had also been regular visitation of the wives and families of the sailors, and each Sabbath morning tracts were taken to 3,300 homes. Special services had been attended weekly by about 700 children. Parcels of good reading were put on board over 2,700 outward-bound ships, and during 1900 assistance was given to stranded sailors, and 1,150 lodgings were provided for them. The society has eight paid missionaries constantly at work, besides 120 voluntary workers. The ladies' auxiliary of the society included twenty-five ladies, who visit the widows of seamen and distressed families of seamen. At present 200 widows are on the roll.

At the annual business meeting, held last week, of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, the reports showed that while the income for the year had been £23,270 12s. 4d., the payments had amounted to £25,978 17s. 9d. The average attendance at the children's Sabbath dinner had been 1,994, while 530 boys and girls attended at the day refuges, 7,562 benefited by the Fresh-Air Fortnight scheme, 4,410 were sent to the country for a day, and 1,130 were helped in other ways. Lord Overtoun stated that in connection with the celebration of the semi-jubilee of the Association last year, a general meeting had been held of all members of committees, and that they had gone into the work in all departments, not only in its official aspects, but also in the character and amount of work carried on, and the success that had attended it. The result was that they were led anew to praise God, and felt that they were bound to go forward very much on the same lines as in the past.

A few days ago, the United Free Church Sabbath School Teachers' Association held a Conference in Edinburgh, when Dr. Hastings, in opening a discussion on "The Teaching of the Bible," alluded to the growing reluctance on the part of young people to join the Church, and said he had been appalled by the lamentable ignorance of many otherwise well-educated intending communicants regarding the essential doctrines of the Bible. One great cause was the lack of parental instruction, and another was that the Bible was excluded from many public schools. Mr. J. W. Gulland, speaking on "If the Bible be put out of the public schools, what then?" said that out of 30,000 children in the Board schools of Edinburgh, only fifty-nine were withdrawn from religious instruction under the conscience clause, while 441 were partially withdrawn, showing that on the whole the parents were satisfied with the present system. Undoubtedly the Bible was well taught in the schools. The first attack on religious education would be on the Shorter Catechism; but it should be resisted, except on the one condition that Roman Catholics and Episcopalians gave up their Catechisms in schools. If the Bible were put out of the schools the parents would have to be awakened to a sense of their duty, and so would the Churches. Probably they would have to start day schools again, or on Sabbath do the work more thoroughly than at present. In fact, he thought that the Church almost required some such act as the exclusion of the Bible from the schools to persecute it into doing work commensurate with its strength and resources. Miss Annie H. Small introduced "The teacher's study of the Bible in preparation for the class," and Rev. George Steven, St. Bernard's Church, spoke on "The Charm of Teaching."

Welsh Notes.

A MOVEMENT is on foot to raise a memorial of some kind to the well-known Welsh hymnologist, Thomas Lewis, of Talyllychan. Although his death took place over sixty years ago, nothing has been done to keep his memory alive.

Last week the English Baptist Sunday School Union of Wales held its annual meetings at Cardiff. A proposal was adopted to establish in Cardiff a depôt for the sale of denominational literature, also another resolution favouring the formation of Sunday School libraries throughout the Union.

At the annual meeting of the Cardiff and District Temperance and Band of Hope Union, the number of affiliated societies was reported to be 148, an increase of four on the year. The membership of the societies is about 7,000. At the same meeting Rev. Matthias Lansdowne, of London, stated that the Bands of Hope throughout the kingdom numbered 30,000, with an aggregate membership of three-and-a-half millions.

The current number of Young Wales contains an interesting article by Rev. Griffith Ellis, M.A., of Liverpool, on the "Evolution of Religion in Wales during the Last Century." While regarding the century as one of progress, Mr. Ellis considers that in three or four important directions there has been a falling off. He instances the keeping of the Sabbath, and attendance at Sunday school and fellowship meetings. In spite of these saddening facts, the writer considers that there are hopeful signs to be observed, for instance, the growth of the missionary spirit, and the splendid work done by the Christian Endeavour movement.

Irish Notes.

A TEMPERANCE Conference was held in Dublin last week, and was addressed by Mr. T. W. Russell, M.P., and other speakers. As the result, memorials to Parliament in favour of the Children's Bill are being extensively signed throughout the country.

The Mission to the Blind in Belfast is doing an excellent work. It makes a weekly allowance to some blind persons who are earning small wages, and it pays rent for others. The Home has twenty-five inmates, and last year the Biblewoman paid 2,298 visits.

The Belfast City Mission, one of the oldest organizations of the kind in the north of Ireland, continues to do a good work. Last year the missionaries delivered many addresses in halls, cottages and schoolrooms, held Bible classes and Sunday-schools, distributed large quantities of tracts, and conducted evangelistic services.

The Simultaneous Mission which has been going on for some weeks in the various Methodist churches throughout the country has now for the most part come to a close. It has, on the whole, been accompanied by very satisfactory results. The Church has been greatly quickened, and large numbers, especially of the young, have professed to give themselves entirely to the Lord.

A missionary demonstration was held last week in Belfast, under the auspices of the Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Baptist, Moravian, London, and Methodist Missionary Societies. The speakers included well-known workers from China, India, Africa, and other parts of the world, and the addresses were earnest, instructive, and stimulating. Rev. J. A. Pike, of the Church Missionary Society, gave an account of the work which is being done in Uganda; Rev. Dr. Beatty spoke of the work in Gujarat, where he had been a missionary in connection with the Presbyterian Church; Mrs. Phillips referred to work in Damascus, and Mrs. Hunter to that in Manchuria. Rev. C. J. Klesel, secretary of the Moravian Missionary Society, and Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, secretary of the London Missionary Society, also spoke. As representing all denominations the Conference gave a practical illustration of the real unity of Protestantism, and was very successful.

Sailors' Rests in Italy.—The treasurer of the Sailors' Rests Aid Society is Captain Forrest, Westfield, Beverley, Yorkshire, Mr. S. J. Alexander, whose name we gave in our issue of February 7, having retired from the office some months ago.

Stratford Conference Hall.

IT is a pleasure to record continued progress in the many-sided work of which the Stratford Conference Hall is the home and centre. From year to year new branches of effort have appeared, and now there are agencies for reaching young and old, and from first to last "Forward!" is the watchword. Those agencies, moreover, are as beneficent in their operation as they are interesting in character.

The annual report opens with words in which the goodness of God is recognised in the blessing that continues to attend the work. The weekly services, as well as the special missions, have had results to the glory of God. The same may be said of the open-air meetings, the Bible readings, and other gatherings held in the various rooms of the spacious building in the West Ham Lane. It is gratifying to note that the Sunday afternoon service for men—so influential in reaching youth—has grown in numbers, and has furnished helpers for various departments of the work. The Sunday school has also maintained its record, and meets a manifest need in the neighbourhood.

The Y.M.C.A. is an institution which has taken deep root and done much good. Its important work has gone forward in a very encouraging way during the year. The Junior section, with its classes and club, is an admirable recruiting ground for the more manly division of the Association. It is exceptional to find a Y.W.C.A. so near at hand; but here is one with 128 members, of whom sixty-six are enrolled in the Prayer Union. During the year twenty new names were enrolled. The Young Women also have their Junior Branch, which, although only a little more than a year old, has sixty members. While every effort is made to interest the girls in various ways, the prime object of the weekly meetings is to enlist them in the service of Christ.

Little needs to be said of the Mizpah Bands, the Men's binding together a host of stalwarts, and encouraging them in service; and the Women's, numbering 120 members, who combine temperance work with definitely religious effort. The Evangelistic Band, the Home Visiting Society, and Mothers' Meeting are other branches, the usefulness of which has been abundantly proved in aggressive work in Stratford and district.

Copies of a report containing these cheering facts were placed in the hands of friends who attended the annual meeting of the work, held on Tuesday last week in the Conference Hall. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided over a goodly gathering, and a helpful address was delivered by Pastor Archibald G. Brown. The address was singularly helpful, being based on the words, "Put . . shoes on his feet" (Luke xv. 22), The points were: (1) The Gospel of the Shoes; the prodigal is enlarged into the liberty and standing of a son. (2) The suggestiveness of the Shoes; God's children are called to service, and so are provided with "shoes of preparedness" (see Eph. vi. 15). (3) The Superiority of these Shoes; those who wear them never tire—for they bear the user, not the user them; These Shoes never pinch the feet of those who do God's work aright; but as sure as we take the wrong road they come off! It is a sad thing for preachers and teachers to lose their shoes—their readiness for service. In conclusion, Mr. Brown urged Christian workers to see that they are "shod with the preparation of the Gospel."

The general secretary, Mr. W. Ross, read an abstract of the report; and, in the absence of the treasurer, Mr. C. Boardman, a financial statement was presented by Mr. W. McCall. From this it appeared that the year closed with a balance on the wrong side of £20. Confidence was, however, expressed that this would soon be wiped out, that the good work might proceed without hindrance or embarrassment.

Mission to Lepers.—In Mr. Jackson's letter, entitled "A Leper Village," in last week's Christian, a rather serious error has got in, where he speaks of the lepers getting an allowance of seven farthings "per week." It should have been "per day."—Yours faithfully, Wellesley C. Bailey.

The Gospel and Israel.

TWO missionary meetings were held at Exeter Hall on Thursday under the auspices of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, at which there were many indications of a growing interest on the part of Christians in the work of the Society for the Evangelization of Israel. In the afternoon there was a large attendance. Rev. H. E. Fox presided, and at the outset requested the company to join in the singing of one verse of the National Anthem. Canon Trotter, after the reading of a portion of Scripture, offered prayer. In the course of a brief address, the Chairman made some helpful suggestions for the study of the position of the Jew in the past, his present standing, and future prospects. Reverting to the passage "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people" (Isa. 40/1), the speaker said the words are too often exclusively applied to our own circumstances, while their first application was undoubtedly to Israel. When that people had been gathered together, Christ will return to build again the tabernacle that is fallen down. If we keep this in mind we shall feel what there is before us; and instead of living so much in the present, and imagining that the purpose of the Gospel is merely to save our souls, we shall look forward to the glory of the Lord which is to be revealed.

Some encouraging results of the Society's operations were detailed by Rev. F. P. Weinberger, who has been labouring in Whitechapel, and shortly leaving to take charge of the Constantinople mission of the Society. He gave numerous instances of visiting in the homes of Jews. The Saturday afternoon service has an average attendance of 200, and, happily, the women were being uplifted, and permitted to take their places in the meetings.

The work of the Society in Leeds was represented by Miss Keith and Mrs. Rumboll. Nearly 18,000 Jews make their home in Leeds. For these there are at present only three missionaries. The medical branch, of which Miss Keith had many interesting particulars to recount, continues to be used of God as a channel of blessing to both body and soul. Among the children especially is being made. Instead of the hatred for the name of Christ once manifested by the boys and girls attending the mission, reverence and love are now shown. Even the youngest are being brought into the light, and are often heard expressing their hope in the returning Messiah, and singing, "Thou art coming, O my Saviour, Thou art coming, O my King." An earnest appeal was made by Mrs. Rumboll for more workers in Leeds, to take the Gospel to the thousands of the sons of Israel who are living in the darkness of mistaken belief and superstition.

Miss Kate Burney gave a touching account of the efforts made in the East End of London, in the face of numerous discouragements. Among young and old the Gospel is preached and taught with many tokens of blessing. And there has been much joy in winning souls to a knowledge of the true Messiah.

At the evening gathering, Bishop Ingham presided, and a limelight lecture was given by Rev. S. Schor, a native of Jerusalem, on "What do these feeble Jews?"

The Open-Air Mission.—The winter reunion of members, contributors, and friends of the Open-Air Mission took place on Tuesday of last week, at Exeter Hall. Some 250 responded to the invitation to tea by Rev. F. and Mrs. Paynter, of Guildford, and a profitable season of intercourse was spent. At the subsequent meeting, Major H. B. Treeby, who presided, gave interesting reminiscences of his experiences during the fighting in Natal before the relief of Ladysmith. Mr. Frank Cockrem, the secretary, reviewed the work of the society—on the racecourse, at country fairs, in the slums, bye-ways, and parks of the metropolis, and provincial towns, on the sea-shore, among the hop-pickers, wherever souls could be won to Christ, and wherever Gospels, tracts, &c., could be circulated among the people. Rev. E. W. Moore gave a helpful address.

Aldersgate Noon Meeting.

MANY bright and helpful testimonies were packed into a brief space of time at the noon prayer meeting at Aldersgate Street on Monday last. After Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, had expressed some suggestive thoughts on 1 John i., Rev. W. J. Sears, of Willesden, spoke of the work at Hounslow in connection with the Simultaneous Mission, in which great blessing had been given. Mr. S. Levermore had experienced remarkable revival times at Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh, and later at Dumfries, where there is a deep sense of conviction. Interest has been aroused throughout the town, and many have sought the way of life. A message was read from Mr. Rowland D. Edwards, who, it will be remembered, left England recently on an evangelistic tour in the United States. Mr. Edwards has preached at Chicago in connection with Mr. Moody's work, and over 1,000 persons passed through the inquiry rooms. Mr. Collard, "the sailor evangelist," had conducted a service on Sunday evening among a small company, but out of fifty persons who were present, twenty had sought the Saviour. Mr. Holness referred to a spiritual revival among the Chinese in San Francisco; and Rev. J. Bennett Anderson, who recently arrived in England after fruitful mission work in Halifax, N.S., and Newfoundland, brought tidings not only of spiritual darkness in parts of the American Continent which he had visited, but also of some glorious revivals, notably under Mr. Henry Varley's preaching. Mr. Anderson added that he has just received reliable intelligence from the Philippines, which shows that there is a widespread revolt against Romish influence.

The "Coalies'" Mission.

AT the close of his sermon on Thursday last Dr. Parker announced that a meeting would then be held on behalf of the Coalies' Mission (a branch of the London City Mission). He introduced, as chairman, Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., who, referring to the coal-porters' industry, said that the heavy labour of the men is apt to develop the physical side of nature at the expense of the spiritual.

When, some years ago, Mr. W. Prentice (the London City missionary to "coalies") went into the coal-yards of London to speak to these men, he found them unable to distinguish between an oath and a blessing. They were quite indifferent to spiritual things. Almost involuntarily Mr. Prentice stumbled upon the right way to approach them. They would not listen to any good advice, but they listened to the little portable musical instrument he carried about from yard to yard. Mr. Prentice began to know some of the men individually, and interested himself in the things which interested them in their business and family life, and by degrees got hold of many hundreds of men. There is at present a staff of six missionaries.

The One-by-One Working Band.—Meetings in connection with the above band, the object of which is to unite Christians in definite prayer and personal effort to win souls for Christ, have been addressed by Sister Vera at Wood Green, West Kensington, Finchley, and the Noon Prayer-meeting, Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street. The following is one of the many striking examples of how the Lord honours this ministry: A family of eight were laid upon the hearts of several of the Band, who, unknown to each other, entered one or other of them in the little books supplied to members. In a short time father, mother, and six daughters were saved. These became intercessors, and prayed constantly for the two still unsaved, a daughter in a distant city, and the only son in a foreign port, who were eventually able, with the dear home group, to rejoice in Jesus the Mighty to save. In a Bible-class last Lord's-day, mention was casually made of the One-by-One method, which it appeared that one present had adopted. He began to pray for one wicked man, who was saved, and two others of his family. Numerous wonderful instances might be enumerated. Explanatory literature may be obtained by enclosing a few stamps to Mr. Hogben, Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, at this office.

Evangelistic.

Rev. Dr. Munhall's Tour.

LARGE congregations attended the mission recently conducted at Bay City, Michigan, U.S.A., by Rev. Dr. Munhall. There was a remarkable spiritual movement among the young people, over 200 of whom (says the Bay City Times-Press) professed conversion in one meeting. In reference to this Dr. Munhall said that their conversion meant more for Bay City than ten ship-yards. Since the people were anxious to see their city prosper let them first seek a revival of religion, for few care to seek a location where the power of the Gospel is not felt. Dr. Munhall also gave Bible readings, and children's gatherings were conducted by Professor Lowe.

Mr. Josiah Spiers at Sudbury.

A fifteen days' mission has been conducted at the New Hall, Sudbury, Harrow, in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission, by Mr. Josiah Spiers. The gatherings were fruitful of spiritual results, many young people being led to decision for Christ. Teachers and parents were also helped and encouraged. The meetings were well attended, not only by the children and teachers of New Hall Sunday School, but by those of all denominations in the neighbourhood, who came night after night. At the last meeting the building was filled to overflowing.

Mr. Henry Thorne at Wrexham.

Under the auspices of the Wrexham Free Church Council, a mission has just been held here, from February 9-15, by Mr. Henry Thorne. There were Bible readings in the afternoons, and meetings were held for men, for women, and for children, the address at the last of these on the Saviour's invitation, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me," being especially fitting and helpful. Each evening Gospel addresses were given to large audiences, the inquirers being afterwards met by Mr. Thorne and other workers. It is felt by many that the evangelistic spirit in the churches has been strengthened by Mr. Thorne's visit.

Mr. W. D. Dunn at Kilmarnock.

A fifteen days' mission has been held at Kilmarnock by Mr. W. D. Dunn, under the auspices of the Kilmarnock Christian Union. Deep interest was awakened, and it was soon seen that the largest hall in the town would be too small on the second Sunday evening to hold the crowds anxious to hear the Gospel. The week-night meetings were well attended. A number of anxious souls sought the Saviour. Not the least interesting and helpful of the series of meetings were the afternoon Bible Readings, in which Mr. Dunn, with fulness of truth and felicity of exposition, set forth the wealth of blessing that is the heritage of believers. Not a few were helped to "possess their possessions," to their great blessedness and God's praise.

A pleasing feature in these gatherings, both the Bible Readings and the Gospel meetings, was the forgetfulness of sectarian differences and the sweet fellowship of saints. On the last Saturday evening of the mission Mr. Dunn took his great audience with him in "A Ride from Beyrout to Jerusalem." It was a helpful and instructive evening. D.

Rev. J. T. Mateer at Yeovil.

Services in connection with the Free Church Mission opened in the Town Hall, Yeovil, on February 5, under very encouraging circumstances, the hall being filled to its utmost capacity. The singing was led by the United Free Church choirs of the town. The missioner was Rev. J. T. Mateer, who riveted the attention of his audience to the end of the service. The Mission was continued throughout the ten days, with increasing interest. Inquiry cards were distributed amongst those who were anxious or had decided for Christ, to be signed at the service or at home. The work has been quiet; there has been an entire absence of excitement, though not of enthusiasm, and many have quietly and determinedly decided for Christ, taking home the cards one night, and bringing them back signed on a subsequent evening. On Sunday afternoon Mr. Mateer conducted a meeting for men only; the hall was filled, and the address, direct and manly, was much appreciated. In the evening an evangelistic service was held, when the hall was densely packed, many being unable to gain admission. Apart from the spiritual results, which are considerable, the Mission has demonstrated the unity of the Free Churches.

Mr. Leonard Weaver at Dartford.

It was decided to continue the mission conducted in this town by Mr. Leonard Weaver, for a great revival was taking place. The interest continued, and each night the building was packed, and large numbers failed to obtain admission. After each meeting scores professed conversion; it was estimated that during the mission nearly 500 accepted Christ. The people of Dartford have been aroused, and in the streets, men and women, young and old, are heard singing "Count Your Blessings" in the place of the usual worldly songs. A meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. for the male converts, and about 300 attended. The secretary told the writer he had never seen such a meeting in the place. The last night Mr. Weaver gave a lecture. Over 200 pledges were taken, in addition to the conversions. After this meeting it was arranged to hold a converts' meeting, coffee and sandwiches being provided for about 300; but this proved quite inadequate. Sitting room and standing room were not sufficient for those who wished to attend. We are all thankful for such a great time of blessing. We were sorry that the meetings had to be closed; however, the whole town has felt the benefit of the movement, and already the project is being discussed for erecting a large hall, capable of seating 1,500 people, as we felt it a great pity not to have a building large enough to hold the people who want to hear the Gospel. C.

Mr. William Forbes closed his services last week at the City Hall, Glasgow. On his way to London, he held a meeting at Sheffield for the pantomime women.

Rev. J. Bennett Anderson addressed a large number of men on Sunday afternoon last in the Woolwich Polytechnic on the subject of "Human Destiny."

Mr. Bob Johnson recently addressed a gathering in connection with the Barry Road Wesleyan Temperance Society, East Dulwich. He told the story of his conversion, and rendered some solos with much acceptance. Several persons took the temperance pledge.

At Longford Hall, Manchester, Mr. T. Goudie, of the Evangelization Society, has concluded a fifteen days' mission. The Gospel was faithfully preached. Night after night the workers were busy dealing with anxious souls, a large number of persons professed to accept Christ as their Saviour.

The First Congregational Church of Meridian, Miss., U.S.A., has just closed a fruitful mission conducted by Mr. James Wharton. Seventy-five persons yielded to Christ. The church has been greatly quickened, and is rejoicing in the blessing God has poured upon it. Twenty-five will unite with this church. M. S. Jones, Pastor.

At Vale Mission Hall, Guernsey, a mission conducted by Mr. Gerald R. Coultas was suddenly brought to a close, the evangelist receiving a telegram stating that his wife was seriously ill. The mission, although of short duration, has proved a great blessing to believers. There were also a few cases of decision among the unconverted.

Peter M. Vaudin, Hon. Superintendent.

Mr. G. D. Shipley has been conducting evangelistic services at Maulden, which have been attended with very great blessing. Mr. Shipley's plain and forcible delivery on the Gospel message has resulted in a number of persons declaring themselves on the Lord's side; and his Bible readings have been very helpful to older Christians, many of whom have been roused to greater earnestness in the Master's service.

Rev. D. M. Cameron has conducted a ten-days' mission at Chertsey, concluding on February 11, in the Constitutional Hall, all the Free Churches uniting in the effort. A number of people, principally young, have been impressed, and the Churches have been stimulated and revived. The Sunday services were very largely attended, and the children's and men's meetings were especially interesting and useful.

J. de B. B.

The visit of Mr. Charles Noakes, of the Evangelization Society, to the Abington Square Mission Hall, Northampton, January 27 to February 10, was a great blessing to many who have attended the services. With simplicity and power the evangelist preached the Gospel, and in the Bible readings the Lord's people were clearly instructed. Sixty names of inquirers after salvation have been taken, and some of the cases are of a striking character.

Frederick Martyn.

A hearty rally of workers and converts took place on Saturday, February 16, in the Cricklewood Congregational Church, bringing to a close a richly blessed six days' mission, conducted by Mr. Leonard Weaver. From the first the power of God was manifestly present in the meetings, the numbers steadily increasing till the hall was quite filled. The names of many inquirers were taken, of whom we have no doubt the majority entered into the way of life. Nor was this all; the hearty fellowship and cordial co-operation of all the workers abundantly proved the pleasantness of the dwelling and working together of brethren in unity. A. S. G.

A fortnight's services, under the auspices of the Dumfries and Maxwelltown Town Mission, were brought to a close on Thursday last in the Wesley Church, Buccleuch, Dumfries. The meetings have been greatly blessed. Mr. Samuel Levermore, the missioner, displayed much originality in his method. The meetings were conducted in a cheerful spirit, which did a great deal to draw the people's sympathy. A notable feature was the number of Christians who came forward to consecrate themselves for service. Mr. Levermore sang a number of solos with acceptance. His daily Bible readings were well attended.

The week's evangelistic effort following the Simultaneous Mission has been a time of great blessing at West Green Baptist Chapel, N. Mr. Musa Bhai's straight talks were the overflow of a heart yearning to see men and women brought to God. The working of the Spirit of God in our midst has resulted in the edification of the Lord's people, and, we believe, in the salvation of souls. The untiring energy of our Hindoo friend has endeared him to us all, and the wind-up lecture on the problems of his native land moved all our hearts to prayer on behalf of its teeming millions. We are all humbly lifting up our hearts in praise to God for having so greatly blessed us through his servant. H. Moore.

Mr. Van De Venter, of Philadelphia, expects to return to America in May. He is open for evangelistic engagements for the month of April. Address West Kilbride, Ayreshire.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

ONE result of a very important character which has arisen from the Simultaneous Mission, is the interest added to special and evangelistic effort. A decided impetus has been given, and quite a number of the settled pastors have done, and will in days to come do, "the work of an evangelist." There will be more interchange of ministry, and, we believe, with advantage to both preachers and churches. In quite a number of places the good work already begun is being continued, and in various parts of the country the Missions bid fair to follow on into the spring of the year. In this way, with zealous co-operation, those who are outside the churches may be reached. The time already given has been far too short, especially in large cities, to secure those who are utterly indifferent alike to the claims and the glories of the Gospel of Christ. Nothing but persistent effort will suffice to get real hold of these. The words of our Lord "compel them to come in," not only imply marked unwillingness to come, but suggest that earnestness and zeal are absolutely necessary to success on the part of his servants.

Another very desirable result of the Mission should be a quickening of the spirit of family religion in the home. Especially should Christian people see to it that they follow up the good impressions left by the Children's Mission on their young people. Unless these are fanned into flame, and kept permanently alight by the breath of devotion in the family circle, few permanent results will remain as the outcome of this special effort. Many parents are sinfully lax in their duty towards the souls of their little ones. They leave them to develop as they will in spiritual matters, though on the externalities of life they bestow untold pains and care. Or they delegate this part of their duty to the minister or Sunday school teacher, forgetful that at the best these can only fill their own special place in life, and that no one can possibly fill the place of the parent in the religious any more than in the physical care of their children.

A valued correspondent calls our attention to the fact that, in publishing a report of a recent mission, we make no mention of two other special efforts in the same town, or of the working and praying for a rich blessing which had been long going on among ministers and people. May we remind all our readers that it is impossible for us to give a continuous account of the work of the Lord in any particular place? A reference to a mission should never be thought of as instituting comparison with others which have gone before. Nor is our failure to mention the pastor or congregation an ignoring of their share in the grand result. As we have opportunity, it is our privilege and joy to put on record our high sense of the faithful labours of congregational and mission workers. They cannot be mentioned by name in public or private; and, indeed, in the great majority of cases, are so far from wishing anything of the kind, that they are anxious rather to say "We are unprofitable servants." Yet in the day of harvest there should be joy and gladness in every heart, sower and reaper rejoicing together; and no member of the body of Christ saying to another, "I have no need of you."

Last Lord's Day it gave us joy to join in the thanksgivings of a minister from the north of England, for the ever-widening of the waves of blessing which have gone out from recent special efforts, in the ingathering of wanderers, and in the quickening of the Lord's people. Nothing could be more satisfactory than that such thoughts should be in the minds of leaders, and very many of our readers who, though "hidden ones," have taken a large part in the intercession before the throne, will join in the note of praise.

A most timely and weighty article appears in the Church Times upon the lost sense of sin. Every Christian will endorse the sad complaint that > from one cause or another, the sense of sin is dying out in the world. We see in the popular theology of the day and in the attitude of many thinkers toward moral evil, something more than a tendency to gild the ugly thing all over, for the very existence of sin is practically denied. . . . What we want is that preachers should speak the plain, simple truth about sin, without any beating about the bush, and that their hearers should learn to call sins by their true ugly names.

So far as the Evangelical pulpit is concerned, this kind of preaching has always been to the front, and always will be. But beyond that sphere, two things are imperatively demanded—i.e. the conversion of that "Broad" Theology whose keystone is a perverted doctrine of the Fatherhood of God and whose direct tendency is to minimize sin: and the abolishing of the soporific addenda of the Ritualists by which sin is minimized through the magic of the Confessional and other priestly tricks. There will be no adequate sense of sin until both of these things have been dealt with.

In the proclamation of the Gospel it is of grave importance to use sound words; and in a special sense is this the case when the relation of God to the sinner is under consideration. The points involved in this question are ably set forth in a booklet by Rev. J. More, of Woolwich—The Fatherhood of God and the Sonship of Believers. (6d. Morgan & Scott.) The pages explain, in harmony with Scripture, man's relation to God, and the need of a fundamental change; then the nature of the change is described, and its agency. Finally, Mr. More shows that the words of our Lord—"Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God"—are explicit, and shut the door of compromise or of any middle course between the unregenerate and such as are children of God through Christ. The pages emphasise a truth which is too generally overlooked, and too little appreciated in its crucial significance.

The protest by Roman Catholics and Ritualists against the King's Transubstantiation Declaration is serving a good purpose in calling attention to the fundamentally Protestant nature of the British Constitution. As one of our correspondents points out, the promises under which the Emancipation Act was passed, have been systematically ignored by those who made them. The nation was then led to believe that the new members admitted to Parliament would abstain from interference in religious matters, and that they would leave the House when ecclesiastical interests were under consideration. It is well to remind the present generation that the peers who now protest came under obligation on taking their seats to preserve the Constitution of which the obnoxious Declaration forms a part; and that the present Royal Family only came to the throne on account of their Protestantism, there being other branches whose claim was technically more legal, the only barrier being religion.

Six months have passed away since the allied troops entered Peking, and to-day we seem scarcely nearer a settlement than at that time. The courteous promises made by Li Hung Chang and others have turned out to be valueless. One despatch declares that the Emperor and Empress will commit suicide rather than accede to the demands of the Governments. From another source we learn that a new rising is in progress. Altogether, it is an extraordinary muddle. It would help to relieve the tension if our Government would definitely tell the country what is really being done, so far as England is concerned. At present we only obtain fugitive reports from all kinds of sources, and it is difficult to know what to believe.

We have received, under the title of China's Only Hope (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier), a translation by Rev. S. I. Woodbridge, of the remarkable book addressed to his countrymen nearly two years ago by Chang Chih-Tung. The book is such an unsparing attack on the state of affairs in the empire, that only the author's resources in men and arms saved him from decapitation at the hands of the Conservative party; yet there comes home to us a sense of shame as we realize that one of the greatest stumbling-blocks in the way of reform is the opium traffic. In seeking the remedy, he is truly Chinese. In an introduction Dr. Griffith John, of Hankow, says:—

> He rests his hope on two things—namely, the renaissance of Confucianism and the adoption of Western science and methods. The old is to form the moral basis, and the new is to be used for practical purposes. . . . Christianity alone can form a safe and an adequate basis for the reformation which the Viceroy seeks; but, alas! he does not see it.

To those who are closely following the course of events in France, the struggle between the forces of Church and State in that country presents a situation of absorbing interest. Once more Secularism in its most agnostic form, and Priestism in its most aggressive mien, are locked in a death-grip. The Jesuits, led by their bold and uncompromising leader, Père du Lac, are arrogantly assuming an attitude of mastery over the affairs of the nation, and their close-knit organization enables them to fight at a great advantage with the varied and loosely allied secular parties in the Senate and Chamber. The latter, however, impelled chiefly by alarm, are just now showing a bold front, and seem determined to put an end to the manner in which the religious orders are possessing themselves of the wealth of the nation. The alliance between Church and State in France is one of the strangest phenomena of modern times, and shows that not Secularism but a living Protestant faith is the only weapon that can sucessfully combat the reactionary tendencies of Romanism.

The Austrian Evangelical Gazette gives a somewhat glowing account of the Protestant movement in Austria-Hungary. In two years the Evangelical community has awakened from a condition of torpor and social ostracism into a full consciousness of new life. Within a brief period some 20,000 persons have left Romanism for the Protestant faith; while buildings for public worship, preaching stations, &c., are rising in all directions. The reasons for the change may be partly political, but whatever forces may be implicated in the movement, it serves as an excellent opportunity for a fresh proclamation of the simple Gospel, and the Protestant pastors are entering zealously into the work.

To everybody's surprise, the Parliament of little Belgium, one of the most unfortunate of European countries, has passed a Bill dealing in the most drastic manner with gambling in every form. The chief blow struck by the Bill aims at the suppression of the iniquity so openly carried on at Ostend and Spa. Already, however, the casino proprietors, with their usual cunning, are arranging to evade the law by transferring their abominable trade to steamers, which they propose to anchor in the sea beyond the limits of the country. If they do this, the only thing will be to follow them there. Belgium has set a striking example to other nations. After all, when a moral cancer is eating out the vitals of a people, its rulers are justified in cutting it clean out so far as they can. Shall we have the courage to follow?

The Temps of Paris did a useful thing when it gave to the world the remarkable letter written by the late ex-King Milan to Queen Nathalie, in which the secret of the wretched man's downfall is exposed. All the newspapers in this country appear to have printed it, and its publication ought to do good. Various reasons have been given for the collapse of the ex-monarch, but his own statement that gambling was his ruin may be taken as pretty conclusive. During the last twelve months the journals have recorded a number of serious downfalls, all due to this same vice—gambling. If example counts for anything, the young men and women of our land have had sufficient warning to enable them to pull up in time.

For some time past there has been in Africa a revival of Mohammedan activity. Moslem missionaries have spread themselves out, particularly in East Africa, and are working hard to impose their easy going and sensuous "faith" upon the natives, many of whom are ready for anything which appears better than the old fetish worship. It is easy to understand the fascination which this false religion has for people whose growing enlightenment demands a better religion, but who do not desire to part with their old sensuality. The Church is not yet half awake to dangers of this kind. There is a remarkable slowness in seizing fresh opportunities. Where Mohammedanism once strikes its cancerous roots, it is most difficult to deal with the people. The great hope in cases like this we refer to is to prevent the thing, if possible, getting root at all. And if this is to be accomplished the Church must be first on the spot.

In an article on "Humanizing the Hooligan," the Daily Express gives utterance to a widely popular theory of the way to remedy the social evil pilloried under that name, but which appears to us essentially shallow and ineffective. The Twentieth Century League, inaugurated at the Mansion House Conference last week, is, no doubt, going to do excellent work in its way, but the notion that we are going to cause the hooligan to disappear by a mere process of providing better surroundings and "rational amusement" for the youth of our slums, is predestined to disappointment. "It is the laudable object of the League to humanize the hooligan, not by preaching to him, but by teaching him to play first and pray afterwards." In this phrase we have the weakness of the whole humanitarian movement of our times laid bare. The world is to be converted to a better life by play rather than pray; or at least play first, and pray afterwards! And we answer—NEVER, so long as the first trouble of the soul is sin, and not dulness.

Remedies can only heal the diseases for which they are adapted. If we apply an external remedy to a mortal inward trouble, we may palliate some of the temporary symptoms, but we shall never heal the disease; indeed, we may simply succeed in driving the disease further in. Time will show if the ruffianism of our cities is the mere effect of congested high spirits and misdirected energies, and what such high-sounding phrases denote. The probable result will be a partial abatement for a time, while the evil is gathering force to break out in another direction. Why do so many of our social reformers ignore the truth to which history and observation equally bear witness, that the only sure and effectual way to humanize a hooligan is to Christianize him, and that this is not going to be done by teaching him first to play and then to pray, but by teaching him to do both in true proportion, and in the right order?

A writer in The Lancet points out that whereas there has been of late years a great falling off in the death rate of a number of diseases, the deaths which can be traced directly to intemperance have risen from 45 per 1,000,000, to 77 per 1,000,000 during the last twenty years. No wonder that in face of such a fact our contemporary refers in strong language to the "terrible mischief that is being done to our country by our alcoholic indulgence." But The Lancet only looks at the question from the medical point of view; there are other sides of the question equally painful and equally startling. The Government, however, is blind to them, just as it is deaf to appeal and argument, where the dread work of the brewer and publican is concerned. By-and-by it may be sensible to the pressure and reproof which undoubtedly are looming in the near future.

Despite the steady exodus from the country districts to the metropolis and to other large cities, the condition of the labouring classes in the localities from which the migration is most notable continues to become more and more unsatisfactory. As a rule the agricultural labourer has nothing before him in old age or sickness but the workhouse, and, therefore, although it is very painful, it is not surprising to find that, whereas in Middlesex with its teeming overcrowded population there are only sixteen paupers per 1,000, in Dorsetshire there are no fewer than forty-three. Many difficult questions lie behind this unhappy condition of things, but the remedy is by no means out of reach, and might be found and applied if more time and thought were devoted by our rulers to home affairs.

The passion for full light on the perplexities of life, and an insight into its mysteries and problems, is one of the last infirmities that is left behind the soul. Many otherwise devout people seem to leave scarcely any room in their lives for that sense of the word faith—"believing where we cannot see." A large part of the unhappiness of Christians is in the lurking impulse to demand an "account" of the Divine dealings with them. Unless they can instantly see the meaning of a bitter disappointment or a great bereavement, they are ready to give up everything, and sink into an ignoble despair. The following words of R. L. Stevenson may well be pondered by such half-hearted believers:

> If I from my spy-hole looking with purblind eyes upon the least part of a fraction of the universe, yet perceive in my own life's destiny some broken evidences of a plan, and some signals of an overruling goodness, shall I then be so mad as to complain that all cannot be deciphered?

Though it is vital in regard to good works that they should not be done in the hope of reward, it is nevertheless well sometimes to remember that it is not to great deeds, but to little acts of Christian charity that Christ has promised his recognition, to the giving of a mite, or a cup of cold water, rather than to the building of a temple. In the Christian life as in the realm of nature, the law which governs the oak rules the daisy. With the assurance of our Lord before us it is easy to see that the smallest gift may be the greatest in the sight of God.

For some years we have had a Sunday League, which started with much speech about the elevation and education of the working man by means of art and music, and the study of nature. With the opening of the museums and picture galleries, and with plenty of Sunday excursion trains, he would, we were assured, promptly be lifted out of his surroundings into a region where he would no longer require the restraining power of religion. These results do not seem to have been attained, however, and a contemporary by no means friendly to a Sunday of worship, says:—

> There are thousands of working men who, in spite of the Sunday opening of museums and libraries, have never been inside either. The treasures in Trafalgar Square and at Kensington, with all the potential possibilities of pleasure which they contain, are unknown to them.

So true is it that when the children cry for bread these theorists offer them stones.

It is marvellous how the literature in regard to Bunyan and his immortal Pilgrim's Progress continues to increase, and it is well that it should be so, if only men are directed by it to the great allegory. Rev. A. J. Foster's Bunyan's Country is perhaps the latest of these, and as an attempt to locate near Bedford some of the scenery depicted by Bunyan, doubtless it will send readers to the fountain-head. At the same time, no one child or adult who lingers over the pages of the Pilgrim's Progress wishes for anything to be materialized. The City of Destruction, the Vanity Fair, the Hill Difficulty, the Valley of the Shadow, the Burden upon Christian's Shoulders, are none the less real because a halo of sanctified genius gleams over them, and the book is one which will continue to be blessed to many a human soul without the aid of any commentaries.

The "Temperance" Debate.

THE debate on Temperance Reform in the House of Commons was as singularly disappointing in its results, as Mr. Ritchie's proposals were ludicrously inadequate to the situation.

There is to be no decrease in the number of licences; indeed, the only practical measure suggested by him on behalf of the Government was a Bill dealing with the case of habitual drunkards. This is at best a mere palliative, and does not touch the root of the question, which is not what to do with those gone too far to reform, but how to prevent the manufacture of "habitual," or even "occasional" drunkards, through the over-abundant facilities for drinking now offered to the community.

The proposal of the Government, which its exponent claimed would have a "considerable effect in dealing with drunkenness," thus exactly reverses the proper order of reform. It is a "sop to Cerberus," not a solid and earnest effort to deal with a national peril of the gravest kind. This is all the more evident in view of the admission made by the Home Secretary as to the real gravity of the evil. "No one," he exclaimed, "could be at the Home Office even for a short time without being firmly convinced that much of the crime which we had to deplore was caused by drunkenness, and that many of the men who had to expiate their offences on the scaffold had been led into crime by their indulgence in drink."

After such an admission, the country has a right to demand that something like a stringent measure should be proposed. A very general feeling of disappointment has indeed been expressed in the secular press at the miserably small instalment of reform that is suggested by "the strongest Government of modern times."

As an illustration of the practical effect of the drinking facilities referred to above, reference may be made to the recent census of attendance at public worship and at public-houses in a provincial town. A careful count on a Sunday evening resulted in the following results:—There were 4,654 people present in the churches and chapels, from a population of 30,000 (among these there were only 1,539 men), while there were 4,421 found in clubs and public-houses (of whom 3,717 were men). Thus there were 2,178 more men present in places devoted to the sale of strong drink on a Sunday evening than at Divine worship. If Sunday Closing were made legally compulsory, this sort of thing would be put a summary end to, and one of the most terrible temptations of the working-man's day of rest would be removed.

Mr. Bell, a working-man's representative, said, during the debate, that workmen had told him they could not resist the temptation to drink, and that they wished something were done to remove the evil out of their way. In view of the increasing drunkenness of the times, and of the general desire for something in the way of betterment abroad among all classes, it is a very serious thing that the House of Commons should lag so far behind the times on this crucial question.

The supineness of our legislators is, however, an opportunity for the leaders of social opinion. These points seem unmistakably clear:

(1) This should not be made a political party question, either by the Government or by temperance advocates and societies. Such a step was deplored by speakers on both sides of the House in the recent debate, and a strong feeling was expressed by a speaker on the Ministerial side "that, though party discipline might stand almost anything, to discipline enthusiastic and faithful followers on that question was not true policy."

(2) Temperance reformers should not be discouraged by the attitude of the present Government, but should use every possible opportunity to sink their differences, join in a common plan of campaign, and agitate, educate, and appeal to the public unceasingly, on behalf of the most crying need of our times. It has been abundantly shown during the past ten years, that nothing can be done by a divided party of reform, and that there is no hope of solid results so long as extremists bar the pathway of gradual and piecemeal betterment. For lack of these two essentials, the problem of temperance legislation has been hindered rather than helped by its most enthusiastic friends. It would be well to learn the lesson before the growing obstacles to reform become insuperable.

The Late Queen.

SUGGESTED INDIAN MEMORIAL.

IN an appealing letter on the urgent question of the prevention of Famine in India, Principal G. C. M. Douglas, of Glasgow, says:—"You have rightly called attention to the prospects of another famine in India. Christians have been giving, and no doubt they will give again, as required; but, at the same time, they may well urge that all right means of prevention be used, in dependence on God's holy providence. A proposal has been made for an Indian memorial to our late beloved Queen in Calcutta, and large gifts for the purpose have been spoken of. We should all rejoice to see honour done in Calcutta to Queen Victoria's memory, but why not devote the fund to the prevention of famine

BY MEANS OF IRRIGATION?

What memorial would our Queen have approved more than one which would save the lives and increase the happiness of her people?

"Joseph is remembered in Egypt for irrigation works attributed to him (whether erroneously or not does not affect the argument), which blessed the country in which he was ruler. Calcutta is certainly a noble capital, but India is a country of villages, in which the cities are much less important than with us."

Mr. T. Crewdson Wilson, of Kendal, in the course of a deeply interesting letter, which has appeared in the Press, says: "May I suggest that a fitting Imperial tribute to the memory of our noble Queen—as well as a national acknowledgment of God's mercies to us during her long reign—would be for the whole British Empire to combine in raising a 'Queen Victoria Fund' for the benefit of the poorest and weakest nation in the Empire, in order to relieve it from the constantly recurring famines which turn what should be a garden into a wilderness. Let Great Britain and Ireland, the Colonies, and India herself unite to raise a large fund to be applied to the irrigation of those districts in India which from last year's famine. We may at least make a beginning in the most needy districts. The work will be abundantly self-supporting when once it has had time to develop. Therefore, we do not need to raise a capital fund, but a fund sufficient to pay the whole interest on the capital outlay (in the district chosen for a commencement), for say five years, and partial interest at a diminishing scale for, say, another five years. Do not say the Government ought to do this. The Indian Government's finances have been greatly strained by the late famine, and Lord Curzon believes there is another in prospect."

Another correspondent suggests, in view of the grave outlook, that if a fund in memory of the beloved Queen Victoria were started, many would be glad to contribute.

The Essence of Scripture.

PROF. MARGOLIOUTH'S LECTURES.

THE third of Professor Margoliouth's lectures was given last Wednesday in Exeter Hall, the subject being "The Biblical Prophets and other Prophets." At the outset non-Scriptural prophecy was traced to its roots in divination, which, although there is practically no trace of it in the Old Testament, was shown to be common among the surrounding peoples, the complete terminology in ancient Arabic proving its deep hold. The simplest word for "divine" comes in derived languages to mean simply "see." It is traced into the Hebrew, and in the case of the prophets would take the meaning of "second sight." As they could see what was invisible to others, there was an expectation that they should be unable to see what others did, and many blind prophets are traceable in the annals of Arabia.

The Hebrew word for "prophet" corresponds to that which in ancient Arabic meant "priest"—a change which might be illustrated by that whereby "vicar" and "curate" have almost the opposite signification in French and English. Most of the nations believed in the inspiration of dreams, and the possibility of interpreting them. The rules applied to them appear from an old writer to have been simplicity itself. For instance, the seeing of bread corresponding to one's condition in life is satisfactory, but for a poor man to dream of fine bread, or a rich man of coarse bread, was the opposite; the loss of a right eye presaged that of a father, son, or brother, while a left eye pointed to a female relative. In Arabia an effort was made to systematise the subject, and a large dictionary more than two hundred years old is extant, which gives the meaning to be applied to nearly every possible object if seen in dreams. Scripture encourages the belief that sometimes in dreams of the night, though even in the book of Daniel considerable scepticism as to the interpreting of them is expressed. In our modern novelists we find traces of ancient ideas on the subject lingering among people of the present day.

A favourite mode of divination was the consulting of the dead, especially if they were famous, or if a common interest could be traced. This was often done by the intervention of third persons, as is the case now with spiritualists. The Biblical prophets regarded necromancy with peculiar aversion, and the consultation of Samuel is represented as a desperate expedient.

One word used for conjurors in the Old Testament means "casters of lots;" the assignment in such events not being of man, it was felt that it must be thought of as being of some other, that is of God. The consultation of the Urim and Thummim is the only case of the kind allowed in the Old Testament.

Biblical prophecy always claims to be something supernaturally communicated. Through whatever channel conveyed, it was never regarded as being open to all who should give time and attention to it, but as to be classed with gifts which no amount of these could enable a man to acquire. Joseph and Daniel, too, interpret dreams because of special powers accorded to them, and not through any regularly possessed.

The transition of the prophet from diviner to lawgiver is easy, and in the Old Testament is effected gradually. In Moses the prophetic functions are all represented.

The office was clearly not hereditary, though the terms "prophet" and "prophet's son" are sometimes used in Scripture as equivalent. The prophetic power could not be used for personal aggrandizement; indeed, the call usually ended in personal disaster. When we get a glimpse of the lives of the men, they ordinarily appear to be unhappy. The question whether Old Testament prophecy involves anything extraordinary may seem a small point, but has serious consequences, because it carries with it the acceptance of their utterances.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—VIII.

REPENTANCE.

By Rev. DAVID M. M'INTYRE, Glasgow.

REPENTANCE and faith together constitute conversion—that is, the turning of mind, affections, and will from sin to God. Conversion and regeneration mingle in one experience. We cannot say that any one gracious act or operation is prior to another in time. Repentance does not precede faith; regeneration does not antedate repentance. We may indeed separate these in thought, but as a life-experience they flow together and are one.

Repentance is "unto life." It is a gift of the glorified Saviour, a fruit of the Spirit. Yet it is the "fact and deed" of a sinful man. It is not as if God should work part of the great change in me, and I the rest. But, as theologians are wont to say, "God produces all, and man acts all." God persuades and enables me; but it is I who repent.

In Scripture there are two chief words for repentance. The one signifies change of mind, the other amendment of life. A change of mind in regard to law and obligation leads to an amended life. The children's definition of repentance is perhaps as good as any:—

> Repentance is to leave the sins we loved before,
> And show that we in earnest grieve by doing them no more.

1. In a word, to repent is to stand with God, on God's side, in regard to sin. In The Holy War, John Bunyan tells that, while Mansoul was under the sway of Diabolus, the voice of the Recorder was all but silenced: "Also now he never spake freely for King Shaddai, but always by force and constraint." Yet, at times, when, under such mysterious compulsion, he did cry aloud, it was "as when a lion roareth. . . . He would make the whole town of Mansoul shake with his voice." God has not left Himself without witness, and conscience, although darkened and disabled by sin, still speaks for God. To repent is to take sides, with an awakened conscience, against oneself.

Conscience, being enlightened by the Holy Spirit, looks with God upon the mournful sequences of transgressions. With God it condemns them, and brings in the soul as guilty in the sight of Him whose eyes are as a flame of fire. The evil deeds which stain the past are confessed to be sinful exceedingly; they have been committed against the holy will—against the pure love of God, and there is no circumstance of extenuation which one dare plead. Excuses and palliations are swept away as some feeble embankment is torn down by the destroying flood: "Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in Thy sight; that Thou mightest be justified when Thou speakest, and be clear when Thou judgest."

When one turns to look with a steadfast eye upon one's own doings, the terrible revelation comes as a sickening fear to each of us, that the dark side of our life is practically limitless. President Edwards used to exclaim for months together, "Infinite upon infinite! Infinite upon infinite!" and many an awakened soul has felt that the words were hardly exaggerated.

A man-of-war, anchored in some bay, can flash its electric light through the dim waters, illuminating the gaunt, brown rocks, the long sand-reaches, and the trailing sprays of sea-wrack; but when it navigates the high seas it can irradiate only a fathom or two of surface water, the fringe of remote depths wholly unrevealed. Luther used to write to Staupitz in bitterness of soul, exclaiming, "O, my sins, my sins!" yet, when he came to definite acts, it seemed as if he had almost nothing to confess. Henry Ware sings, mournfully—

> It is not what my hands have done
> That weighs my spirit down;
> That casts a shadow on the sun,
> And over earth a frown.
> It is not any heinous guilt,
> Or vice by men abhorred;
> For fair the fame that I have built,
> A fair life's just reward;
> And men would wonder if they knew
> How sad I feel with sins so few.
> Alas! they only read in part
> When thus they judge the whole;
> They cannot look upon the heart,
> They cannot read the soul.
> But I survey myself within,
> And mournfully I feel
> How deep the principle of sin
> Its roots may there conceal,
> And spread its poison through the frame,
> Without a deed that men may blame.

It is the consciousness that the evil of our nature is practically limitless, that it debases each faculty, and taints the very springs of life, which destroys our self-contentment, and uproots all sense of meritorious goodness, bringing each sinner to the acknowledgment of lostness and doom. And it is the recognition of the fact that this sinfulness of ours, being exerted against God, must be regarded from God's point of view, must be seen with God's eyes, must be judged by us now, as we believe that God will judge it then, when the White Throne is set, and the books are opened.

Looking at it so, we conclude not only that there is "none other Name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved," but, further, that God is justified in judging Jesus of Nazareth; that, having "laid on Him the iniquity of us all," He proceeded, in accordance with the requirements of His holy Being, in wounding, bruising, forsaking His only-begotten and well-beloved Son. That the Father was thus declared to be most just was the final acknowledgment of the dying Lamb of God amid the unutterable desolation of Calvary. "O my God, I cry in the daytime, but Thou hearest not, and in the night season, and am not silent. But Thou art holy." It shall be our confession also when we are truly penitent, broken, and contrite in heart. "I'se gie thee said an old Scots drover to Robert Bruce, the Edinburgh preacher. Twenty cows will not do it. Twenty kingdoms will not. Twenty universes would be too slight a price. The ransom money, flung into the scales of the sanctuary, and weighed by Jehovah's hand, was "the precious blood of Christ."

TWENTY COWS TO GREE GOD AND ME,"

2. Again, repentance works; it affects the active powers; it touches the will. The awakened sinner, finding himself in the path of transgressors, stops, and turns his face towards the way of life. He hears the voice which speaks from heaven, "Break off thy sins by righteousness;" he endeavours to keep the law of God. Pharnaces, while still in revolt against Cæsar, sent to him a golden crown. Cæsar sternly refused the gift. "Let Pharnaces," said he, "return to his obedience." The war between the Northern and Southern States of America was not ended until General Lee laid his sword down on the grass at General Grant's feet, in the orchard at Appomattox, saying, as he looked up to the banner of the stars and stripes floating overhead, "We will never

TAKE UP ARMS AGAINST THE OLD FLAG AGAIN."

And the long controversy between the soul and God cannot be brought to a termination until the soul, subdued and penitent, exclaim, "I have sinned and perverted that which was right, and it profited me not." "You say that you have come to Christ," says Bunyan; "then, tell me, what have you come from?"

3. Again, repentance, if it be true, seeks to repair the wrong done, to undo the past, to make restitution, to "cut off the entail of sin." Claud Harms, contrasting the penitential exercises of the middle ages with the easy indifference to wrong-doing displayed by many in his time, says somewhere, almost with bitterness, "In earlier times, at any rate, forgiveness cost something; now men simply forgive themselves." "Go in peace," said the Lord to an awakened sinner; then He added, "Go, and sin no more." True repentance wrought in the heart of the Corinthian Christians when they returned from their vanity and self-pleasing to the obedience of faith: "Ye sorrowed to repentance; for ye were made sorry after a godly manner; . . . for godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of. . . . For behold, this self-same thing that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you; yea, what clearing of yourselves; yea, what indignation; yea, what fear; yea, what vehement desire; yea, what zeal; yea, what revenge!"

When the path of repentance is once entered on, the sinner is surprised to find how easy it is and how pleasant. He thought that it was a perilous ascent to where the storm-winds raged unceasingly; a sharp, cruel road strewn with branching thorns, and filled with stones like knives; a painful progress with bleeding feet and toiling breath. Instead, he finds it a calm and peaceful way. Luther confessed to Staupitz that the word repentance, which he formerly thought the most terrifying word in the Bible, was now the most gracious. And Bengel says, "Repentance is a joyful gift." The waters of Marah have been sweetened by the tree of healing. The shipwrecked soul is clinging to the cross of Christ.

Victoria and Albert.—I.

An Appreciation on Behalf of the Poor.

By G. HOLDEN PIKE.

ON the morning after the death of our late beloved Queen and Empress, I was asked by the secretary of a great philanthropic association to write something bearing on what had been done for the poor during the reign of Victoria, which especially had been an era in which endeavours had been made for the recovery of outcast children, for them to take their legitimate place in the social economy. When looking into such a subject, it soon appeared that there was a number of things which might be taken account of in connection with the Royal Family which would show that they had cared for the poorer classes in a way that had not been characteristic of their predecessors. It may be said that George III. showed tendencies in this direction, for the old King had been known to visit a dying gipsy in Windsor Park, and to give a genuine ragged-school lesson in spelling to a shepherd lad whom he once met with during one of his solitary walks. There were tradespeople at Windsor whose society the King preferred to that of courtiers—men who could talk intelligently about business matters, who understood the markets, the rearing and fattening of stock, successful wheat-growing, the most effective dressings for turnips and mangolds. The Duke of Kent, our late Queen's father, inherited the best traits of his own father's character. A generation before teetotal reformers were heard of, and when he was Governor of Gibraltar, he ordered the closing of the liquor shops; but, although the result was order and prosperity such as the town had never known, the Royal Duke found that he was before his time, and suffered accordingly. The Duchess of Kent also taught her daughter to be kind to the poor.

The accession of Queen Victoria was the dawn of a new era of hope for the working classes and the poor; for such philanthropists as appeared before that time expended their efforts chiefly on subjects in foreign lands—Pagan tribes and West Indian slaves—leaving many wrongs at home untouched, such as were associated with the hideous sufferings of children in mines and factories, and of those of boy chimney-sweepers.

At the very outset of her reign, Queen Victoria seems to have shown her philanthropic instinct by extending who had already become widely known as the friend and helper of the poor and the suffering. Lord and Lady Ashley were visitors at Windsor Castle in the autumn of 1838, or at a time when the future distinguished head of the house of Shaftesbury had made his mark in Parliament as one who had turned his back on place and power, for the sake of following a course of self-denial, of no profit, and which brought him little honour. Of course nothing could be more stimulating or encouraging to a man in Lord Ashley's position, at a time when, as a reformer, he was spoken against and misrepresented by prejudiced or interested persons. Speaking of his Royal hostess at Windsor he was able to say:

From the hour she became Queen to the present day, I and mine have received one invariable succession of friendly and hospitable acts, bestowed with a degree of care, good humour, and considerateness that would be captivating in any private person.

Ten years later, when the French Revolution on the Continent, and the Chartist propaganda in Great Britain, seemed to portend the end of one political dispensation, and the opening of a new era of agitation and alarm, we find that much more was taking place behind the scenes than the biographer of the Prince Consort had information of when he came to that passage in the Prince Consort's life. At that time there was a Ragged-School in Golden Lane on the confines of the City of London, of which the Prince himself had laid the foundation stone not a very great while previously. On April 19, 1848, or just over a week after the Chartist collapse, Lord Ashley was to have presided at the anniversary of this school, but, instead of doing that, he had to hasten to Osborne

BY COMMAND OF THE QUEEN.

The philanthropist wrote in his diary:

The Queen has sent for me to talk over the condition of the working people; and here I am. Her Majesty very amiable and very considerate for the poor. God be praised who has put such thoughts into her heart! May they bring forth fruit to his glory on earth, and her own peace in time and eternity.

This was a remarkable adventure for Lord Ashley; but it was more than that, it was a memorable historical passage in the lives of the Sovereign and her husband, the details of which might have remained unknown had not Mr. Edwin Hodder recovered the facts from Lord Shaftesbury himself in his later years.

When the Ragged-School leader arrived at Gosport, he found the Royal yacht in readiness to take him across the water, and on his reaching the Palace, both the Queen and the Prince were found to be in a state of alarm in consequence of what was happening in France, and the flight of the King from his capital.

They feared the continuance of commotions in England, and were desirous to know how they could exercise their influence to soothe the people. The Queen on my arrival expressed this sentiment very warmly, and added at dinner, "The Prince will talk to you to-morrow. We have sent for you to have your opinion on what we should do, in view of the state of affairs, to show our interest in the working classes, and you are the only man who can advise us in the matter."

The talk between the Prince and his visitor took place, as arranged, in the grounds at Osborne, and took the form of a very earnest conference which lasted for an hour and a half. When he had received the Prince's permission to speak out, and not to observe mere Court form, Lord Ashley offered his advice in the most outspoken manner. The Prince was assured that his position gave him facilities for serving the country greater than if he were its King. Lord Ashley added:

You can speak as a King, represent a King, without the necessity and inevitable restrictions of a King. Your presence, though formally different, is virtually the presence of the Queen.

The Prince was naturally eager to learn what he could do; and when he was advised to preside at a forthcoming meeting at Exeter Hall, on behalf of the suggestion was at once adopted. The Prince even consented to visit some of the poorest dwellings in St. Giles' in Lord Ashley's company before going to the meeting; and to appear on the scene with three carriages with footmen in red liveries; for, as he was assured, "even these things are not without their influence."

A WORKING PEOPLE'S BENEFIT SOCIETY,

Lord John Russell, who was Prime Minister at the time, vehemently opposed the whole design, but his objections were overruled, and the programme was carried out uncurtailed. A Chartist or Socialistic work of the more mischievous kind was sent to the Palace; but, so far was the Prince from having his ardour damped by the false statements of misguided persons, that he thought it to be still more necessary to appear in public in order to give different testimony.

The Royal Family are not merely living upon the earnings of the people (as these publications try to represent) without caring for the poor labourers; they are anxious about their welfare, and ready to co-operate in any scheme for the amelioration of their condition.

The good and far-reaching effects of the action of the Queen and the Prince at this particular crisis were fully recognised by Lord Ashley. He was stimulated and encouraged by the improved outlook. He wrote in his diary:

Prince Albert did his part admirably, with remarkable grace and modesty. His speech, too, was excellent in itself; and it was his own. The success has been hitherto complete; almost every paper bepraises the step, and writes upon it in an anti-revolutionary tone. Ay, truly, this is the way to stifle Chartism. Rank, leisure, station, are gifts of God, for which men must give an account. Here is a full proof, a glowing instance! The aristocracy, after a long separation, are re-approaching the people; and the people the aristocracy.

From that date until the day when he passed away in his prime, the Prince gave his assistance to any enterprise which promised to confer benefit on the working classes, and it may even be said that he worked with Lord Shaftesbury with that object ever in view. Had the Prince been a member of the Council of the Ragged-School Union itself, of which his friend and adviser was president for forty years, he could not have prescribed more effective remedies for existing evils than those which occurred to him. Practically, there were four ways only of benefiting working people. The children needed to be educated and to have industrial training. Their dwellings needed to be improved. In the country, allotments should be available. Savings banks and benefit societies were needed to encourage thrift. In all cases of this nature, the views of the Prince were those of the Queen. Again and again, matters relating to such philanthropic service were talked over with Lord Ashley. Both the Prince and the nobleman were Ragged-School pioneers.

Gems of Thought.

From "Vintage Gleanings" of Sermons by James Harington Evans.

"ALL FULNESS" can never be emptied by finite wants.

A man is never such a free man as when he is led by the Spirit of God.

The children of God are often argumentatively wrong and spiritually right.

There is nothing arbitrary in the court of heaven; a man does but reap as he sows.

Motives are everything to God; and as far as we are upright, they are everything to us.

There are many who know their own wisdom, but there are few who know their own folly.

We know no more of any truth than we have experienced of that truth in our own soul.

It is no wisdom to go to the edge of the precipice—the safe path is the middle of the right way.

If God has given you victory over your enemies, you have never more need to watch and pray than at that moment.

The worshipper of his own reason, and the worshipper of his domestic happiness, too, is as great an idolater as any.

Pray that you may find time for prayer; for rest assured that if you restrain prayer you will never be restrained from sin.

Our true growth is more known by our growing downwards in humility than by all the outward things put together.

If you ask the way to the crown, 'tis by the cross! To the mountain, 'tis by the valley! To exaltation, 'tis "he that humbleth himself."

God doth purposely conceal his purposes from his children, in order that they may live upon his absolute promises in Christ Jesus.

Faith is not sense, not sight, not reason, but a taking God at his word—believing that Jesus is enough for all the emergencies of his people's wants.

We call ourselves ignorant creatures, and know ourselves to be such; yet how often do we act under the deepest conviction that we know something better than God!

Every avenue of comfort and happiness is sometimes stopped in the believer's mind, that he may be brought to know more deeply this truth—"All my springs are in Thee."

The forgiveness that is in God flows out from his own goodness, and is the fruit of his love. When we forgive, it costs us an effort: when God forgives, it is his delight. "He delighteth in mercy."

There is oftentimes internal fruit when the external fruit is but little seen. You and I take most notice of the external fruits, because we are men; but, I believe, God takes most notice of the internal fruit.

What must that be but sand that cannot bear the weight of one year's sickness—that cannot look in the face the bereavement of those we love—that cannot stand the test of trying circumstances — that dares not let thought approach the precincts of eternity!

The Italian Census, 1901.

By Rev. Cav. A. ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

THE Papal Church in Italy feels sorely aggrieved by the action of the Government in the taking of the Census, and the Vatican journals are giving vent to the Pope's feelings in lamentation and vituperation. Since Italy became a kingdom one and indivisible, the Census has been taken every ten years, so that this one of 1901 is the fourth. The Papal Church feels aggrieved that a Census should be taken at all, for such a thing never fails to set in relief the happy, prosperous state of Italy under the House of Savoy, compared with its state before the fall of the Temporal Power, under the misgovernment of the Pope.

Taking Rome, the capital, for illustration, we find that, whereas in 1870 it had but 180,000 inhabitants, it has now 500,000; whereas the mortality amongst children in 1870 was forty per 1,000, it is now twenty-five; whereas in 1870 the illiterate formed 75 per cent. of the population, now they form about 35 per cent.; and whereas twenty out of every 1,000 of the population were guilty of grave crimes in 1870, mostly stabbings, poisonings, and murders, now such crimes have practically disappeared. Similar statistics hold for all other parts of Italy. What a commentary they form on the impotence and malevolence of Papal rule, the rule which the Duke of Norfolk prays to have re-established in Italy!

But it is not simply the fact of a Census being taken that is troubling the Papacy at this time, it is the questions that have this year been put upon the schedule requiring an answer, and of these questions this one is the head and front of the offending :—

"TO WHAT CHURCH DO YOU BELONG?"

This is a question that is put for the first time —"To what Church do you belong?" "Why," the Papal Church says, "what an insulting question! As if there could be more Churches than one, and as if an Italian subject could belong to any other Church than the Holy Roman Catholic Apostolic Church! It is an insult to the Pope! It is nothing short of blasphemy!" Nevertheless, the question stands on the schedule, and it must be answered. The papers say the King has filled up his paper, so the Pope had better fill up his, and say as little about it as possible.

All that the Church complains of as being involved in the question is involved in it, and much more. The question implies that there are more Churches than one. It implies that these other Churches—those outside the Papal one—are so important and influential as to demand recognition. It implies that the number of Italians who have not only but who have also identified themselves with Protestant Churches, is considerable. It implies that Protestant Churches have become a power in the land, and are recognized as such by the Government. The enmity borne by the Pope and Vatican to these Protestants was exhibited lately to the world in the Encyclical published complaining of their growing numbers in Rome; and the Duke of Norfolk's recent address, complaining querulously of the liberty that Protestants enjoy in a free Italy, shows how the same unworthy, but essentially Papal, feelings rankle in his breast, and in that of his fellow-servants of the Pope.

The Census will probably show that the number of Italian Protestants is greater than is even suspected. As is well known, they belong to different societies and churches, are called by different names, but all are one in spirit, all are actuated by common principles, and their united strength will appear in the Census paper, under the heading

EVANGELICAL CHRISTIANS.

In comparison with their common Christianity, their specific distinctions are of little importance, and this, I am glad to say, they have agreed to acknowledge in the Census paper, by not inscribing the names of their different Churches, but by calling themselves, as I have said, simply "Evangelical Christians."

One other reason the Papists have for dreading the Census schedule is that they are afraid that the millions of Italians who are virtually outside its pale will say so, and inscribe themselves as belonging to "no Church." Such have forsaken the Santa Bottega of the Pope (his holy shop), but have as yet identified themselves with no Christian Church. They are convinced of the incompatibility of the Papal Church with but they know not the character of other Churches. Such number millions, the majority, in fact, of the population. How will they inscribe themselves? One cannot yet know, but the question is giving anxiety to the Vatican, and it is advising them to inscribe themselves as belonging to the Church in which they were baptized. Let us hope that they will do nothing of the kind, but tell the truth, namely, that they have no Church connection. This in Italy does not carry with it any stigma. It does not imply that they are atheists, or infidels, or irreligious. The very opposite—it is a step in the right direction. It implies that they have found out the Papal Church to be false; and that being so, they are in a fair way of finding out a Church that is true. Their action in forsaking the Church of the Pope is a necessary condition to their finding a true Church of Christ.

It is an undeniable fact that the Papal Church—the national Church of Italy—is no longer the Church of the nation, and the Census will doubtless make this apparent. And let us hope that even this fact so disclosed will nerve the Italians to still further action in the direction of getting rid of it altogether.

Training Spanish Evangelists

BIGOTED and backward as Spain is, it has in the South the beginnings of a Protestant Divinity School. This exists in the shape of a Missionary Training College in Puerto Santa Maria, a town on the Bay of Cadiz, and opposite the ancient city of that name. The college dates from soon after the Revolution of 1868, when the Spanish brethren bethought themselves of instituting a school for preparing men to evangelize the country; and for that end hired a house in Seville. After a time the college was removed to Puerto Santa Maria, and placed under the direction of Rev. Dr. Moore, of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland. He died in 1895, and since then Rev. W. B. Douglas, of Edinburgh, has been in charge, aided by three Spanish pastors.

It has been deemed wise to include in the curriculum the elements of an Arts course, as well as the elements of a Divinity course; so that, altogether, a student remains seven years in the college if he wishes to be an evangelist or pastor, and four if he wishes to be a master in a Protestant school. From the college there have already gone forth so many workers, that there can be no question as to its practical utility.

The students at present in residence number eleven; five of whom should be ready within a year and a-half for any sphere to which God in his providence may call them. The elder students add to their lessons in theory, practical work in the Puerto Santa Maria Mission of the Irish Presbyterian Church; and due attention is paid to physical, mental, social, and spiritual development. Naturally, the formation of a consistent Christian character is a first aim.

The young men on an average contribute about a fourth part of their board and other expenses; coming from poor families they are unable to do more. So, whilst all the teachers' salaries come from the British Churches, there is still need of help to maintain the students. The home churches have not, so far, assumed any responsibility in this matter, and the teachers are now appealing on this behalf. It needs about £22 to £25 a month to keep house for the students. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Rev. Professor Matthew Leitch, D.D., 3, College Park, Belfast.

Mrs. Nation's Campaign.

MRS. NATION was still at Topeka on February 8. At half-past five on the previous Tuesday morning, accompanied by five men and three women, she raided the "Senate" saloon, and in less than half-an-hour destroyed about £1,500 worth of property. She was arrested, but when taken before Police Judge Magaw, she was discharged, as it was apparent that she had not broken any State law.

Mrs. Nation recently issued this proclamation to the children of the United States. She said: "I ask you to help me destroy that which is on the streets, and, protected by the police and city officials, to destroy you, my darlings. I want every one of you little ones to grab up a rock, and smash up the glass doors and windows of these hell-holes. You will do your duty, and enrol your names on the pages of undying fame, and place yourself on the side of God and humanity."

In a letter to the New York Journal she wrote: "The annoyance I have been subjected to by arrest will not deter me. I never intend to let intimidate me by arresting or threatening my life. I can prove that property used by dive keepers in their business in Kansas is outlawed, and that the courts, of course, cannot protect it from damage. After I fight this question out in the Kansas courts, and complete the work of destroying the 'murder shops' in this State, I will be ready to go to New York."

Replying to a criticism by Cardinal Gibbons, Mrs. Nation has written:—"The courts in Kansas have decided that whatever is used in running a saloon is not property; it is a nuisance, and has no pretence to right under the law. No one in Kansas pretends that the saloon has any rights. It is an outlaw everywhere, so far as that is concerned. No State has the right, under the Constitution of the United States, to give any man the privilege to destroy the young men and the homes of the land, and spread misery and wretchedness, poverty and crime, throughout the country."

British readers unacquainted with the intricacies of our political system, and who do not know of the great differences existing in the laws of the individual States, will perhaps understand the legal side of the matter through this extract from an article in the current issue of the Weekly Witness, by Mr. George R. Scott: "The difference between a saloon in Kansas and a saloon in the State of New York is the difference between a pirate vessel and a privateer. A piratical craft can only hoist a flag on which is displayed

THE CROSS-BONES AND SKULL.

A privateer carries letters of marque from the Government represented by the flag it floats. The saloons in the State of New York have letters of marque from the State officials, and by law can pour hot shot into the people—shot that wounds, kills, and even damns. I know it is wrong, but such is the fact. The Empire State, for a stipulated price, gives the saloon-keepers a legal right to give the people a taste of hell before they get there. The saloons in this State are protected by the flag of the State and the flag of the Nation.

"In Kansas it is different. A saloon there must hoist the death flag, if any. The Stars and Stripes in Kansas have something better to cover and protect than hell-holes. It is the law of nations that a vessel sailing under piratical colours can be sunk by any skipper who is able to do it and has the courage to try. Pirates have no standing in courts of law; they belong to a class who have no rights that decent people are bound to respect. When Mrs. Nation attacks a saloon in the State of Kansas she makes an assault on a piratical institution that cannot defend itself in any court of law. If she should do the same thing in the State of New York, she would subject herself to instant imprisonment; for when she strikes an Empire State saloon, she strikes the flag that protects the saloon-keeper."

New York. ROGER MARTIN.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, March 3. Daniel xi.

THE three kings of Persia (2) were Ahasuerus, Artaxerxes, and Darius (Ezra iv. 6, 7, 24). The fourth was Xerxes, whose wealth has passed into a proverb. The mighty King (3) is clearly Alexander the Great, whose dominions, at his death, were divided among his generals. In the 5th verse our attention passes from Asia to Africa, from Greece to Egypt and Syria, because of the afflictions which befel the holy land from those quarters. The story, as told here, was reduplicated in the minutest particulars in the events which transpired in actual history. From this verse to 29th, we have a detailed account of the strife between Antiochus and his descendants, kings of Syria, and the Ptolemies, kings of Egypt, which greatly desolated Palestine, which lay between them, and was perpetually their battle-ground.

Finally Antiochus decided to make idol worship universal, and decreed that all Jews should, on pain of death conform to the Greek religion, and that the Temple should be consecrated to Jupiter. This was the gravest peril that had ever threatened the Jews. Many interpreters see in Antiochus, with his blasphemous pretensions, a foreshadowing of the anti-Christ, whose dark figure overshadows prophecy as he stands against the knowledge of God. It was a terrible indignity when the tyrant polluted the holy place by offering swine's flesh on Jehovah's altars, and this was a prognostication also of the rise of the mosque of Omar, which stands on the Temple site. The remainder of the chapter tells the story of Antiochus. But in glorious contrast with this dark background is the story of the Maccabees, in whom the holy and ancient zeal of Judaism flamed up in one last desperate resistance. Let us ponder the 32nd verse, and ask that we may have such a knowledge of God as shall nerve us to similar exploits!

MONDAY, March 4. Daniel xii.

It is evident that in this chapter, Daniel passes from the political resurrection of the Jews under the Maccabees to the literal resurrection, which will ensue on the final overthrow of anti-Christ at the coming of the Lord. The "time of trouble," similarly, is applicable not only to the days of Antiochus, who was preeminently the persecutor of the chosen people, and the subverter of their religion, but to the last times, when the saints of God shall suffer as never before (Matt. xxiv. 21).

Whatever tribulations may await the Church, there is one clear issue to which we may all devote ourselves, namely, the turning of men from darkness to light, from the power of Satan unto God. For this the blood of the cross was shed, and the Spirit given, and for this we are continued in the world. This work of soul-winning needs wisdom of the highest order, which can only be communicated by the Saviour Himself, who is made unto us wisdom.

It is not within our province to explain the references of these epochs, which are herein described. For my part, I believe that the "time, times, and a half," refers to the rule of Mahomet over the Holy Land (Rev. xi. 2, 3, 9). Whilst the 11th verse definitely refers to the tyrannous outrage of Antiochus on the Holy City, it has probably an ulterior reference to the reign of anti-Christ, which shall overlap the long desolations to which the Mohammedan rule has subjected the chosen race. But at the best, we can only guess at the meaning of these words, which will be made plain when the Church comes to need them. Our duty is clear to go on doing the will of God, and looking for the blessed hope, when we shall stand "in our lot," at the end of the days.

TUESDAY, March 5. Hosea i.

The story of Hosea was a very pathetic one. He felt impressed with the duty of taking to wife a woman of the people, whose earlier life had been marked by shameful unchastity. Three little children were the result of the marriage, whose names were terribly significant —Jezreel, God will scatter; Lo-ruhamah, a daughter, not an object of grace or favour; Lo-ammi, once my people, but now not so. Here is the history of many a soul. God may have gathered us to Himself with tender love, yet, in spite of all, we may wander from Him into scandalous and heart-breaking transgression, and expose ourselves to wrath in the day of wrath and perdition of ungodly men. And no lot is more pitiable and awful than to have known the way of truth, and gone away from it.

The chapter closes with brighter prognostications. In part, those latter verses were literally fulfilled at the return from Babylon, in which many of Israel joined with Judah; and they will be fulfilled in their literal fulness hereafter, when Israel is restored (Rom. xi. 26).

It is good to lay emphasis on the words, "In the place, . . . there." How often God takes us back into the very circumstances, in which we seemed at one time to have failed most conspicuously, and there gives us the crowning blessing of our life. "When a man's ways please the Lord, He makes even his enemies to be at peace with him." Leave God to vindicate you. He will bring you from the land of the enemy, and extort this confession.

WEDNESDAY, March 6. Hosea ii.

Following the sad story of the previous chapter, we find that, after spending two or three years in the prophet's house, his wife deserted him and her children, and betook herself again to her old evil ways. In spite of all his kindness and earnest solicitations, she went from him, as though bent on never more returning. He therefore sent the children after her, with their lisping tongues, Ruhamah and her two brothers, saying, "Plead with your mother; plead." Ah, how often have we similiarly wandered from our God, after other lovers (7). How deaf the ear we have turned to the Divine entreaties.

God is therefore obliged to take severer methods. He hedges up the way with thorns, that we may not find our paths. He deprives us of one thing after another in which we have taken proud delight, until, stripped and suffering, we sadly confess, It was better formerly with me than now. Are you saying this? Are you deeply convinced that your backslidings have been a mistake as well as a crime? Are you eager to get back to the old blessed position? Then, be of good cheer, for the discipline of your life has already begun to achieve the Divine purpose, and you shall be soon restored into the presence of your Lord, with songs of everlasting joy.

The valley of Achor was a long wild pass up through the hills. The prophet says that a door of hope would open there, like the Mont Cenis tunnel, which conducts from the precipices and torrents of the northern side of the Alps to the sunny plains of Italy. That door opens hard by to the heap of stones, beneath which Achan lay, who had troubled Israel. You must put away your Achans, if you would see doors of hope swing open before you.

THURSDAY, March 7. Hosea iii.

The prophet is bidden to make one further advance to his truant wife. She had left him to become the paramour and slave of another, but the old love burnt still in the heart of her first husband. She is described here as "a woman," because she might seem to have forfeited the right to be called his wife; and he is described as "her friend," because of the estrangement between them. So God still loves his people, whom He foreknew, though they have so far and so often strayed from Him; and He longs after the wanderer, who once lived happily in his embrace, but has gone into foreign and forbidden alliances. "Who look to other gods, and go after flagons of wine."

The sinning wife was bought at half a female slave's price (Ex. xxi. 32); but was not restored to the old position at once. The husband stipulated that she should abide for him for many days. If, as those days passed, she showed herself penitent and tender, she would come back to her full rights, but not all at once. So through these centuries Israel has been waiting. The chosen people have been weaned from the idolatries which were once their curse, and are reserved for God. But they are not as they will be. In the meanwhile God is "for them." What significance there is, my friend, for thee and me, in those wonderful words, "I will be for thee." God is for us—who can be against us?

All Israel shall yet be saved. They shall seek the Lord their God, and that King of David's line, who sits in David's place, and whom he recognized as Lord and Son. Then will they fear the Lord, and recognize the tender spell and potency of his goodness. Ah, there is nothing that will touch them like looking on Him whom they had pierced, but who repaid their hatred with forgiveness.

FRIDAY, March 8. Hosea iv.

Abandoning the parabolic style, the prophet now turns to very straight and incisive dealing with the sins of Israel. This chapter contains a terrible indictment against the chosen people. There was no truth, mercy, nor knowledge of God among them; swearing, breaking faith, theft, murder, and adultery were rife on every side, so that the very land groaned and travailed in pain (3). Nothing could avert the judgment of God, that must follow on such crimes (5).

The priests were chiefly guilty, and it is against them that the Divine judgments would be specially directed (6, &c.). How terrible it is when those who should be the leaders in righteousness, both by word and deed, pervert the people! Dante places false priests in the nethermost circle of the lake of fire. And let it always be remembered, that one of Satan's most subtle temptations is the suggestion that we must be right, because all men think so, and that we have dealt with our own sins, because we are so strict in reproving them.

What a picture of our own heart is given in these verses. We are reminded of Bunyan's words in Grace Abounding. He says: "My original and inward pollution was my plague and my affliction. It was always putting itself forth within me, and I had the guilt of it to amazement, by reason of which I was more loathsome in my own eyes than a toad, and I thought I was in God's eyes also. Sin and corruption would bubble up out of my heart as naturally as water bubbles up out of a fountain. I thought now that every one had a better heart than I had. I could have changed heart with anybody; and thought none but the devil himself could equalize me for inward wickedness and pollution of mind."

SATURDAY, March 9. Hosea v.

Mizpah and Tabor were two of the highest spots in the country, and are taken as representing the high-places, where the votaries of idolatry had reared their altars. The apostasy of the chosen people was associated with terrible licentiousness, and is described altogether under images of infidelity and impurity. O heart of mine, hast thou not also been faithless to thy first Husband, wandering from Him to vanities which have made thee vain?

When the heart is faithless, the outward observance of religion is nought to God. Though we go with flocks and herds to seek the Lord, it is of no avail. "He hath withdrawn Himself." A month (a brief enough space) will devour our pride, and lay us low in the dust (7). The enemy is already on the march, and will desolate our land (8). It is useless to get help from this world, so long as we are wrong with God, neither the Assyrian nor King Jareb can help us (13). There is nothing for us but the confession of sin, the refusal of our own righteousness, and a simple reliance on the righteousness which is of God by faith.

"How sweet," wrote the dying Brainerd, "it is to love God, and to have a heart all for God. Yes, but a voice answered me, 'You are not all for God, you are not an angel.' To which my whole soul replied, 'I as sincerely desire to love and glorify God as any angel in heaven.' 'But you are filthy and not fit for heaven.' When, hereupon, there instantly appeared above me and spread over me the blessed robes of Christ's righteousness, which I could not but exult and triumph in."

THE LATE

Mr. Donald Matheson.

A LONG and useful career was brought to a close on Tuesday of last week, February 19, through the death of Mr. Donald Matheson. The family to which he belonged has been long and honourably known in Christian and business circles throughout the country; and it is striking that the death of Mr. Thomas Matheson, of Liverpool, should be followed after an interval of only five weeks by that of his brother Donald. It will be remembered, too, that a third brother, Mr. Hugh M. Matheson, was called to his rest about two years ago.

Mr. Matheson was the eldest son of Duncan Matheson, sheriff substitute of Edinburgh; his mother was a Farquharson. His uncle, afterwards Sir James Matheson, being a prosperous merchant in China, offered him a position in his house, and after some training in Manchester and London, he joined his uncle, of the firm of Jardine, Matheson & Co., in China. In due time he became a partner, but soon afterwards having to defend the opium trade against some who objected to it, he found that the trade was indefensible, and after some delay and much correspondence with his uncle, who had left China, he decided to abandon the lucrative trade. This was done on Christian principles. The holy influences of his home may have failed to some extent, but the ministry of Rev. William C. Burns which he attended brought him, by God's grace, to full decision for Christ, and he counted all things but loss for Him.

Returning to Edinburgh, Mr. Matheson was married in 1849 to Jane, daughter of Lieutenant Horace Petley, R.N., who, after sharing with him the joys and sorrows of life, and being his hearty coadjutor in every good work for over half a century, now mourns his loss. Attaching himself to Free St. George's Church, where Dr. Robert S. Candlish was then preaching, he served for some years as an elder of the congregation, and was an active helper in the home mission work carried on by the congregation in the Fountainbridge district of the city. From his return to this country he also manifested a deep interest in foreign missions, more especially in China, and personal acquaintance with the field of operations gave to his counsels an exceptional value.

After about nine years Mr. Matheson, for reasons of health, turned his face southward. For a time he lived near Dorking, in Surrey; and there his zeal for his Master found outlet among the poor around him, and among a company of navvies while they worked in the neighbourhood. A large room in his own house was set aside for regular meetings among these men, whose spiritual interests were otherwise neglected.

The year 1870 saw Mr. Matheson and his family settled in London, where he resided till the time of his death. His strong Presbyterian sympathies at once brought him into active association with the aggressive work of that denomination. At first as a representative of the Regent Square congregation, and afterwards of others in the Kensington and Belgrave districts, his name ever carried great weight in the Presbytery of London. For many years he was the honorary secretary of the Mission in India, as well as closely identified with the general work of the Foreign Mission Committee.

Mr. Matheson's sympathies could not be confined within any narrow or denominational limits. For twenty-five years he attended the ministry of Preb. H. W. Webb-Peploe, to whom he was warmly attached. His true catholicity of spirit found fitting expression as vice-president, treasurer, and chairman of the working council of the Evangelical Alliance; and the discharge of his duties in these offices brought him into intimate relation with Christians of every name in all parts of the world. The value of his services in the cause of Christian unity is known only to those who laboured by his side. The cause of European evangelization also claimed a large share of his attention, and he contributed generously by pen and substance to efforts for the carrying of the Gospel in its simplicity to the peoples living in darkened Roman Catholic lands, or in materialistic surroundings.

Mr. Matheson's zeal in the cause of the anti-opium crusade seemed to grow with growing years. He was one of the British witnesses summoned by the Royal Commission on the subject which sat at Westminster some years ago, and testified frankly to the evil nature and results of the traffic carried on under the control of the Indian Government.

In addition to the widow to whom we have already referred, Mr. Matheson has left two sons. The estates of Achany and the Lews pass to his elder son, Major Duncan Matheson, formerly of the Inniskilling Dragoons; Rev. Donald Matheson, M.A., Presbyterian minister at Putney, is his second son. A younger son died some years ago.

God Bless Our King!

Born 1841.

Thanksgiving for recovery from dangerous illness, 1872. Ascended the Throne January 22, 1901.

BY REV. J. MOUNTAIN.

"God bless our King!" Thus make we supplication,
Whose loyal hearts long prayed, "God save the Queen!"
Now, 'mid the strains of heavenly exultation,
There, on his throne, she now the King of kings hath seen.

King-Emperor! Hail! How vast thine obligations!
Well may'st thou tremble 'neath a charge so great!
World-wide thy sway—thou lord of many nations!
God's own appointed king to guard his chosen State.

Long years ago, thy faithful people, weeping,
Knelt with thy Consort round thy couch of pain;
Bowed low with grief, our patient vigil keeping,
There, from the gates of death, love prayed thee back again.

Spared by our God, to lofty service calling,
Wisdom be thine, and noble tenderness!
Cheering the poor, the helpless, and the falling,
Guide thou our Empire's steps in paths of righteousness.

Fierce is the glare upon thy sceptre beating;
Trust thou in God! His arm shall be thy stay:
King in our hearts! We give thee loyal greeting;
There we enthrone thee in thy gracious, regal sway.

God, in his grace, his blessing on thee sending,
Stablish thy throne—on freedom's base, serene!
Grant thee long reign, sweet peace with plenty blending—
Royal Successor of Victoria—Empress-Queen!

Hark! from afar come solemn voices stealing!
Thy loved ones pray on heav'n's supernal shore:—
"Our Edward bless! His heart Thy Spirit sealing, Till Christ, our Lord and King, unite us evermore!"

AMEN.

This poem, together with "Sleep, Noble Queen!" and "Hail! Queen Alexandra!" has been printed on a neat folded sheet (2s. per 100). Editions with music have also been printed—"Sleep, Noble Queen!" at 2d., and the other two pieces together at 4d., the music being by Mr. Mountain, and the harmonies revised by W. W. Starmer, A.R.A.M.

The Indian Famine.

REFERRING to the statement that Parliament refused to vote money towards the alleviation of famine distress, an esteemed correspondent points out that the facts are somewhat different; there were many members desirous that Parliament should vote relief, but the Secretary for India declined to ask that this should be done.

In a recent letter Rev. Dr. HUNTLEY, of Ahmedabad, writes from Bundi: "Almost all of the last amount sent through the generosity of your readers was used to

of the very poor, and the rest to help back weak survivors into health. The common food grains are now abundant, and the local rates cheaper than usual, owing to the dearth of people to eat the grain. I shudder to write that in several districts over fifty per cent. of tha population has disappeared, and the villages are in ruins."

Rev. DENNIS OSBORNE writes from Poona, under date January 25:—"The rapid subsidence of English interest in the Famine and its results has come as a shock, for it needed no prophet to foresee the heavy obligations which Famine relief would leave in its train, even supposing that all acute suffering were past, which is not so, the Viceroy being witness. His Excellency informed me that acute distress, likely to last, was now prevailing to the south of Poona, large numbers being still on Government relief. In addition to this the

of both sexes, taken up by missionaries and other workers, demand support and Christian training. This tremendous need is upon us now." In a later communication, Mr. Osborne gives a list of forty-four Missions among which the cloth stuffs dispatched through the generosity of readers of THE CHRISTIAN have been distributed. "I have been notified," Mr. Osborne adds, "of the arrival of ninety-seven cases of milk, which will be invaluable for babies, invalids, and orphanage work."

Rev. P. B. KESKAR, writing from Sholapur, says:—"Grain is somewhat cheaper, but we still have to pay two shillings for what would normally cost but one. It should be borne in mind, too, that the mass of the people lost almost everything during the past two famines, and work is scarce, while most of the relief works are stopped. The people's sufferings will continue throughout this year, and those missions which are unconnected with home organization will especially feel the burden heavy. I have at present 230 children in the orphanages, forty women who are either widows or friendless, and twenty-nine inmates in the Lepers' Home."

Mrs. EVA CLARKE, of the Girls' Industrial Home, Chunar, writes: "I sincerely thank your readers for the help sent, which is most acceptable, especially as the improved agricultural prospects have diminished interest in the famine. We are most thankful for the removal of acute suffering among the people (although these conditions still exist in some parts of India), but Christian people are apt to forget that the maintenance of our orphanages and the support of our rescued waifs press more heavily on us now than ever before."

Jewish Children in St. Petersburg.—A lady who recently visited St. Petersburg sends an interesting account of an asylum for Jewish children of the lowest class, which has been carried on there for thirty-eight years by members of the Lutheran Church. The accommodation (for fourteen children) is always fully occupied, and the two resident superintendents, one of whom was herself brought up in the institution, receive voluntary help from a number of ladies in the educational work. The young people are kept till old enough to be self-supporting, and many interesting accounts are given of their creditable career in after life. The greater proportion of those who have gone out have of their own choice embraced Christianity; but no compulsion is used, and in some cases the Jewish faith has been retained. Those in charge are anxious to buy a little house, but in the meantime the whole income is required for current expenses. The correspondent for the work is Madame de Doepp, 72, Zagorotnaya, St. Petersburg.

The Chinese Massacres.

THE LIFE STORY OF REV. ARTHUR SOWERBY.

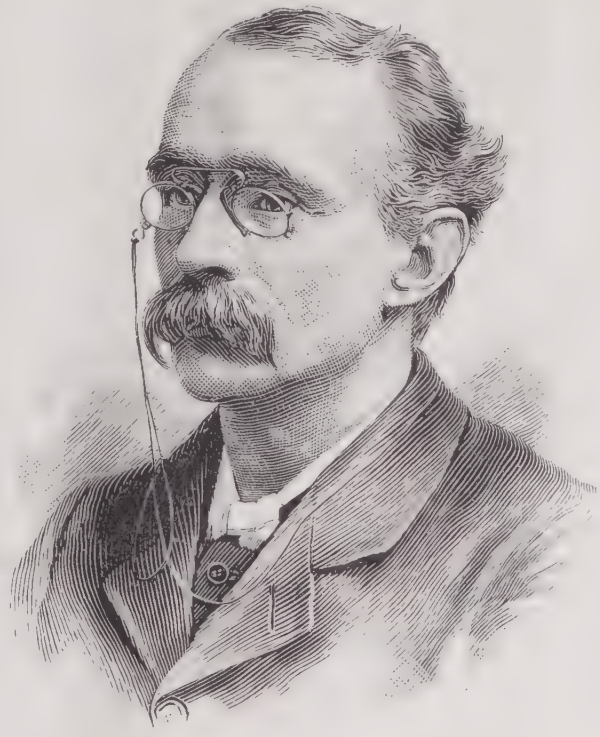
NOT a little interest naturally gathers around the personality of the sole survivor of a terrible missionary massacre. The escape of Rev. Arthur Sowerby, who with Mrs. Sowerby alone is left of the entire staff of the Baptist Missionary Society labouring in Shansi, North China, is due to the simple circumstance of furlough in this country. Had he been at his station, he would doubtless have been numbered with the slain. At the memorial meeting held recently in Bloomsbury Chapel, he indeed stood forth as a pathetic figure, and we were not surprised to hear him say that the events of the awful tragedy had been with him as a perpetual nightmare; and that when he contemplated his martyred colleagues in the triumph and bliss to which they had attained, he could not help but wish, like Bunyan, that he himself was amongst them.

But whatever interest may be excited in Mr. Sowerby of an incidental character, for his own sake, and his work's sake, he deserves to have a large place in the sincere regard and esteem of the friends of Christian Missions. Little space need be occupied with particulars of his early life. Arthur Sowerby was brought up in the Church of England, but with other members of his family associated himself with the Baptists while yet a young man. In course of time he experienced an irresistible call to the ministry, and applied for admission to Regent's Park College. While in that institution, he was brought under the formative and inspiring influence of the preaching of the late Dr. Landels. It was during this period that the claims of the heathen began to press upon his conscience and heart; and, convinced that God had called him to work on the foreign field, he offered his services to the Baptist Missionary Society for China, still further qualifying himself by a course of training in the London University Hospital. Just previous to his departure, a solemn and hallowed valedictory service was held in the chapel at Regent's Park, Dr. Landels affectingly addressing the young missionary. On August 17, 1881, he set sail, in company with his sister (the latter going forth in connection with the Baptist Zenana Society) and Rev. J. S. Whitewright, who has since rendered such distinguished service at the Gotch-Robinson Institution in Tsing Chu Fu. On his arrival at Chefoo, he at once set about the acquisition of the language. From what he saw at that treaty port, and heard from those who welcomed him, notwithstanding the arduous nature of the life upon which he had entered, he was full of hope. He wrote in his first letter:—

> There are evidently immense difficulties in working in China, but there are signs already of coming blessing, and the daylight of Christianity must soon break over the land. There is, however, much need that the Lord's messengers be filled with faith and the Holy Ghost. I trust that the churches at home will not forget us in our exile for Christ, but bring down by prayer a great blessing on us and on China.

At this period the work in Shansi was in its very early pioneer stage. Four years previously Rev. Timothy Richard, labouring in an adjoining province, had eagerly responded to the cry of the famine-stricken. Prejudices against foreigners were to some extent removed by a self-sacrificing ministry of mercy, and so a way was opened up for the teaching of the new doctrine. Missionary operations in a steady organized manner were eventually started at the now notorious city of Tai Yuen Fu. A few surrounding villages were also visited by Mr. Richard, and, as the result, school and preaching work were well begun, when Mr. Sowerby took up his abode in the Shansi capital. At the end of his first year's mission life, he could truly say that he rejoiced more than ever that Christ had called him to follow in his steps; his one prayer was that he might continue faithful in the service of his Lord unto the end, and be made instrumental in bringing many of the Chinese to Christ. But his heart was often ready to sink within him as he pored over the map of Shansi, and thought of the teeming millions with so very few to make known to them the way of life. He pleaded with the secretary of the society in the homeland:—

> Can you not send another brother, who in a year or two might be ready to go north with me, and take up a fresh position in the front? We do indeed most pressingly need more help, but till it comes, God help us to battle on alone in his strength as bravely as we can.



REV. A. SOWERBY.

From Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons, 17, Baker Street, London, W.

It is interesting, in view of recent occurrences, to refer to the spirit with which Mr. Sowerby regarded the crisis which arose early in 1884, owing to the rupture between China and France. In the event of hostilities, he felt there was less reason to fear at Tai Yuen Fu than in places nearer the coast. But if difficulty did arise, and an outbreak occur,

> We must stand the storm as best we may, for there would be small chance of escape. We earnestly desire to be filled with faith and courage, that we may do our duty whatever happens. We not only have to consider ourselves, but the infant church under our care; it will not do to care for our own safety, and leave the fold exposed to the wolves. Our trust is in God; the Lord of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge.

Such at that time was the spirit of this devoted missionary, which from that day to this has never faltered; and had he been in China instead of in England in July last, he would not have been found wanting in fidelity to his Lord.

It is well known that for many years the province of Shansi presented the hardest soil for the sowing of the seed of the Kingdom. For one thing, the opium curse has taken a greater hold of its people than upon those in any other part. It is true, most encouragingly true, that lately, in the last few years preceding the massacres, the Gospel has marvellously spread, necessarily making the tragedies all the more trying to bear. But in the earlier days God did not leave Himself without a witness. At the very time of the rupture with France, Mr. Sowerby tells of the joy he felt in baptizing nine men.

> This has greatly cheered us, and so long as we can bring the Gospel of eternal life to these men, we do not fear, for God is making manifest his presence and power. Among those baptized, three were elderly men, and two others well advanced in years. In China, so much weight is attached to age that this is important, for, if we win the fathers of the villages, the younger men will more readily follow.

In the summer of 1890, Mr. Sowerby visited the home-country for a well-deserved furlough, returning to Shansi at the close of the following year. It was then arranged that the lamented Rev. G. B. Farthing and himself should make a division in their labours, the former superintending the work at Chiao Cheng and Ping Tou, while he would take Shih Tieh and Hsiao Tien Tzu under his care, both helping as circumstances permitted in Tai Yuen itself.

It is customary for the Chinese missionaries to pay periodic visits to the various villages where converts may have been gathered into little Christian communities. Mr. Sowerby has devoted no little of his energies to such episcopal visitation. Deeply interesting are the accounts which from time to time were received, setting forth the simplicity and fervour of the faith of those who had been brought to the Saviour. Take, for an example, the following description:—

> Yueh K'ou is situated in a lovely amphitheatre at the base of the hills. Arrived here, we were welcomed by one of the cooks at a restaurant. The man, like many others in the place, had been saved from opium smoking. It was dark when we arrived, and we soon found ourselves in the inner room of the cobbler's shop, "where prayer is wont to be made." Here we squatted ourselves on the k'ang (brick bed), with a tallow candle on a small table in front of us.
> Five or six Chinese crowded on to the k'ang beside us, and the rest of the room was packed closely. When I say packed, I do not mean they were sitting closely on forms, but every inch of standing ground was occupied, while some were sitting or standing on cupboards, tables, or anywhere where they could find a place. We sang and prayed, and talked for nearly two hours, with the perspiration pouring down our faces, and half-choked with the powerful atmosphere of the crowded room; but it was a treat to hear them sing with all their might, "I have found a Friend in Jesus."
> About nine o'clock we returned to the cookshop, where we were regaled with supper, and then we went to the place where we were to sleep. The next morning we were aroused between six and seven by the Chinese who had come to see us dress. Then followed breakfast, and then a number of sick folk had to be visited in their homes. After this, worship in the cobbler's shop, crowded as before, and then we were able to depart. We were not allowed to pay anything for food or lodging.

In this simple sketch we have an indication of the kind of labour in which Mr. Sowerby and his martyred colleagues have been so happily and so usefully engaged. No wonder that, in due course, the Word of the Lord should prevail. In former years there was much seed-sowing, but, as we have already intimated, with little reaping; but of late the harvest has been more abundant.

The cruel massacre of so many servants of God—well equipped with language acquired, experience gained, the confidence of the people won—is an unutterably serious and sad interruption; but amongst the bravest and the most optimistic as to the eventual outcome is the subject of these biographical remarks. Upon Mr. Sowerby's work, in teaching the native evangelists the way of the Lord more perfectly, or in helping to organize the annual native Christian Conference, or in opium rescue effort, our space does not permit us to enlarge. But amongst his varied accomplishments to which we think he might lay a respectable claim are those of a poet, which claim the following lines from "A Missionary's Prayer" will help to establish:

Make me to share thy patient love, O Lord,
That yearns to save the scattered sheep, abroad
Unshepherded, far wandering in the night
Midst perils dire, in helpless, hopeless plight.
Oh! for the love to follow on their track,
And to the Shepherd's arms to bring them back.

So few the labourers, Lord, the work so vast,
So great the issues, and so sad at last
The loss of souls. E'en though I bless thy grace
For those redeemed, yet Satan holds his place
In cruel power, o'er multitudes enthralled—
My heart sinks down, before his strength appalled.

Uphold thy servant, gracious Lord, do Thou
Draw nigh; and until victory my brow
Shall crown, sustain my strength; yes, hear my prayer,
Thrust others forth the strife and toil to share;
Not for my sake, Thou hast not left me lone,
But that "thy Kingdom come, thy will be done."

The Gospel in Brazil.

WRITING from Sao Paulo, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald J. Young give some encouraging particulars of the varied and extensive missionary work with which they are associated:—

"Although it was difficult to get access to homes at first, God has been pleased to give us favour with the people, and we have now many cordial friends and interested listeners. As we go from house to house, we are received with expressions of welcome, and thus we are enabled to talk freely to them about the one great subject. Sometimes we sit with a shoemaker, and we read and chat about Christ; or we find ourselves in a tailor's shop, or dressmaker's, or baker's, for so far we have come in touch mainly with busy working people. The interest awakened deepens daily, and the attendance at our meetings has steadily increased. About 22 per cent. of the families visited by the brethren have bought the Bible or some portion of it. There is an immediate and urgent need of good tracts. Brother Shiflersmith has already written and translated some good ones, which we desire to have printed here." Mr. Young's address is Rua da Liberdade, No. 62, Sao Paulo, Brazil.

Barcelona Protestant Hospital.

THIS institution comes of age this year, and we look back with gratitude how the Lord has led us step by step from a small room at 4s. a month to the present commodious house in one of the healthiest parts of the outskirts of Barcelona. He has wonderfully blessed our efforts for the spiritual and bodily welfare of the patients entrusted to our care, of whom we have had sixty-six during the year. There were eight deaths, but those cases which seem to spell failure, so far as physical science is concerned, often represent the most satisfactory spiritual results. Eternity alone will show this aspect of the work. As the work increases so also do the expenses; although there has been a decrease in the gifts from England, God has made up the deficiency by special donations from other countries. I must plead most earnestly for increased help for this work of the Lord; also for special gifts for the building of the boundary wall which the Local Board compels us to erect. I would also remind our kind friends of the Home for the Aged, which is so much needed. I shall be glad to give further information and send copies of the report. Anna von Mielecka.

Boys in Venice.

DURING the twenty years which have passed since the Industrial Home for Boys was founded in Venice, many lads have been saved from dire poverty, as well as sin, and trained for useful and honourable careers. At present there are thirty-eight lads in the Home, and the discipline of the large family affords every ground for satisfaction. In the course of last year, several cases of distress presented themselves. The lack of funds often prevented assistance being given where help was much needed. The Church of Rome took advantage of the occasion and provided for several who could not be helped.

The superintendent writes, in the annual report, of the case of a poor widow "who came to us in dreadful distress, not knowing where to turn for help. Six months previously she had lost her husband, who was a sergeant in the Army, but who had not served long enough for her to get a pension. She tried to get work for her two boys, but did not find anything for them. Sickness came, and little by little she parted with her home. One of her children was taken by the priest of her parish, and placed in a Roman Catholic orphanage, but here she was with the other. 'If you do not take him I am going to drown myself with him to-night,' were her words, and we could see that she was in earnest. The story was found to be true, and we took the child—a bright little lad about seven years old. We are truly thankful to perceive that God's Spirit is working among us. Two more of our lads have made a public confession of their faith."

The Home being an industrial one, orders for furniture, carved wood work, and printing are gratefully received. Communications may be addressed to the superintendent, Mrs. Kool Antonini, 923, Cannaregio, Venice; or Mrs. M. Hammond, 14, Compton Road, Winchester.

Dynevor Indian Hospital.

DURING the early days of this institution, which is situated near West Selkirk, Manitoba, doubts were expressed at home and abroad as to the necessity for such an institution, and the possibility of maintaining a work on the lines suggested. Experience has proved these fears to be groundless, while the successful treatment of many difficult and dangerous cases has demonstrated its necessity and utility. The Indian is apt to be down-hearted when attacked by disease, and is often found to shrink from strangers. To a great extent his recovery from illness depends upon his surroundings, and thus the Hospital is appreciated by the poor Indian more than can be expressed.

The demands made upon the Hospital are increasing as time goes on. Last year 102 patients were treated in the institution, while over eight hundred out-patients were dealt with in three months. Miss Lockhart continues as nurse in charge, and she reports that the sixteen operations performed have proved successful. Over 15,000 prescriptions have been dispensed, and a large number of visits to patients made.

One of the patients, formerly a Protestant, had joined the Roman Catholic Church when married. She visited the Hospital as an out-patient, but, finding an operation necessary, she applied for admission, and was successfully treated. While prayers were being offered, it was noticed she was much affected, and presently broke down completely, and out of her distress she became a converted woman, and rejoined the Protestant Church. Since being discharged, she has evidenced the reality of her profession by taking her Bible, reading and praying with sick Indians, and in this way has been the means of confirming many in their faith. Thus it will be seen how the benefits of the Dynevor Hospital reach both soul and body, while its spiritual and moral effects on mission work are beyond dispute.

The hon. secretary and treasurer of the Hospital is Mr. W. Redford Mulock, K.C., Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Relief of Persecuted Jews.

THE work of the Society for the Relief of Persecuted Jews has been carried on at Jerusalem during the past year with much success. At Abraham's Vineyard, within a mile north-west of the city gate, employment is given to seventy Jews. For the last four years, Mr. W. H. Dunn has superintended the various branches of work on which the Jews are employed. These comprise cultivation of the soil, manufacture of soap, &c., carpentry, and construction of rock-hewn cisterns. Stone quarrying and dressing, and building are also carried on. The rock cisterns are of immense value, being used for the storage of water, which, during the long, dry, summer season, is given to Jews who have no other supply, and are too impoverished to buy for themselves. Hunereds of the poor, with their children, receive the "cup of cold water" through the liberality of friends in England.

The feeble and sick, who cannot work, receive relief in the form of food and clothing. The distribution is carefully made by a lady who visits among them. But while by these means many are enabled to live who must otherwise starve, there is still an immense body of Jews at Jerusalem who are unable to get work, and who suffer from want and consequent sickness, in miserable dwellings, or live in underground places, where neither light nor air can be obtained. There is ample room on Abraham's Vineyard for more workshops, into which starving applicants, who are daily turned away, could be received if funds were available.

It is the aim of the Society to not only give relief and find employment for the Jews in the Holy Land, but to enable them to form themselves into colonies on their own responsibility.

The secretary is Mrs. E. A. Finn, 41, Parliament Street, London, S.W., from whom the soap made in the Colonies may be obtained.

Among the Pariahs.

IN four villages, situated in the suburbs of Madras, a very promising evangelistic work is carried on among the Pariahs by the Methodist Episcopal Mission. Rev. K. R. Gopalah Aiyar, writes: "During my five years' labour among these people, with the assistance of two catechists, many have been brought to the feet of our Saviour. We hold four Sunday schools, in which nearly 200 heathen children pray and sing Christian lyrics. We have one day and two night schools, where the young men of the Pariah community receive both secular and religious education. Our work is most promising." Copies of the Scriptures, tracts, and other help will be gratefully appreciated by Rev. K. R. Gopalah Aiyar, Methodist Episcopal Mission, Kodambakam, Madras, South India.

And God Divided.

(Gen. i. 4).

"Let there be light!" The voice that woke creation
Went echoing thro' the darkness void and drear;
And light appeared, sweet emblem of salvation,
Designed of God all things to bless and cheer.

Then from the darkness God the light divided,
And seeing it was good, He called it day;
Thus in his might and wisdom He provided
An object lesson from his perfect way.

Our Saviour is "the Light," the Lord's Anointed,
Who came the night of sin to put away;
And in the order God at first appointed,
He calls his own the children of the day.

He came the conflict once for all deciding,
Destroying works of darkness, death, and hell;
That we in Him, through living faith abiding,
Might overcome where formerly we fell.

When we shall dwell with saints in light together,
And worship Him, the Lamb, amid the throne;
A gulf is fixed, to separate for ever,
The lost in darkness, from his ransomed own.

What, therefore, God hath joined let no man sunder
What He divides, let no one dare unite;
Lest we the rod of chastisement come under,
For calling evil good, and darkness light.

The Simultaneous Mission.

Provincial Meetings.

As in London, so in the provinces, the effects of the Mission have been seen chiefly in a spiritual stirring among church members and those who usually attend a place of worship. Particularly has this been the case with the young people, very many of whom, who were already possessed by a sense of need, were brought to the point of decision.

FRUITFUL MEETINGS AT LEEDS.

Rev. F. B. Meyer writes :—"We have great reason to be thankful for the showers of blessing we have had. I have had five meetings with business men at noon, which have crowded the Philosophical Hall to its utmost capacity, and the great Wesleyan Chapel, "Brunswick," has been crowded day after day for the mission services. Large numbers have come boldly out for Christ, especially of young men. The city has been divided into twenty-seven centres, and from all we have most encouraging reports. Mr. Leonard Weaver has had some capital dinner-hour meetings; and he and Mr. Klein addressed a vast audience from the Town Hall steps on Saturday afternoon. The ministers of the town and the missioners have had two conferences, and there is every prospect of a lasting result."

REV. JOHN McNEILL AT CARDIFF.

The meetings conducted by Rev. John McNeill at the Exchange, Cardiff, were largely attended by business men, while several publicans closed their establishments between three and five p.m. to enable their assistants to attend. Large gatherings also assembled at Park Hall. On Thursday afternoon the building was crowded, and there was a preponderance of young people, who had taken advantage of the assistants' weekly half-holiday. The missioner delivered a powerful discourse, based upon Rev. iii. 20, "Behold I stand at the door and knock."

MR. HENRY THORNE AT WINCHESTER.

A glorious work is reported from this old city. The St. John's Rooms were crowded every night, and there were very large gatherings at the Guildhall on Sunday. At the close of one of the children's services there were 101 inquirers. The workers were kept busy every evening among the anxious, and a number of those spoken to professed to find peace. On the Wednesday night, a man who said he had started out intending to commit suicide, was among the seekers. A band of workers was organized to visit public-houses, and to interest various sections of the community.

MANCHESTER MEETINGS CROWDED.

At Manchester, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was the missioner for the central meetings. He conducted two services in the Free Trade Hall, and was then taken ill. At short notice, Dr. Albert Goodrich took his place on the Monday evening, and deeply impressed an enormous audience with a fervent address. Dr. Alexander Maclaren took an active interest in the mission, and undertook several of the meetings arranged for Mr. Price Hughes. The services, which were held at many centres throughout Manchester, were attended by but few outsiders; but in Hulme the workers of a group of mission halls held a meeting late on Saturday night, when the public-houses were closing. It proved an effective gathering, and several people received blessing. On Sunday last, Rev. J. H. Jowett preached in the Free Trade Hall. The place was crowded, and the workers were busily occupied with the anxious.

AWAKENING AT STEWKLEY.

The meetings at Stewkley, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Alexander, were full of spiritual fervour. Every meeting was attended by tokens of Divine blessing. Some eighty men and women sought the Saviour. Among them were some who had not entered a place of worship for many years. Some were unable to sleep on account of conviction of sin. Many who left the chapel at the close of the first service felt compelled to return to the after-meeting to pray.

BIRMINGHAM ENTHUSIASM.

There are some 150 Free Churches in and about the city, and of these eighty-five pledged themselves to co-operation. Three hundred members formed a choir. There were over 200 inquiry-room workers, under the general superintendence of Rev. Edward Greeves. A hundred and fifty thousand "seed-sower" cards given by Mr. Cadbury, 150,000 invitation leaflets, and 65,000 Sunday school invitation cards have been distributed throughout the city. The welcome meeting held in Steelhouse Lane Church was crowded some time before the hour for commencement. Rev. Enoch Salt (president of the Birmingham Free Church Council) presided, and was supported by the Lord Mayor of Birmingham and a large number of ministers. Gipsy Smith addressed the meeting. On the Sunday, at three o'clock, the Town Hall was packed to hear Gipsy Smith. In the evening he preached at the Islington Wesleyan Church. Dr. Clifford has given noonday addresses to some 1,500 hearers. The meetings in Carr's Lane Chapel and the Town Hall at 12.30 and 7.30 attracted very large audiences. Continuing missions have been arranged by about a hundred churches.

REV. G. CAMPBELL-MORGAN AT PORTSMOUTH.

The campaign at Portsmouth began with an address to Christian workers. On the Sunday afternoon Rev. G. Campbell Morgan conducted the first public service in the Town Hall, addressing some two thousand men on the great evils of gambling, drunkenness, and impurity, taking as the basis for his address the words, "Be subject therefore unto God; but resist the devil, and he will flee from you." The public interest awakened is revealed by the fact that at Mr. Morgan's evening service at eight o'clock, not only was every seat in the vast building occupied, but every aisle was crowded, and hundreds were unable to gain admission. In the afternoons Bible-readings were given, and a series of Conferences was held on Christian life and work. At the evening meetings in the Town Hall many were impressed.

LIVERPOOL AROUSED.

The meetings at Liverpool, held at about thirty centres, have aroused widespread interest. At Great George Street Church, Rev. F. J. Feltham on Sunday afternoon addressed 1,500 men with power and effect. At night, when some 700 were present, many sought the aid of the inquiry room workers, and on each occasion since there have been those who have signified their desire for spiritual help. At Fairfield, Rev. A. Connell was missioner. In a letter written before the Mission, he said: "I come with the old persuasions of God's patience and mercy, and the old reassurances of the yearning and power of Jesus Christ to redeem human life. It may be that a new voice speaking the old truths may help you nearer to the things that really matter, and, most of all, nearer to the supreme gift of God." Rev. R. Westrope and Mr. Musa Bhai were at Crescent Church, Everton Brow. On one occasion a number of people were brought in from the streets as they left the public houses at eleven o'clock, and served with supper. This was followed by an Evangelistic meeting, the workers being gratified with the good effect of the enterprise. Another interesting and impressive meeting was held with the railway men at the Huskisson Goods Station. Principal Mitchell, Rev. Dr. Barrett, and many other preachers took part at the various other centres, and many hundreds of inquirers were dealt with.

MEETINGS IN CORNWALL.

Extensive arrangements were made for the Mission in Cornwall. In every town of importance, with the exception of Camborne, united services were held. Redruth is the head of the county Federation, and there Mr. Josiah Nix was the preacher. He began his work by addressing a largely-attended meeting of workers in the Wesley Memorial Hall. On Sunday he conducted three services, besides holding a short meeting for teachers before the afternoon service. At night, Wesley Chapel, large as it is, was packed, and a prolonged service was held. A most encouraging beginning was made; Mr. Nix gave a plain-speaking address, there was a good influence, and, best of all, several inquirers. On Monday afternoon Mr. Nix held a Bible reading at the Bible Christian Chapel; the week-night services being conducted in the spacious Methodist Free Church. In Truro, at St. Mary's Wesleyan Church, Rev. Urijah R. Thomas, ex-chairman of the Congregational Union, was the preacher.

MR. W. R. LANE AT HULL.

Mr. Lane's mission in Hull has been a time of singular interest and marked blessing. Albion Congregational Church was the scene of his labours. From the beginning the audiences were very large, and increased night by night, until on the four closing evenings the building (seating 1,400) was packed to the door. Bands of workers patrolled the streets daily to issue printed invitations, while an open-air meeting held every evening on the steps of the church further attracted attention. The meetings were replete with interest. The united gathering of the young people from the Sunday schools in the district on the afternoon of February 17, was inspiring, and the Sunday evening service made a grand start to the week. Two afternoon meetings were well attended and much appreciated. On Friday evening, Mr. Lane gave his lime-light lecture on the "Pilgrim's Progress," and, for the benefit of the audiences from the other centres, he kindly repeated it on Saturday evening, at the close of a great procession round the city. Sunday afternoon witnessed the magnificent spectacle of 1,200 "men only" gathered to hear Mr. Lane, and his straight, manly long remembered by those privileged to be Christian address will be long remembered.

Sunday evening's service was most impressive, and the after meeting a solemn occasion—it lasted for two hours, during which nearly fifty went into the inquiry room, after publicly confessing their desire to be Christians. The closing meeting on Monday night, when Mr. Lane told us the story of his own conversion, was a fitting "Amen" to a splendid mission. R. C.

OTHER CENTRES.

From Reigate Mr. Monro Collings reports "crowds, overflow meeting, and wonderful blessing."

In a telegram from Great Yarmouth, Mr. Charles Inglis says:—"Buildings crowded; overflow yesterday; hundred have professed."

Rev. D. M. Cameron wrote from Tewkesbury: "God is manifesting his power here. There are many awakened, especially among young people."

Mr. R. S. Bradbrook conducted the services at Alfreton. By the addresses and solos much good was effected. During the week nearly 100 persons, including thirty young people from the Sunday schools, yielded to Christ.

From Lancaster, Mr. G. H. Weekes writes:—"The outsiders have scarcely been touched, and yet the Mission has not been a failure, for many Christians have been stirred, and the Bible readings have been productive of much good."

At Coleford, Glos., the services were conducted in the Town Hall, and the Baptist, Wesleyan, and Congregational Churches, the missioner being Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, Mon. There were very large attendances at the services, and a large number came out as inquirers.

At Rosemount Church, Douglas, Rev. J. Sadler Reece had charge. The daily Bible readings were appreciated, and the evangelistic services, which were full of interest, were made a blessing to many. Adults of both sexes, as well as many young people, were among the inquirers. The Sunday afternoon service for men only was very encouraging; about 700 were present, and the address secured a most attentive hearing.

Rev. Evan Lloyd writes:—"At Ravensthorpe, near Dewsbury, all the Free Churches were united and indefatigable. Prayer meetings were held, and the whole neighbourhood thoroughly visited. On Sunday, February 3, the missioner, Mr. J. H. Fearnsides, of Batley, entered upon his work. God was with him. Over one hundred names were taken."

(Further Reports are held over till next week.)

A City and its Ruler.

THERE was a little city which belonged to a Great King, and was ruled over by a Watchman into whose hands the King had given power to let in or out any one he chose. The city was always crowded. The King gave to the Watchman a book of laws, so that he might know how to rule the city and take care of it.

Now a Prince, who was an enemy of the Great King, wanted to rule in the city, and he went to the Watchman with the object of talking with him. At first the Watchman would not listen; but the Prince went so often that at last the Watchman conversed with him, and after some persuasion allowed the Prince to enter the little city. The King soon found out what had occurred; He saw the city full of enemies, and the Watchman himself being tyrannized over by the hostile Prince. The King spoke to the Watchman, but he did not seem to hear; indeed, he had almost forgotten the sound of the King's voice, having allowed the Prince to have such control over him; having, in fact, become the slave of the Prince.

The King sent many times to the Watchman asking him to turn the Prince out of the little city, and telling him he would forgive him for his disloyalty if he would become obedient to Him again. At the same time, he said, that if the Watchman still persisted in allowing the Prince to remain in the city punishment must take place. The Watchman remaining heedless, the King resolved upon punishment, though with sorrow for the foolish Watchman.

IN LOVE AND PITY

the King's Son offered to bear the punishment instead of the Watchman, and this the King graciously allowed. The life of the Watchman was demanded; the King's Son gave his life so that the Watchman might be free—saved from the punishment, and delivered from the power of the tyrannical Prince.

What had happened was explained to the Watchman, but for a long time he refused to believe it; at length, the King pleaded with him to believe the message of reconciliation, and to become loyal to him. Then, and not till then, could the King enjoy authority in the little city again.

At last the Watchman felt sorry for what he had done; he remembered how the King had loved him, and what a sacrifice the King's son had made for him. When he turned to the book of laws which the King had given him, and saw how many of them he had broken, while he might easily have kept them, and so have pleased the King, he was still more sorry.

Again the King came to the little city, and this time the Watchman was ready for him, and what a difference the King made there! He cleansed it and filled it with sunshine, and turned the usurping Prince and his train out of the city. Moreover, he told the Watchman he would stay with him, and teach him what he wanted him to do. He gave him a beautiful white robe, also armour to wear, and a sword with which to fight the wicked Prince when he came back again. He also promised that, if he remained faithful to him, one day he would take him to a beautiful place where the enemy could no longer trouble him.

How grateful the Watchman was, and how he loved the King in return for this! Henceforth he let no one into the little city but those who were the King's friends, and always tried to choose the things that pleased the King, while looking forward with joy to the reward which the King had promised him.

WHERE IS THE CITY?

The little city herein described is the human heart, which belongs to the Great King—God, who gives each boy and girl power as Watchman to let in whom he or she may choose. He gives us his Word, his book of laws—the Bible—that we may know how to keep our hearts only for Him. Satan is the Prince who is the enemy of the King, and he comes into the heart, spreading bad thoughts, which bring forth hard words and unkind deeds, and make strife in the little city, so that sometimes the King, the rightful owner, is entirely forgotten.

God speaks to the Watchmen asking them to keep the Prince of darkness out, but they do not heed his command; they neglect the duty of keeping Satan out. God must punish sin and disobedience; and so Jesus, his only Son, in compassion for the poor Watchmen, offers to bear the punishment which they must otherwise have had. Jesus bore the curse of sin, and those who believe that, and accept the great King again, are received into the saving favour of God. Then there is happiness in the little city.

When God is admitted, He cleanses the heart, fills it with joy, and directs the watchmen to his Word, where they learn how to serve Him. He says, "A new heart will I give thee;" and again, "If ye love Me, keep My commandments." Jesus, the great King's Son, sends his Spirit, who instructs us how to live, and the King gives armour wherewith we may fight the Prince of darkness whenever he tries to retake possession of the little city.

So, boys and girls, each of you is a Watchman! Keep the little city bravely—for God and against the Prince. Ask the King's Son, Jesus, to help you in the fight, and you are sure to prove victorious.

SUNDAY, MARCH 3.

Religious Barrenness (Luke xiii. 6-9).

HOW eagerly we are being watched and searched. Loving, wistful eyes are fixed on us, though few words are spoken, and no outward sign is given of anxious solicitude. Mother's eyes, sister's eyes, brother's eyes. I know this, because of the letters I receive. Here is one (there is no fear of identification, so I do not hesitate to quote it): "I have a younger brother, eighteen years of age. He is like the average young man, has his share of good qualities, and none particularly bad, but during the past year he has developed an indifference to religious claims, which will, if not checked, eventually make him an outsider." But, besides these dear anxious human watchers, there are heavenly ones. What a unique name that is for the angels which is given in the Book of Daniel! They are there called "holy watchers." And in this parable we have the special announcement that the eye of the Lord Jesus is upon us, lovingly, anxiously, seeking for fruit.

The Lord lays stress on the fact that the fig tree was planted in the vineyard, because the soil there was necessarily of the richest quality. And it was because of the unquestioned excellence of soil and aspect that the expectation of the husbandman was greater, and his disappointment more conspicuous. Our position, if we are children of pious homes, is that of the fig tree in the vineyard. God could not have given us a better start in the world, and encompassed us with more religious advantages, and therefore if we fail to bear fruit, the production of which is the one result on which He has set his heart, it will be no fault of his, but to our own unutterable loss and shame.

The Divine patience is well exemplified in the three years of delay. "Behold these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and find none." No one is cut off for one sin, but only when the sin is the manifestation of the choice and drift of the inner life, over a course of years. The forest tree does not crash to the ground as the result of one storm, but because the insidious borer-worm has been at work, eating out its heart. You have not borne fruit of late, but you are not as yet cast away. Only when it is clear that you are not likely to bear fruit, that fruitlessness is becoming the law and habit of your life, and that you have no wish for it to be otherwise, is the final sentence liable to be spoken.

But even then love pleads against justice. Whoever is represented by the vine-dresser, as distinguished from the owner, it is not for us to say; but clearly it is wrong to put the blessed persons of the Holy Trinity into this apparent collision, as though the Father wanted to cut down, while the Son asked for delay. We must believe that there is an absolute Unity in the Godhead, and that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself. It is better, then, to think of this colloquy as merely the drapery of the parable, or, better still, that the mercy of God pleads against the summary execution of a justly-deserved sentence. Before God removes us from his vineyard, as cumberers of the ground, to make way for those who shall better repay Him for all his pains, He plies us with his rarest and tenderest ministries. "Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it." It was thus that the Master sought to turn Judas from his deed of infamy. He gave him the sop when He had dipped it. This tenderest mark of love and friendship was aimed at the traitor's heart, to turn him from his purpose. But it availed not; and he had to be cut down.

The one test of our religious life is fruit-bearing; and withal our fruit must be ripe, luscious, mellow. The leaves of profession, and blossoms of promise, will not avail. Orthodoxy of creed, and decorousness of behaviour, are not sufficient. "The fruit of the Spirit is Love, Joy, Peace, Long-suffering, Gentleness, Goodness, Faith." Are these apparent in your daily life, and do they refresh those who are in closest touch with you? The only source of fruit-bearing is that disclosed in Hosea xiv. and John xv. "From Me is thy fruit found." "He that abideth in Me, the same bringeth forth much fruit." F. B. M

C.E. NOTES.

Twenty-seven societies were registered in the Union of Great Britain and Ireland last week, including one in connection with the cathedral in Gibraltar.

A cheering message comes from the Congregational Church of Aintab, Turkey. There are two societies—one for each sex—which are a prominent feature of the work. The young men's society numbers 120, and is making a distinct impression. About forty of the young men have recently joined the Church.

The Endeavourers in Guernsey have just celebrated the first anniversary of the local Union. On Sunday an interchange of pulpits took place between churches in which there is a C.E. Society. After the evening service a united consecration meeting, at which the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, was held at the Bible Christian Methodist Chapel. A conference, followed by the annual meeting, was held the following Thursday.

A varied missionary work is carried on by the Bethany Presbyterian Endeavourers of Brooklyn. They give 20dols. toward the support of a missionary in Japan, and 15dols. to help support a missionary in Persia. They give 5dols. each to the Freedmen's Board and Synodical Fund, and 15dols. toward the support of a missionary in the Asheville Farm School. They are raising money for a missionary library, and expect to adopt an Indian famine orphan. It is needless to say that this Society has adopted the system of tithe-giving, and that it has joined the Macedonian Phalanx.

Jesus and Caiaphas (Matt. xxvi. 57-68.)

Golden Text: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God" (Matt. xvi. 16).

Introduction.

JESUS was taken before four different men, Annas, Caiaphas, Pilate, and Herod. Before this we find what the people did.

Laid hold of Bound HIM v. 57
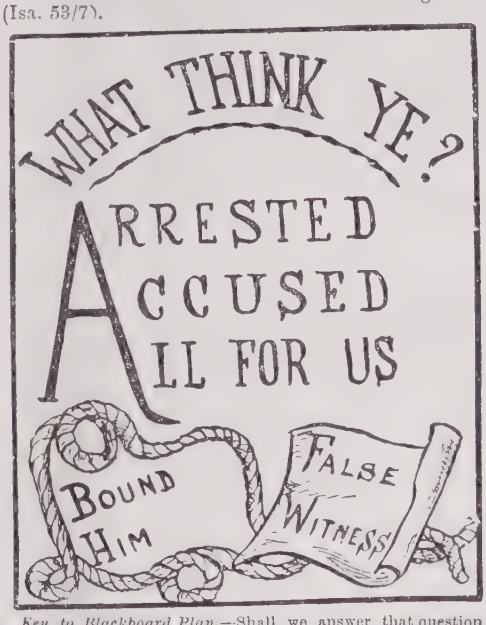
Took John 18/12.
Led John 18/13.
away.

He was indeed "led as a Lamb to the slaughter" (Isa. 53/7).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—Shall we answer that question (66) "What think ye?" What do you think about his being bound? about the false witnesses? about his being arrested, accused, and all for each one of us, that we might be saved? What does it mean to you? Does it bring the tears to your eyes to read of such unjust treatment? or are you so Gospel-hardened, because you know the whole story so well, that you can read it all over again unmoved?

1. The Trial.

The Prisoner is taken before the high priest Caiaphas to be tried (57; John xviii. 13, 14, 24). Everybody seems against Him (57-59); even Peter, one of his own disciples denies Him three times, while He stands before Caiaphas (58, and 69-75). After a long time they manage to get two men to agree on one thing Jesus has said (John 2/19-21), but then it is not worthy of the punishment of death; so Caiaphas asks Him a question, and Jesus answers it with perfect truth (Luke 22/67). "Art Thou the Christ? tell us." He tells them (64) and they immediately accuse Him of blasphemy (65).

2. The Prisoner.

"Laid hold of Him" (57); called Him "This fellow" (61); what a contrast is that name with verse 64. Jesus receives all these insults and others that follow in a calm silence (Is. 5/37). How wonderfully in every detail does He fulfil prophecy; but those around knew it not; they had their Scripture rolls, but they were too dense to perceive that all was coming true in this Holy Man, the Man Christ Jesus (63). After the second question Jesus seems to look beyond all the humiliation and suffering to his second coming (64).

Still they go on insulting Him (67; Is. 50/6). We almost shrink from reading with what utter contempt they treat Him, our King and our Saviour, and yet we see in Phil. 2/6-8, the seven steps down which He went "for our sakes," and our lesson to-day is in those verses.

3. The Verdict.

The Golden Text should be the verdict, but Caiaphas did not think so, he could find nothing to say, so he rent his clothes (63. See also Gen. 37/27-34; 2 Kings 19/1) and passed a sentence in one word "Blasphemy." With this everyone seemed content and they dragged Him away and insulted Him still more (67). For this made-up accusation they professed to find Him "guilty of death" (66). In Mark 14/64, it says "they all condemned Him."

We cannot find words to express what we feel, but let us get before God on our knees and remember we had a share in all this mockery, for our sins mingle with those of the Jews, and let us ask Him to forgive all and accept us for the sake of him who suffered and died (Gal. 2/20; Eph. 1/7, 2/13; 1 John 1/7, 2/2).

The Y.M.C.A.

A CONFERENCE of the North-Midland District Union has been held at Sheffield. The President, Mr. T. Henry Waterhouse, J.P., occupied the chair, and there was a good attendance of delegates. Mr. Robert McCann was welcomed to the travelling secretaryship. Mr. J. Edgar Baker, of Newport, Mon., took part in the proceedings as chairman of the Twentieth Century Committee of the National Council, which has been chiefly responsible for the forward movement. Sheffield was constituted the official headquarters of the district; the executive meetings, for the time, being held at Leeds. A vigorous work is maintained at both centres.

The new buildings of the Grangemouth Association have been formally opened by Sir John Neilson Cuthbertson, of Glasgow. Rev. Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh, gave an address.

The Committee of the Whitehaven Association have decided to purchase new premises in a prominent position. The purchase price is £1,100, while a further £500 will be required for alterations, &c. £950 has already been received, or is promised.

At the annual meeting of the Hammersmith Association, held on February 14, addresses were delivered by Rev. C. Bradshaw Foy and Mr. Frank Howe, of the National Council. An interesting report of work for the year was presented, showing an improved position in respect of membership and finance.

The Central London Association, in pursuance of its policy of seeking, by means of meetings outside its own buildings, to reach the masses of young men untouched by existing agencies, has resolved to inaugurate Sunday night evangelistic meetings for men in Westminster College, Trinity Street, Borough.

At the last meeting of the Executive Committee of the North-east Metropolitan District Union, Mr. William Ross, secretary of the Stratford Association, was appointed travelling secretary for the district, in succession to Mr. F. L. Porter, who, it will be remembered, was obliged to relinquish the position through failing health.

The Rome Association is doing an active spiritual work. Announcements of its meetings, printed in English, are displayed in several of the principal hotels and evangelical churches in the city. A meeting was recently held, at which a branch was formed, largely from among the Association membership of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, and between fifty and sixty names were enrolled.

The annual meeting of the Rangoon Association, held in the new premises, was a most interesting gathering. The Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Frederic Fryer, occupied the chair, and warmly commended the work of the Association, in whose behalf he has petitioned Government to grant a site for a new building at half the value of the land. The Bishop of Rangoon also took part in the meeting, describing the Y.M.C.A. as one of the most valuable helps in the social and moral life of Rangoon. Dr. Cushing, representing the student branch of the work, said it met a very serious need in the city, providing as it did a home for young men of various races, in which they were kept from temptation and surrounded by healthy influences. In addition to supervising the work at Rangoon, Mr. Oliver McCowen, has been able to form an Association at Moulmein, where the Deputy Commissioner has accepted office as president.

Poor Ministers' Clothing Society.—Through the endeavours of this Society numbers of poor ministers, their wives and families, are assisted with gifts of clothing. Nearly 3,000 garments were distributed last year. Parcels of partly worn out goods will be gratefully accepted by the Hon. Secretary, Poor Ministers' Clothing Society, Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington Butts, S.E.

Welsh Forward Movement.

IT recently dawned upon the Church of Wales that there were 800,000, out of a population of less than 2,000,000, who attend no place of worship. They hail mainly from England, Scotland, and Ireland.

Hence Cardiff was the most rapidly increasing town in Great Britain during the last decade. These people arrive without adequate religious accommodation and services in their own tongue, the religious services of the Presbyterian Church of Wales being conducted for the most part in Welsh. Hence the newcomers on arrival have no services which they can understand to go to, and they and their families consequently drift into a state of negligence and indifference, becoming more and more dissolute and degraded, until they form a terrible source of moral pollution to themselves and to the community generally.

Many have been children of godly parents, of Sunday-schools, and were children of many prayers, but utterly lost, as no one led them by the hand. One of the most notable features of the whole Movement is the fact that they do not show a trace of hostility towards the attempts to win them. All classes crowd to hear the Gospel, even those who have actually contracted the foulest vices and are steeped in sins, such as the unfortunate women on the streets, drunkards, corner men, and outlaws. Many of these are saved, and become assiduous Christian workers.

If such people did not attend the Gospel ministrations, their case is really hopeless. But they do flock in, and the saving power of God comes upon them.

In May, 1891, the Movement was commenced by Rev. Dr. Pugh, under the auspices of the General Assembly. By now over 20,000 of these poor, perishing people are already gathered in to be constant and devoted hearers, and we have over 3,000 converts formed into forty duly constituted churches, with Sunday-schools and all church organizations fully equipped, and ministers in charge.

THE GREATEST DIFFICULTY

experienced has been the necessity to provide places of worship. As they crowded in, large and commodious buildings had to be erected to house them forthwith. This great Mission entails £4,000 a year to carry it on. So far, all the small and large Welsh churches have spontaneously responded by making a collection annually towards reclaiming and saving their English-speaking community.

Though this enterprise has placed almost a crushing extraneous financial burden on the poor Welsh churches, it has also been the means of producing a refreshing inspiration among themselves. Their prayerful devotion has been kindled, and their earnestness in seeking, reclaiming, and saving the negligent community in their haunts around their own churches has been deepened.

Open a place of worship where we will in the thick of the populous districts, as a rule it will be filled, not by drawing from the churches, but by the raw material. The urgent cries and demands which come from all directions, from England as well as Wales, to start new Forward Movement Mission centres, are simply heart-rending, the Assembly having no means at its command to comply with them. The extension is so rapid that it exhausts all resources. Six new places were opened last year, and the annual expenditure exceeded the revenue by £1,000.

It is confidently believed that were the Assembly possessed of sufficient resources to provide buildings and maintain evangelists adapted for the work, 200 new congregations, containing some hundreds of thousands of reclaimed souls, could be established during the early part of this century. In no instance have the initiative services of a new centre been conducted without evident and vivid signs of the saving power of the Spirit of God from the very first day, and the whole congregation being much moved, some bathed in tears, and others crying aloud for mercy, as if our gracious God was waiting for an opportunity to set his seal and Divine imprimatur on this blessed work.

The Carter Home.

AS a continuation of the philanthropic work of the late Mr. W. Carter, the institution known as the Carter Home for Orphan and Destitute Boys is one that commends itself as deserving of hearty support. After the death of the founder the first few years were marked by struggle and difficulty, and it was only by constant perseverance and hard work that the Shoeblack Brigade, out of which grew the extensive work now carried on, was kept together. The Brigade was eventually superseded by the more important industries of boot-making and repairing, chair-caning, &c. The premises known as St. Joseph's College, High Street, Clapham, were subsequently secured, and here the work, in its varied operations, is now sustained. Since its occupation an average of 100 destitute boys have been annually provided for. Ample accommodation exists in the Home for an additional fifty boys if sufficient funds were forthcoming toward their support.

The object and scope of the institution are essentially comprehensive. To rescue, feed, clothe, educate, and morally and spiritually train destitute orphan or fatherless boys, between the ages of nine and sixteen years, involves much anxiety and care. The boys are also instructed in various trades, and, on leaving, employment is found suitable to their capacity. The earnings of the lads in the Home last year amounted to £1,136, and, in order that the institution may be free from debt, a like sum in contributions is needed. To make the industries still more supporting than at present, the workshops have recently been enlarged, and the committee ask that more orders be placed in their hands, thus helping to meet liabilities which at present are a hindrance to the progress of the work.

Communications may be addressed to Miss Willoughby, 53, Kimberley Road, Clapham Road, S.W.

Homes for Aged Poor.

AFTER allowing for the number who are brought to poverty in old age by evil habits and extravagance, there remains a multitude of respectable poor, who through no fault of their own, but simply from being worn out and beyond work have to seek the asylum. This is only done after years of struggle and often semi-starvation. To such the hand of Christian charity is extended, and provision is made in the Homes for the Aged Poor. In the metropolis and its suburbs there are now fifteen of these Homes, occupied by 177 aged persons, who rest free from care and anxiety, and enjoy comfort and peace after life's battle.

A typical case is that of an old lady in her eighty-eighth year. As one enters her beautiful room, spotlessly clean, and comfortably furnished, a glance at the occupant shows that the last journey will soon be taken, and that she is not far from home. She tells of twenty happy years spent in the Home. Entering with her husband, she nursed him with tender care until he died in 1883. Being an accomplished needlewoman she added to her slender income of four shillings per week till strength and sight failed. Now she wants for nothing; every need is supplied.

For thirty years the promoters of this charity have thus been striving to alleviate the sorrows and sufferings of the aged, the object being to give those in need a room rent free, coal in winter, and help in sickness, provided relatives, children, friends, or their own savings produce a nominal weekly income. No room is long vacant; the difficulty is to select the most pressing case from the list of waiting applicants. The secretary, Miss S. A. Harrison, 5, Grandacre Terrace, 86, Penge Road, Anerley, S.E., will be glad to forward copies of the annual report, and further particulars of the Homes.

Notting Hill Ragged School.—In connection with the work at St. James' Palace Ragged School, Notting Hill, W., teachers are needed for a Monday evening class for poor women, and a Bible class for little children. Particulars may obtained from E. F. P., 5, New Road, Campden Hill, W.

Glasgow Lads and Girls.

THE thirty-fifth annual meeting of the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society was held on Monday of last week, Lord Provost Chisholm presiding.

The annual report showed the number of branches to be at present seventy-nine, with a membership of 17,093 lads and girls, and 1,883 workers. For December the average attendance was 11,789 lads and girls, and 1,537 workers. In common with other religious associations, there was a decrease in attendance. This had been the subject of various conferences, the outcome of which had been manifested in the gradual disappearances of the shrinkage. The amount collected in the branches was £1,286 16s. 5d., an increase of £149. As a result of the appeal for New-Year gifts, 19 boxes of useful and valuable articles (estimated value £170) were sent to mission stations in New Hebrides, Madagascar, Livingstonia, and Old Calabar. Encouragement had been given to attendance at evening educational classes, and other help in the same direction is held out by branch and central libraries, &c. The social reform department had been carrying on singing, orchestral, athletic and physical drill classes, recreation clubs, industrial exhibitions, flower shows, Band of Hope meetings, swimming clubs, ambulance and life-saving classes, rambles, trips, and excursions. The report closed with a statement of the need for extension, the work being hindered by the lack of adequate funds and sufficient workers.

The Chairman congratulated the Society on the eminently satisfactory character of the reports. The monotony of their ordinary work and regular systematic programme, never seriously varying day by day and year by year, might be thought almost to make it impossible to preserve fervour and enthusiasm for the work, but they did not find that to be the case. There was just as great enthusiasm and devotion to work, and earnestness and application to details, as there was when the Society was younger and when its methods were less well known. As of old, the Sabbath forenoon meeting was the centre of all the branch work. He joined in recognising that there was still much to be done. A large portion of the field which they had deliberately occupied still remained to be cultivated, and the responsibility rested upon the Society of seeing that they occupied it thoroughly and well.

British College Christian Union.

SINCE the British College Christian Union was founded eight years ago, there has been a very steady and remarkable increase in the number of Christian Unions in our British colleges. The object of these unions, of which there are now 135, is to win students to a personal allegiance to Jesus Christ, and to promote systematic Bible study and missionary interest. The support this work has received from those intimately acquainted with it has been very liberal, but the significance of the Christian movement among students has not yet been appreciated by the Christian public as a whole. Hence, owing to increasing expenditure, combined with the strain thrown on all religious societies by the demands of the recent war and famine funds, the British College Christian Union, which now includes the Student Volunteer Missionary Union as one of its departments, has to face a very considerable deficit on its cash accounts.

The policy of the Union is that it should become self-supporting in the sense that the different College Christian Unions, and the individual members of the S.V.M.U., should contribute all the funds needed for the central expenses. But for the next five years the Union will have to confront the difficulty of an increased expenditure (for the services of travelling secretaries and office help, &c.), while the number of annual subscribers has but slightly increased since the early days of the movement.

As we feel sure that there are many who would gladly help us in this time of difficulty, we venture to ask you to allow us to make our pressing need known through the columns of your paper. I shall be glad to give full information to any who may write to me.

G. T. Maclean, General Secretary

University Intelligence.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

CAMBRIDGE.

THE meetings in connection with the Free Church Mission are being very largely attended. The missioner is Rev. C. Sylvester Horne, of Kensington.

The University sermon on February 10 was preached by Rev. H. E. Fox. His subject was "The Glorious Gospel." On February 17 the sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. F. Watson, on Gen. xii. 1-3.

The living of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, better known as the Round Church, has been offered and accepted by Rev. C. Lisle Carr, Bursar and Lecturer of Ridley Hall. This appointment will not interfere with Mr. Carr's duties at Ridley Hall.

The annual meeting of the Ely Diocesan Branch of the C.E.T.S. was held on February 15. Archdeacon Emery was in the chair. The report was on the whole very encouraging. The chairman, looking back on his younger days at Cambridge, saw a vast improvement in the general feeling of the people, and he saw no cause why temperance advocates should be downhearted.

Dr. Ryle, the new Bishop of Exeter, on the last night before he actually left Cambridge, spoke on behalf of "Cambridge House" in South London. He contrasted the religious life of the present day with that of twenty-five years ago, when he first knew Cambridge. In college life he was certain there was greater religious activity, and, he believed, there was a far deeper religious conviction at the present day than there was in his undergraduate days.

OXFORD.

Oxford is to have a Y.W.C.A. Already premises have been taken in Magdalen Street, and it is estimated that the annual cost of carrying on the work will be quite £200. The scheme has been organized in response to a memorial signed by about 100 young women employed in business in Oxford, and we are assured that the bright rooms, congenial friends, and pleasant occupations under nice Christian influence will be a boon to young women away from home.

The annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A. was held on Tuesday, Canon Fleming giving the address. Speaking of the growth of the Association, he said there were now centres in Canada and Australia, New Zealand, India, China, Japan, Mexico, Brazil, and Iceland. It was not yet a century old, and he believed it had yet its grandest work to do. He believed there was a great future before the Y.M.C.A. Canon Fleming defined its mission as follows:—"It seeks to unite those young men who, holding Jesus Christ as their Head and Saviour according to Holy Scripture, desire to be his disciples in life and doctrine, and to associate for the extension of his kingdom among young men."

Rev. J. Stone, missionary for nearly twenty-four years in South India, addressed on Sunday week the afternoon service for men held at St. Aldate's. It was a splendid address, full of stimulus and power. "But, the Word of the Lord grew and multiplied" was his text, and his two points:—"The 'Buts' or Hindrances of Missionary Work," and Some Illustrations of its Growth in Spite of Them." Caste, persecution, and the depressing influence of heathenism on the missionary himself, were enumerated as being among the hindrances. "Pray for us" was Mr. Stone's appeal. One illustration of the power of the Gospel will not be forgotten. A man was converted and baptized, and in the spirit of the early Christians he began at once to witness for Christ, and so zealously did he labour that on his death two churches had been built with resident pastors and a membership of nearly 2,000 each! Verily such a record is another edition of the Acts of the Apostles. Thank God for such proofs of a living Gospel. And thank God, too, for sending us the living voice to repeat them. We feel like the Church of Jerusalem when gathered to hear what God had done through the Apostles—"They glorified God." And so do we.

Non-Christian Students in Calcutta.—From November 19 to December 18, 1900, the meetings held in connection with the college branch of the Calcutta Young Men's Christian Association (of which the general secretary is Mr. J. Campbell White) numbered ninety-one, with an aggregate attendance of 3,980, about nine out of ten of the men being Hindus or Mohammedans, and the others native Christians. Messrs. B. R. Barber and F. W. Steinthal are in charge of this work, and prayer is asked for them, as well as that two or three additional suitable workers may be sent out during the present year to help in this greatest student field in Asia.

Scottish Notes.

THE work of the Regions Beyond Helpers' Union in Dundee, which had been in abeyance for some time, was revived towards the end of February. Mr. Peter Whytock presided, and explained the general objects of the Union, and Mr. A. Robert Stark gave a deeply interesting missionary lecture on "Life and Work in Peru." It was decided that the monthly prayer meeting should be resumed. Mr. Arthur Smith was appointed local president, and Mr. John Chisholm secretary.

At an open conference in connection with the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild Border Council, held at Hawick a few days ago, Rev. D. M. Campbell (Edinburgh) read a paper on "How to Interest Young Men in Practical Church Work," in which he indicated that the best means to this end was for their fellows to be in earnest in getting them to attend church. The chairman, Rev. A. C. Watson (St. Boswell's), stated that in his parish the young men were so much burdened with farm work, attending to sheep and cattle on the Sabbath, that they had little time to attend church services. Rev. Principal Morrison (Calcutta) spoke on mission work in India.

On Saturday, February 16, the Vale of Leven Sabbath School Union met in conference at Alexandria, Mr. James Campbell, of Tullichewan, presiding. The subject was "Present Needs in Sabbath School Teaching." Dr. Maurice Paterson (Edinburgh) gave a brief history of the Sabbath school movement as a religious force, and frankly pointed out that there were many defects in the system. The ranks of Sabbath school teachers were, he considered, mostly filled with young people, whose experience was scarcely sufficient for the duties required. Professor A. Hislop, D.D., Glasgow, spoke on "The Place of the Sabbath School in Relation to the Church and to the Home."

In connection with the subject of the employment of school children before and after school hours, the School Board of Glasgow has just made public the result of an inquiry into the state of affairs within their jurisdiction. The convener of the special committee (Mr. R. S. Allan) frankly admitted that matters were found to be much worse than had been anticipated, and he did not suppose that the figures in the Roman Catholic schools would be more favourable than in their own. Six per cent. of the children (in all 4,628) were shown to be thus employed, the number of hours per week varying in 806 cases from twenty to forty-five. One case was quoted of a boy of seven delivering newspapers from five till eight o'clock in the morning, resuming after school till nine o'clock, and on Saturday going on from 5 a.m. till 2 p.m.—for 2s. per week. The report has been sent to the Scottish Education Department in the hope that future action may be made possible.

A conference under the auspices of Dundee Colportage Society was held last week, Rev. Dr. James Aitken presiding. Rev. J. M. Shiach (organizing secretary) said there was need of colportage work in all cities, even the most intellectual, and instead of the work being of an old-world character it was well suited to the times. The selling of books and periodical literature of a religious kind they desired merely to make the means to an end, and that was to get at the souls of men and women. The local branch had entered upon its twenty-third year of operations, and at present employed three colporteurs. In moving the adoption of the report, Rev. Dr. C. M. Grant said he was not a pessimist with regard to the literature of the present day, and would not say one word against the press. Against the local press specially, he thought they had little cause to complain. At the same time, they wished to circulate literature which was not only morally healthy, but which would produce religious results. Mrs. R. A. Watson remarked that the Religious Tract Society put forth Protestant literature of a very high order. Mr. J. C. Robertson moved the re-election of the local office-bearers. In answer to a question, it was explained that the colporteurs did not undersell the trade, but disposed of publications in the open market, and the subscriptions went to the support of the colporteurs and nothing else.

Distress in the Canary Islands.—Writing to friends in England, Mrs. E. Macknight, Tafira, Las Palmas, tells of the destitution which threatens the inhabitants of the Canaries. "The terrible famine of food and water in the other islands is bearing upon us. The people are so suffering that they are coming over here. A couple who spent last night with us heard for the first time of the Bible and the Saviour. We read and prayed, and indeed the man has received the Gospel with joy. He cannot read, but his joy in pardon and life received is marvellous. We intend visiting the other islands in March on account of the misery and famine there."

Welsh Notes.

THE Welsh residents of Leeds have commenced to hold services in their mother-tongue. At the first service there were over 200 persons present. The sermon on the occasion was preached by Rev. D. Walters, of Headingley Congregational Church, Leeds. Mr. Walters is a Welshman, and a native of Glamorganshire.

Rev. J. T. Lloyd of Johannesburg, who with other ministers had to leave his charge owing to the war, has now returned to South Africa. Mr. Lloyd who is of Welsh birth, had the reputation of being one of the ablest preachers in South Africa. He will minister in St. Andrew's Church, Capetown, for some time, but hopes to resume his old pastorate when events permit.

An unofficial announcement has been made that among the proposals to be submitted to the National Free Church Council at Cardiff is one for the formation of a Girls' Guild. This will be an organization designed to help and safeguard the young girls who attend Free Churches. It is intended that one such organization should be established in the district of every local Council.

It is to be hoped that the action of some Free Church officers in East Glamorgan is only the prelude to a general awakening on the part of Welsh Churches with regard to ministerial stipends. There a conference is to be held with a view to suggesting means for increasing the salaries of those who have been set apart for the service of the Church in the Gospel. It is well that the initiative in this movement has been taken by laymen rather than by ministers.

The Temperance cause in South Wales is likely to receive considerable impetus by the entrance upon an active campaign of one of the most gifted of loving Welshwomen—Miss Rees, of Llangranog. Known throughout Wales already as a preacher and speaker of marked power, Miss Rees—or, as she is best known to her countrymen, Cramgwen—intends endeavouring to enlist the sympathies and secure the organized co-operation of Welshwomen on behalf of temperance.

A step in a right direction has been taken by the District Council of the Rhondda Valley. They have decided that the cemeteries are to be closed on Palm Sunday. This has been necessitated by the abuse of a long-standing custom. To so great an extent has this abuse been carried, that one of the leading newspapers of the Principality declares the observance of Palm Sunday in the Rhondda Valley to be only an occasion for a "vulgar flower show." The Rhondda Free Church Council have been mainly instrumental in putting an end to this state of things.

New Sailors' Rest for Cardiff.

FOR twenty years the Sailors' Rest in Bute Road, Cardiff, has served an extensively useful purpose, but for some time it has been felt that the institution is unworthy the metropolitan coal port of the world. Prompted by the desire to promote the welfare of seamen and the interests of Cardiff, the president, Mr. John Cory, J.P., D.L., has intimated his intention of defraying the cost of building a new Rest; and Mrs. John Cory has generously promised to provide the necessary furniture, while Mr. Sidney Robinson, of Fairwater, clears off a debt on the site.

Mr. R. M. Richards is the secretary, and he may be addressed at the Sailors' Rest, Bute Road, Cardiff.

Motherless Children.—Nearly 100 little ones are now being sheltered in the Homes for Motherless Children, superintended by Mr. R. T. Smith, of The Roystons, Grove Park, Chiswick. Some of the cases are received under circumstances of a distressing character. Mr. Smith is raising a fund for necessary alterations and repairs to The Roystons, which is the chief of the four homes.

Belfast Home for the Blind.—At the annual meeting of this institution in Great Victoria Street an encouraging report of the year's work was presented. Visitors to the Home have been much gratified to witness the comfort and care with which the 26 inmates are surrounded. The operations of the mission are developing year by year, and it is hoped that the project for removing the Home from the centre of the city to the Antrim Road district will be brought to a successful issue. The visitation of the blind poor in their homes is continued on a more extensive scale than ever, the number on the list having now reached 350. Weekly allowances are made in many needy cases, and through the efforts of the clothing guild others have been provided with much needed garments. The president is Mrs. R. B. Pim, Ury, Knockbreda Park, Belfast.

A Haven for Little Ones.

A WELL attended meeting was held at Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon, in the interests of the Haven for Homeless Little Ones, Walton-on-the-Hill, Surrey. The institution was formed some eight years ago by Mrs. Ransome Wallis, who with her husband has laboured with unremitting devotion in the interests of hapless mothers and unfortunate and unprotected infants. Lord Kinnaird presided over a sympathetic audience and spoke words of encouragement on behalf of the work.

The story of the institution, told by Mrs. Wallis, was one of mingled joy and sadness, for while the happiness of the large family of nameless little ones who commingle beneath the roof of Castle House is complete, there are, alas! numbers of beseeching applicants daily refused. Some 400 cases have passed through the Home, and it is gratifying to learn that in very few instances are mothers unwilling to do their best in support of their infants. As illustrative of the difficulty with which many mothers are faced, Mrs. Wallis recalled the circumstances of a young woman who had placed her child out to be nursed, paying 5s. weekly for its maintenance. After six months the poor mother was distressed to find that her babe was being

PITILESSLY NEGLECTED.

In her extremity she purchased a copy of The Christian, in which appeared a paragraph referring to Castle House. She applied for the admission of her child, and had the joy of knowing that it was being protected and cared for with tenderness and love. Many a wayward mother's heart has been touched by the Christian sympathy extended to her, and not a few have been led to seek forgiveness for the past and courage for the future.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan spoke as one associated with such work "behind the scenes." He said a great number of these hapless, unwanted infants fall into incompetent hands, and lack proper care and protection. Without such an institution as that founded by Mrs. Ransome Wallis, a betrayed mother had but four courses to choose from—child murder, desertion, the workhouse, or a life of sin.

The treasurer, Mr. D. C. Apperly, speaking of the finances of the institution, announced that they were £1,500 in debt, and appealed for additional subscribers in order that the work should not be hindered through lack of support. Some encouraging and helpful words were spoken by Rev. John Robertson. A number of the chubby-faced happy children made their own appeal in song. As one looked upon these tiny mites toddling to the platform, gazing with wonder and delight on the strange scene, it was pleasing to reflect that there exists so noble and useful an agency as their "Haven;" and when, having become reconciled to their unique surroundings, their voices blended with earnest simplicity in the strain, "Growing up for Jesus," many were moved to tears of gratitude and joy. By collection and gifts the sum of £200 was contributed.

The Open-Air Mission.

MUCH happy and fruitful work for God has lately been accomplished, by God's blessing, in connection with this Mission, and many souls have been gathered in.

Our great seasons of opportunity are, however, fast approaching, and the Spring Campaigns of the Mission will open at Stamford Fair, where, from March 18 to 22, five evangelists, including the organizing missioner, will be engaged, with the hearty assistance of local workers, who are holding weekly prayer-meetings in anticipation of the visit. After that, many similar descents in strong force upon country races and fairs will be undertaken, and are already being organized.

The Society has, however, been seriously hampered for some months past through the dearth of funds, and we would earnestly ask the Lord's stewards to come forward and help us generously at this time. The need was never more pressing.

Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

Obituary.

REV. R. GOVETT, NORWICH.

THE death is announced to have taken place at Norwich of Rev. Robert Govett, who many years ago, for doctrinal reasons, left the Church of England, in which he was a curate, and built himself a church at Norwich, in which he continued to minister ever since. Mr. Govett, who had attained his eightieth year, was widely known both in England and America as a Biblical expositor, especially in conection with the subject of Apocalyptic interpretation.

COMTESSE DE HAMEL DE MANIN.

The Comtesse Clara Milina Ancile de Hamel de Manin, who died recently at Hassocks, Sussex, was a daughter of the late Jean François, 21st Comte de Hamel de Manin, Officer in the Household of Louis XVIII., while her mother was a daughter of Lieut.-Colonel John Hughes Rhys, of Pembrey Court, Carmarthenshire. A few hours before she passed away, though suffering much, she was quite cheerful, and spoke of the glory of knowing Christ in health, and of its being such a comfort in death. She recited hymns, and said, though she much regretted leaving those she loved, she was ready, and longed to be with Christ, leaving last loving messages to those also who were unable to be with her. Her implicit trust, and her cheery disposition, have made an impression not to be forgotten. The funeral service took place at Christ Church, Woburn Square. The officiating clergy were Prebendary Nash and Rev. A. Buckland, of the Foundling Hospital. Evidences abounded of the affection in which she was held by a large circle of friends in France and Sweden, as well as in England and Wales.

REV. HORATIO GILMORE, WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

After some months of suffering and gradually increasing weakness, at the age of seventy-five years, Rev. Horatio Gilmore was called to his rest, on Friday, February 22. His end was perfect peace, as for many years the ground of his faith was the finished work of Christ. Mr. Gilmore was of a military descent, and had held an appointment as Captain in India, in the 78th Highlanders, at the time of the Mutiny in 1854, but was sent home on sick leave, and then held military posts in Wales. While he was an officer in the Army, he seized every opportunity for preaching the Gospel, and continued to do so for many years. Having, on doctrinal grounds, seceded from the Church of England, he served for some years as pastor in Baptist communities. When, in 1875, he took up his residence in Weston, he became acquainted with the Earl of Cavan, and was requested by him, on his health failing, to continue the Gospel ministry in the Iron room at Milton, which he was able to do for about twelve years. He also was local secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, and presided at the Friday prayer meeting until his strength gave way. The testimony of Mr. Gilmore's life was invariably to the power of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. F. W. B.

The Promotion of Public Morality.

ONE of the last public letters by the late Bishop of London was an appeal on behalf of the London Council for the Promotion of Public Morality, of which society he had acted as president. It referred to the strong efforts of the Council to inform and educate public opinion with regard to the organized and nefarious trade to sexual vice. From the response made, it is evident that these exertions have not been without fruit, and the painful matter is being pressed upon the attention of the municipal authorities, with a view to the better administration and improvement of the law. The urgent need for decided action is realized, and the success which has attended the efforts of the Council is an incentive to further exertion and a justification for the appeal which is now made by Bishop Barry. The work of the Council, although chiefly carried on by voluntary and gratuitous service, needs a sum of £1,000 per annum for the prosecution of its noble and worthy cause. The secretary is Mr. E. Fox Butlin, 37, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

Among the Churches.

Mr. W. P. Hartley, of Aintree, Liverpool, has just presented a sum of £500 to be spent in aiding Primitive Methodist ministers to refurnish their libraries.

Rev. H. C. Carter, of Mansfield College, Oxford, has accepted the pastorate at Queen Street Congregational Church, Wolverhampton, in succession to the late Dr. C. A. Berry.

In the Presbyterian churches, Rev. James Lawson, of Salford, has become the first minister of the new church at Wembley; and Rev. James Peddie has been elected minister of the Church at Finchley, N.

The congregation at Shoreditch Tabernacle gave Rev. Wm. Cuff a loving welcome home on his return after a season of rest. Mr. Cuff had been absent from the pulpit for five Sundays through ill health.

Mrs. Creighton, widow of the Bishop of London, has accepted the King's offer of a set of apartments at Hampton Court Palace, and the rooms which were occupied by the late Lady Grey are being prepared for her occupation.

In the Congregational churches, Rev. R. B. Brindley has accepted the pastorate of George Street Church, Croydon; Rev. Egbert Gregory, of Duxford Church, Cambridge; and Rev. R. W. Farquhar, of Christ Church, Wimbledon.

Rev. J. P. Cushing, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, is holding a mission at Christ Church, Endell Street, W.C., March 2-11. The vicar, Rev. S. A. Griffiths, will be glad to welcome helpers and those who will assist in the singing on week days.

The clerical secretary of the Society for Irish Church Missions to the Roman Catholics writes to suggest that, where possible, sermons and offertories should be arranged on behalf of the Society's work, on St. Patrick's Day, which this year falls on Sunday, March 17.

The Council of St. John's Hall, Highbury, have appointed Rev. Prebendary Barlow, to the presidency of the College, vacant by the death of Rev. A. Peache. There have been in the past three presidents of St. John's—Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Harrowby, and Mr. Peache.

It is stated, in the Presbyterian Church Extension Committee's report, that the attendances at the Church Hall at Finchley Road, West Hampstead, have been most encouraging, and that 140 sittings have been let. A Sunday school has also been commenced, and promises well.

At the second annual thanksgiving day in connection with Leytonstone Road Baptist Church, Pastor W. Graham Scroggie was in attendance in the vestry for the purpose of receiving gifts towards the building of the new tabernacle which will shortly be erected. The contributions amounted to £55.

On the recommendation of the Bishop of Bristol, the committee of the Additional Curates' Society has given notice of its intention to withdraw the grant of £70 per annum for the maintenance of an assistant curate in the parish of St. Simon's, Bristol, the incumbent of which has declined to discontinue the use of incense.

Rev. Dr. Allen, president of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion, is just now visiting the churches in Cornwall, and is receiving a hearty welcome. Throughout the county Dr. Allen is insisting on the felt need of the churches for a new touch of spiritual devotion, and especially pleading that the social side of church life may not lead to a neglect of the spiritual work of the churches.

Prospect Street Presbyterian Church, Hull, has held its annual meeting, Rev. J. J. Mackay, M.A., presiding. The membership was reported to be 524. The Sunday scholars number 580, and the Bible class 166. The total income for the year was £1,331, of which £352 was contributed for missions and objects beyond the congregation, the chief item being £203 for the China Mission.

In the Baptist churches, Rev. F. Bennett has become minister of Northcote Street Church, Stockton-on-Tees; Rev. A. Woodward, of Well Lane Church, Beverley; Rev. John Heath, of Rochdale Road Church, Bury; Rev. Gwynn Thomas, of the Church at St. Heliers, Jersey; Rev. David T. Benjamin, of the English Church at Blaenavon; and Rev. E. J. Woodall, of the Church at Workington.

The annual meeting of Marylebone Presbyterian Church was held recently, Rev. Dr. Hanson presiding. The report indicated consolidation and progress. The congregation unanimously agreed, on the recommendation of the Session and Deacons' Court, subject to the approval of Presbytery, to Dr. Hanson's acceptance of an invitation to supply, for a period of four months in the autumn, the pulpit in Woollahra, New South Wales, occupied for a period last year by Rev. J. B. Meharry, B.A.

The committee which has in hand the arrangements for the Methodist Ecumenical Conference which is to meet in London, at Wesley's Chapel, early in September, is now preparing the programme. The conference, which is to open on Wednesday, September 4, will extend over at least a fortnight. It will be constituted of 500 members in two sections, 300 being assigned to the western section, and 200 to the eastern, and as nearly as possible will be composed of ministers and laymen in equal numbers. The eastern section will comprehend British Methodism and affiliated conferences and mission fields; the western section the conferences of the United States and Canada, and their foreign work.

Fallen Asleep.

Dr. Hugh M'Donald, of Strachur, near Duncon, aged eighty-two. He had been fifty-five years in the ministry of the Established Church of Scotland.—Rev. G. Clarke, a Primitive Methodist minister for forty-two years. Although superannuated, he had arranged to take charge of Romford Church.—Isabella Jane, wife of Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, who passed away at Crouch End on February 21, just after midnight.

Appeals.

Cage Lane Mission, Plumstead.—It is proposed to have a Sale of Work on March 29 and 30, towards paying off a deficiency of over £30 on last year's expenses. Contributions, or articles for sale, will be gratefully received by Mrs. Anderson, 1, Thames View Terrace, Plumstead, Kent.

Bookham, Surrey.—In this village, about four miles from Leatherhead, in Surrey, evangelistic work is being carried on with much encouragement. A colporteur evangelist is supported to superintend the work, and it has been necessary to build a house for his accommodation. The sum of £175 is still needed to meet the exceptional expense thus incurred, and this hampers the work. Rev. G. Avery, of Rose Hill, Dorking, would be glad to hear from friends disposed to help.

Berger Hall, E.—The soup kitchen in connection with Berger Hall is open daily. Factory lads and girls can purchase cheap meals. The eating-room affords a comfortable rest, and serves as a counter attraction to the public-houses. Funds in support of the work are pleaded for by Pastor D. Hayes, Berger Hall, Empson Street, Bromley, E.

Evangelistic.

The Dartford F.C. Mission.

THE President and Secretary of the Dartford Free Church Council write that in the report sent to us of the recent Mission in that town, the figures both as to attendances and results were much over-estimated, though they cordially recognize the fact that there was much to praise God for.

In expressing our regret, we need hardly say that we do our best to secure accurate reports, but are necessarily dependent upon the good judgment of our correspondents.

We, therefore, take this opportunity to urge all who send such reports to keep well within limits. Very few persons can without data gauge accurately the seating capacity of a church or hall, and it is easy in the enthusiasm of a manifestly successful Mission to view the position from too sanguine a standpoint. It would always be better if reports were collaborated by two or three responsible persons rather than the work of a single pen.

The Railway Mission.

At March, Cambs., we have just finished a series of Gospel services conducted by Mr. John Hawkins, in connection with the Railway Mission. The meetings, which were held in the Temperance Hall, were well attended, and all the churches gave their support. Many of the unconverted, including a number of railway men and their wives and families, yielded to Christ, and Christians were revived.

Mr. C. Inglis at Ore.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been holding a week's mission at Ore, one of the suburbs of Hastings, and God has wonderfully owned the message from the lips of his servant. A marked feature of the mission has been the unity between different sections of the Lord's people. The vicar of the parish and members of every denomination have been heartily engaged in pointing the many anxious ones to the Lord Jesus. The meeting for men only, which filled the Wesleyan Chapel, was intensely solemn. A man who was present passed into eternity a few hours afterwards. J.

Mr. Hugh Paton at Wick.

A mission conducted by Mr. Hugh Paton at the Baptist Church, Wick, began on February 3. The start was somewhat stiff, but encouraging, and the first week was almost over before any real interest was manifested. On the following Lord's Day the church was nearly filled with a most sympathetic gathering, and at the close many readily left their seats for the inquiry-room. On the evenings of the second week there was a marked increase in interest and attendance, and night by night there were decisions for Christ. On February 17 the evening service was held in Wick United Free Church, when Mr. Paton preached to nearly 1,000 people. Since then the interest has deepened, and the earnest and loving appeals of the evangelist have resulted in many more decisions. The work of grace has so far been chiefly among young people and members of Bible classes.

John Elder.

Preaching in Distilleries.

A correspondent writes:—"A mission has been conducted by Rev. James E. Houston, of Cambuslang, and Rev. Angus Macphee, of Kilfinan, in Kildalton parish, Islay. The minister of the parish, Rev. James Mackinnon, had arranged for five daily meetings. Three of these were held each day at separate hours at three distilleries, and were well attended by the masters and their men. The Gospel was preached both in Gaelic and English to attentive audiences. Each evening a meeting for the young was conducted in English in the village church, and later in the evening in the same church, the principal meeting for adults was also addressed in both languages. There were excellent attendances of all classes, increasing to the close; and while it was not considered desirable to apply a public test in order to ascertain the effect, it was obvious from the gratitude expressed on all hands by Christians that the Spirit God accompanied the Word in power."

All Souls', Langham Place, W.

In connection with a mission beginning next week at All Souls', Langham Place, printed letters have been addressed to the congregation and residents in the parish by the rector (Rev. F. S. Webster), and the two missioners—Rev. W. R. Mowll (Christ Church, North Brixton) and Rev. E. W. Moore (Wimbledon). We quote the following sentences from the last-named communication: "It is a mistake that a mission is intended only for the careless and unconverted. It has a message also for God's people. Are we 'who profess and call ourselves Christians,' living up to our privileges? Is there not abundant reason for every one of us to search and try our ways, and turn again to our God? These are questions which we shall do well to put to ourselves as we look forward to this Mission. I propose in the addresses I hope to give, to speak especially to Christians on 'The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit.'"

Mr. W. D. Dunn writes from West Hartlepool: "Splendid meetings; crowds are coming to hear and many are receiving blessing."

Mr. Arthur E. Knight, of the Evangelization Society, has been spending seven weeks among the Baptist Churches of the Hatherleigh district, conducting special services, which have been much blessed. His enunciation of the fundamental truths of the Gospel was clear, and his application of the same forceful. H. S.

A very enjoyable drawing-room meeting took place on Saturday last at Paignton, South Devon, when the Brothers Cotelingam gave an interesting account of mission work in India, the need for it, and the blessed effects of it in zenanas as well as amongst the masses. The address was varied by sacred songs and hymns, and was listened to with intense interest by from fifty to sixty friends.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has recently conducted a mission for young people in Providence, Rhode Island, U.S.A. Rev. John J. Hall writes: "In a little over three weeks not many fewer than 500 have signed the card professing conversion, after being examined. Mr. Hammond has given away thousands of tracts and books of which he is the author. He has done much good by his unselfish labours and leaves many grateful hearts behind him."

At the Corn Exchange, Faringdon, Berks, on Sunday last, Mr. Bob Johnson commenced a mission under the auspices of the B.W.T.A. There was a large congregation under the presidency of Rev. Henry Smith (Baptist), supported by Rev. J. Taylor (Congregationalist). Mr. Johnson sang Gospel hymns effectively, and his testimony and entreaties to the unconverted were impressive. The missioner aimed directly at the conversion of souls. The meeting, which was an excellent one, is to be followed by others. S.

A gracious revival has taken place during the three weeks mission for young people, in the Mission Hall, Moss Grove, Kingswinford, conducted by Miss Marion Dunn. The results have been such as to call for deep thankfulness. From the outset the meetings were largely attended, and as they proceeded the numbers increased. Many each night were brought to decision for Christ. Sweet solos were rendered by Miss G. Dunn. The meeting for praise and testimony was such as had not been witnessed for a long time. Ninety-two young people between the ages of ten and twenty testified to blessing received during the mission.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a mission to be conducted by Rev. D. M. Cameron at Ashford, March 4-13.

For an eight days' mission to be held in Bures, Suffolk, March 3-10, conducted by Mr. John Thomson.

For a service for men at the London City Mission Room, Hampton, that souls may be won for Christ.

For the continuance and deepening of a work of grace begun in the hearts of many at Swanwick, Southampton.

For blessing on a mission at the Tabernacle, St. George's Cross, Glasgow, by Mr. Henry Varley, commencing Sunday, March 3.

On behalf of Dr. Long, Medical Missionary of the Irish Church Missions in Limerick, against whose work there is at present an outbreak of religious bigotry. Dr. Long has been frequently mobbed and assaulted, and the prejudices of the populace have been seriously aroused by priestly denunciation.

Personalia.

The latest news of Dr. Harry Guinness is to the effect that the patient continues to make slow, but satisfactory progress towards recovery.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, writing in January last from Tongoa, New Hebrides, says: "I have been at Epi for a few days. While there, I had an attack of the Epi fever—similar to what I had in April last. I am glad to know that friends in England remember me in their prayers."

Many will be glad to have some tidings of Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the blind singers of Philadelphia. Our friends write from that city: "We are both well and happily situated. We are just now singing for our friend Mr. Wanamaker, in Bethany Church. We should like our friends in beloved England to know that we remember them in prayer every day."

We are glad to announce some improvement in the condition of Mr. Bewley Weaver. Mrs. Weaver writes: "Please thank the many friends who have been praying for my husband. It has been a most trying time, but my husband has passed the crisis of his illness, and the doctor now gives us hope. The illness, however, has left the sufferer in a dreadfully weak condition. Will friends please pray that he may gain strength?" Latest telegram:—Fever abating.

Notices.

A correspondent asks for particulars of a hymn, said to have been translated from the German by the late Prince Consort, with one verse as follows:—

"God bless our going out, nor less
Our coming in, and make them sure.
God bless our daily bread, and bless
Whate'er we do, whate'er endure;
In death unto his peace awake us,
And heirs of his salvation make us."

About Books.

DR. PIERSON'S NEW BOOKS.

In Seed Thoughts for Public Speakers, Dr. A. T. Pierson furnishes a collection of illustrations, anecdotes, and outlines of sermons and addresses designed to help writers and speakers. (6s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.) Six hundred and fifty in number, the paragraphs are conveniently arranged, and are not limited to religious topics. Throughout the book there are veins of wit, humour, historical fact and anecdote, material with which to adorn or strengthen a discourse, speech, or article. A copious index is provided at the end of the volume, by consulting which, the contents may be quickly found. We regret to observe among so much that is good, the well-known fabrication in which "Publius Lentulus, president of Judea in the reign of Tiberius Cæsar," is made to give a description of the personal appearance of our Lord; and another familiar "document," of no greater authority, purporting to give the terms of the "Death Warrant of Christ." Dr. Pierson's own contributions are of more value than some of his gatherings; and his volume will prove of service to many.

Dr. Pierson's other new book is Forward Movements of the Last Half Century. This substantial work is modestly styled "a glance at the more marked philanthropic, missionary, and spiritual movements characteristic of our time." (6s. Funk & Wagnalls.) In over thirty chapters, descriptive and explanatory, Dr. Pierson outlines the most significant forms of Christian service as we have observed them during the past fifty years. His pages are at once earnest and instructive; to read them is a tonic and a stimulus. As conveying some idea of the contents of the book, we may say that among the topics discussed are: "The Movement towards Holiness," "Keswick Teaching," "The Revival of the Prayer Spirit," "The Prayer Basis of Mission Work," "Bible Schools and Conventions," "Women's Work at Home and Abroad," "Organizations of Christian Young People," "The Problem of City Evangelization," "The Stimulation of Missionary Zeal," "Systematic Christian Work among Soldiers," "The Growth of Belief in 'Divine Healing,'" and "The Increasing Study of the 'Last Things.'" In some cases the articles are introductory, in others they have the best features of an historical sketch. They are pitched in a high spiritual key, and calculated to do much good. We trust they will have many readers, and exercise a powerful influence in the interest of the great missionary cause, which their author so ably serves by lip and pen.

A POETICAL ANTHOLOGY.

Among the many attractive anthologies of our day, a place all its own is occupied by Mr. Quiller-Couch's Oxford Book of English Verse. In the compass of one volume, we have here 900 poems—a grand selection from the rich stores of English literature. In the words of the editor: "For this anthology I have tried to range over the whole field of English verse from the beginning, or from the thirteenth century to the closing year of the nineteenth, and to choose the best. Nor have I sought in these islands only, but wheresoever the Muse has followed the tongue which among living tongues she most delights to honour. To bring home and render so great a spoil compendiously has been my capital difficulty. It is for the reader to judge if I have so managed it as to serve those who love poetry, and to implant that love in some young minds not yet initiated."

Though some may be disposed occasionally to question the judgment of the editor—disparaging individual selections and censuring regrettable omissions—it will be generally conceded that the volume right nobly realises its avowed objects; it will undoubtedly please lovers of poetry, and is assuredly calculated to implant a regard for verse in the minds of the uninitiated. There is variety as well as quantity, so that persons of different tastes may find pleasure and profit in the volume. The edition on ordinary paper will be welcome in the library; that on the celebrated Oxford India paper, though printed in bold type, and extending to nearly 1,100 pages, is marvellously compact, and will be specially prized for purposes of presentation.

An interesting publication regarding the late Queen is The Queen's Best Monument: and other Articles, Notes, Poems, and Letters, reprinted from The Spectator. (6d. "Spectator" Office.)

* The Oxford Book of English Verse, 1250-1900. Chosen and edited by A. T. Quiller-Couch. (Ordinary paper, 7s. 6d.; Oxford India paper, 10s. 6d. Henry Frowde).

The Path of Promise, by J. R. Miller, D.D., is a choice booklet, having lessons which old and young will do well to learn. (6d. Sunday School Union.)

The Times calls attention to the "Century Dictionary" in a very attractive explanatory book entitled Words and Things, copies of which may be had on application to the manager of The Times.

The Church Missionary Society's Cycle of Prayer is an interesting publication. It consists of a series of large cards, setting forth, with illustrations and sketch maps, the various objects upon which the hearts of friends of missions are properly exercised in prayer. (1s. nett. C.M.S. House).

The Women who Followed the Lord is a small book, but beautiful alike in subject-matter and style. The holy women who waited upon the Master have lessons for all who would follow them; and the lessons we admirably set forth here. We trust there will be many readers of these helpful pages. (1s. 6d. nett. Partridge and Co.)

Miss C. Cochrane, whose notable contribution to the consideration of the rural housing of the working-classes, at the last Women's International Congress, evoked such widespread interest, has published Labourers' Cottages. The booklet comprises letters especially addressed to agricultural labourers. (1d. The Author, The Downs, St. Neots.)

A little volume of varied charms is A Book about Longfellow, by J. N. McIlwraith ("Jean Forsyth"). This is no mere biographical outline; but an account of the poet and his friends, with descriptive chapters on his principal works. The book will interest thoughtful readers, and serve as a good introduction to the study of Longfellow's writings. (2s. Nelson.)

In The House Built by God, Mrs. Meredith discourses on many subjects concerning the Christian's life and walk. Some of the sections of the book outline, as in a vision, the redemptive purpose of God, and the response of man to the Divine call. Perhaps the most helpful words are those on Christian service, in the chapter on "The Christian's Crown." (1s. 6d. Nisbet.)

The Doctrine of Justification according to Scripture and the Church of England. By Rev. W. B. Russell Caley, M.A., vicar of St. Matthias, Plymouth. This clear statement of teaching has reached its second edition. There is no harmony between justification truth and Romanist dogma, and this succinct demonstration of the fact will be welcome to many. (1s. Elliot Stock.)

Hunts on my Hobby Horse, by Gertrude T. A. Frere, is a bright little book for the children; calculated to arouse interest in foreign mission work and to stimulate a helpful disposition in its support. In addition to other illustrations, there are a number by G. D. Rowlandson. This is one of the very attractive publications of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society. (2s. Marshall Bros.)

Favourite Scripture Texts of Famous People: Including Interesting Facts and Incidents concerning Texts, with Brief Accounts of Famous Bibles, by Frederick Barton. (1dol. 25c. F. M. Barton, Cleveland, Ohio.). A volume of varied interest, giving, with readable particulars, the favourite or notable texts of over four hundred people. Autographs are presented of eighty of the more prominent persons contributing, representing all orders and ranks of life. There are full indexes, so that the contents of the book are easily accessible for illustrative quotation.

The fourth volume of "Nisbet's Church of England Handbooks" is How We Got Our Prayer-Book, by T. W. Drury, B.D., Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge. (2s. Nisbet & Co.) The pages trace the steps by which the Book of Common Prayer came into its present form, and mark the various ways in which the history of the nation has impressed itself upon the book. The blessings secured by the Reformation stand out with self-evident distinctness. Evangelical Church-people in particular will welcome this book; it should have historical interest for Christians of all denominations.

A biography of exceptional interest is that of Emma Marshall, the well-known author, written by her daughter Beatrice. (6s. Seeley & Co.). From earliest days, in the quiet of a Quaker home at Norwich, till her death in 1898, when she was widely known and highly esteemed as a writer of wholesome books, Mrs. Marshall's life-story is singularly readable. The pages tell of trouble bravely borne, of heroic conflict with adversity, and of the attainment of a well-deserved renown in the literary world. The volume has its moral lessons as well as its more general attractions. Mrs. Marshall's books numbered many a score, and their high tone and useful character made for her friends who will ever hold her memory in affectionate regard. The correspondence included in the volume is full of animation, and bears strong testimony to the esteem entertained for Mrs. Marshall by authors and other celebrities in many lands.

Readers of the Protestant Woman are already familiar with The Vicar of St. Bede's, where it has appeared in serial form. Those who are seeking strongly Protestant literature to show the danger of Ritualism in the Church of England will find it a suitable gift book. (1s. Women's Protestant Union, Exeter Hall.) Young Protestants now combines the excellent features of the Protestant Girl and Brave Lads and True: while the Protestant Woman commences a new volume with excellent stories, articles, and notes.

The expeditions in the direction of the North Pole have been so numerous that the general term, "Polar Navigation," has been all but monopolized by travel and research in the Arctic Circle. In recent years, however, there have been numerous reminders that there is a South Pole, and an Antarctic Circle. Hence, there should be many readers for Mr. G. Barnett Smith's book, The Romance of the South Pole; Antarctic Voyages and Explorations. (2s. T. Nelson & Sons.) The pages unfold a story that is instructive as well as entertaining, and there are excellent illustrations.

Those who desire a succinct introduction to foreign missionary studies will find helpful direction in Some Aspects of the Missionary Question; Being the Report of the First Series of Lectures on Missionary Topics arranged by the Bristol centre of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union during 1900. (2s. nett. J. Wright & Co., Bristol.) The pages present notes of addresses by Revs. H. Arnold Thomas, M.A., W. Pierce, Robert Bruce, D.D., C. T. Wilson, Richard Glover, D.D., Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, Mr. Eugene Stock, Mr. Stanley P. Smith, B.A., and Mrs. J. F. Bishop. The subject is dealt with in general and in particular, on historical and descriptive lines. At the close of the various papers, mention is made of books in which the student may obtain further information on the special topics dealt with.

Short Studies in Holiness, by Rev. J. R. Diggle, M.A., Archdeacon of Westmorland. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). A practical little book by one who knows where he stands. "If we desire to be Christians at all, even Christians of the simplest and most lowly type, holiness must form part of the very essence of our every-day life. Unless we are holy Christians, we are in no sense real Christians." Archdeacon Diggle aims at showing holiness to be not simply an out-of-the-way attainment, and a counsel of perfection, but the necessary healthy and glad condition of every true Christian life, "that a man may be a saint in a shop as well as in a cloister, that trade is not incompatible with devotion, or work with worship, or innocent pleasure with genuine piety." At the same time, the pages exhibit teaching of a confusing kind in regard to the meaning of the words "conversion" and "regeneration."

The posthumous volume of sermons by Rev. Dr. E. B. Speirs, published under the title of A Present Advent (Blackwood & Sons), is fitted to prove valuable devotional reading in Christian households. The discourses must have provided the hearers with much food for reflection and meditation. The exposition is marked by freshness and originality. Among other points, the presentation of which has attracted our attention, are the conditioning of God's revelation of Himself by our capacity and willingness to receive, the need for the opening by man of the door at which the Saviour knocks, the commonness of shifting responsibility by finding excuses for sin—which is described as really a form of unbelief, the "many others"—nameless ones—who went to make up the rank and file of the Lord's followers, the continuity of the blessing God gives to his people even "in sleep," and the strong argument for foreign missions deduced from "Honour all men. Love the brotherhood."

Love and its Response (½d. E.T., 20, Brondesbury Road, London, N.W.) puts searching inquiries to professing Christians.

The Divine Magnet (Sabbath School Society, Belfast) is an interesting account of successful work among Jews, by Rev. A. Frank, Hamburg.

Two Signs of Christ's Second Coming (1d. A. W. Jolliffe, Bonchurch, I.W.) points out the shortness of the time as an urgent warning to the careless.

The Tabernacle Almanac (1d. St. George's Cross, Glasgow) contains, among other good things, McCheyne's scheme of Daily Bible Reading.

Any who are seeking a quarterly magazine for boys, with a view to localization, will find in The Boys' Mail Bag (1d. Hon. Secretary, 9, Brent Road, Woolwich) a bright interesting paper, well suited for the purpose.

The Chinese Christian under Fire (2d.) and Boxers, Blunders, and Bullets (3d.) are by the last man who left Peking before the siege (Rev. F. Brown, 51, St. Peter's Road, Leicester), who also acted as guide and intelligence officer on the march to Peking.

Rev. J. W. Veevers has added to temperance literature a useful publication—A Plea for Total Abstinence. The subject is treated from the point of its necessity, urgency, reasonableness, and value, both to the individual and to the State. (1d. H. R. Allenson.)

A booklet deserving of wide circulation is Prayer and its Answer, by Alfred Knott. Its pages will appeal to many a faltering heart, and stimulate dependence on and submission to the will of God. The author has based upon Scriptural evidence the conditions of prevailing intercession, and set forth facts and experiences bearing upon significant answers to prayer. (1d. Partridge.)

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THE Free Church Council is trying to turn to the most practical use the experience of the many Missioners who have recently taken part in the great evangelistic effort. A circular has been addressed to them asking for an expression of opinion upon such subjects as the inquiry-room, solo singing, the duration of a mission, the most effective kind of preaching for procuring decision, &c. In due time the result of this plebiscite will doubtless be made known to the Christian world, so that all may benefit by the experience. It is a favourable moment in which to examine evangelistic methods, and to see if in any case they need revision, in view of the changing conditions of our time. There seems to be everywhere a desire to hear the Gospel—the question is how best to meet it.

The marked refusal of the non-churchgoing community to accept the offer of evangelization by attending the recognized places of worship, while they showed more or less willingness to attend services in "secular" buildings, suggests a strong and widespread prejudice against the former. What is the root of this feeling? It would be difficult, probably, to explain it on any single score. Some would put it down to the "pew" system; others to the monotony of the ordinary services; others, again, to the fear lest, having once entered a church, an attempt may be made to proselytise them. Whatever may be the reasons, the prejudice is evidently real and deep; and, so far, it is clear that the churches have been unconsciously setting up a barrier against the special purpose for which they exist, i.e., of being attractive witnesses for Christ. How far a more elastic form of service, by new methods of appeal, and especially by frequently holding evangelistic meetings would help to remove this attitude of outsiders, is a question that experience alone can settle. Something should clearly be attempted by way of following up this special effort.

The Roman Catholics, stirred, it is presumed, by the recent awakening in London and the country, are holding a simultaneous mission of their own in London. Cardinal Vaughan has issued a fervent appeal to his co-religionists to make the effort a success. The "pastoral" is an extraordinary mixture of sense and superstition. Not a word about the sacrifice of Christ or of faith in Him, but very much about penance and good works and external things. It is like offering a stone to those who need bread.

An interesting and significant story comes from Rome, showing how much reason there is for the dread felt by the Vatican of the circulation of the Bible among the Roman clergy or laity. During the Holy Year the pilgrims were most carefully guarded from buying or accepting a copy of the Scriptures in the vernacular. One day, a priest snatched a Testament from the hands of a poor woman, and took it home with the intention of burning it. While pulling out some pages for that purpose, his eyes lighted on the text, "Judge not, that ye be not judged." His attention was arrested, and on comparing the Protestant version with the Vulgate, he came to the conclusion that the book he had honestly thought it his duty to destroy was in very truth the Word of God. Rome's chance is gone when once the "Word" is taken up intelligently and devoutly, and her vast pretensions to be the mouthpiece of God vanish into thin air.

One of the greatest difficulties in the way of the proper housing of the working classes is the fearful and often fictitious price of the land which is required for new buildings, or for rebuilding. Not only in the centres is this true, but also in the suburbs. Land is held back in the hope of extension, and then exorbitant prices are demanded for it. While this continues, it will be impossible to erect small cottages for working men. The late chairman of the L.C.C. Housing Committee points out that the County Council is hampered by the present condition of things, and that it is imperative to obtain Parliamentary powers to acquire vacant land for housing purposes. When this is done, working men will be able, under the Cheap Trains Act, to live in the suburbs, instead of in unhealthy centres. It is becoming plainer every day that decentralization must be the chief item in any feasible scheme of housing, and this can only be accomplished by keeping the price of land within reasonable limits.

We have now a new London County Council, which will at once be compelled to address itself to certain pressing problems. Both parties seem thoroughly determined to grapple with this Housing Problem, in which there ought to be no note of party politics. It is a question of humanity, and any feasible measure introduced will, we trust, command the support of the entire Council.

We wish we could say as much regarding the licensing of places of amusement. The Progressives are determined to purify public amusements, and to divorce them from drinking bars. The Chairman of a Music-hall Committee, in denouncing the Progressive policy, remarked that "if licences for the sale of drink were withheld, many places must shut their doors." A statement like this is the best argument why drink licences should be withheld, for it simply means that the amusement offered is not the chief thing which attracts people. Alderman Treloar must be hardly pressed for an argument when he can only see in the Progressive policy an interference "with a large business." Happily there are still left men of public spirit who prefer the public weal to commercial profit.

It is clear that the era of Democracy which was heralded a decade or two ago with a great flourish of trumpets, is so far from coming to pass that at present the very opposite is true, especially of the most democratic country in the world—the United States. We are really on the verge of a plutocratic regime so colossal and far-reaching that in a short time the whole wealth in the world is like to be concentrated in the hands of the very few. The recent gigantic amalgamation of "trusts" in America, for instance, has resulted in placing the whole control of £200,000,000 in the hands of three men, Messrs. Rockefeller, Pierpont Morgan, and Carnegie, who now completely sway the whole American iron and steel industry; 20,000 miles of railways; innumerable mines and oil fields; and, presently, the electric industry also is threatened. These men are under no authority; they are practically the dictators of the industrial resources and markets of the nation. This vision of irresponsible power opens up a very grave danger to the community.

In a recently-published volume dealing in a very outspoken manner with questions of Church Reform, the incumbent of a very populous parish in a crowded district of North London states, without reserve, that to a very great extent the Church of England has no longer any hold upon the class termed, rightly or wrongly, "intellectual," or upon "the masses." In support of the view, he quotes the utterance of a railway operative, who said:—

> It would take you years to make us chaps believe that that place (pointing to a church) has anything at all to do with us. We've no bad feeling against it; it isn't that, but it doesn't concern us, it's the paddock of the well-to-do. If we get inside, we don't feel comfortable or at home.

Much has, of late, been said of the unattractiveness and lifelessness of the pulpit, but the responsibility for such a state of feeling as that pointed to above, does not rest altogether in that, but rather with the selfish Christians who are content to go heavenward alone, and who do nothing to bring others to the knowledge of Christ.

Safeguards in the British constitution for the protection of minorities are capable of now and then being turned to undesirable uses. This was notably the case a fortnight ago when the time came for Mr. Samuel Smith to move his amendment to the Address, for the purpose of calling attention to the prevailing lawlessness in the Church. On the day when, in ordinary course, this would have been done, Mr. H. D. Greene (Shrewsbury) introduced his Public Worship Regulation Act (1874) Amendment Bill, and the Speaker ruled that this barred the motion from coming on. The Bill > has not the faintest chance of getting a second reading, but it will operate the whole Session to prevent any debate on the Church question taking place.

The promoters of the Church Discipline Bill waived their technical rights in favour of Mr. Smith, but Mr. Greene declined to do so; and so "by a mere technicality" nothing can be said on the subject in the House of Commons during the present Session. The case has a yet more serious aspect, for Mr. Smith adds:

> So far as I can see, these tactics may be repeated during every Session of this Parliament, and the same course may be followed on all burning questions, so that the rights of private members are virtually confiscated.

That such a rule of procedure ought to be modified becomes apparent when we reflect that "in the first half of the nineteenth century it would have almost closed the mouth of Cobden on Free Trade, of Lord Shaftesbury on the Factory Acts, of Grote on Vote by Ballot," and many other reformers.

Lord Salisbury's speech in the House of Lords, in reply to Lord Avebury's motion for the shortening of shop hours, was most disappointing and unsympathetic. Surely there was no need to ask for "further information as to the wishes of the classes concerned." Every shopkeeper in the country would welcome legislation in the direction of the diminution of the present long hours of labour. At present shopkeepers are compelled to remain open until late—especially on Saturdays—for two reasons: first, the unpardonable selfishness of purchasers, who delay their shopping until the last hour, while, in the majority of cases, they could easily shop much earlier; and secondly, the fear of competition amongst others of their trade. Legislation would at once sweep away both of these things. We are astonished that the Premier regards legislation as "an interference with the liberty both of the consumer and shopkeeper." But what of the liberty of the poor drudges who, according to the report of the Parliamentary Committee of 1886, work eighty-four hours per week—thirty hours longer than the time fixed by the Factory Acts?

Under the scheme for the re-organization of the British Army, an augmentation of at least 150,000 men is suggested—all the regiments to be maintained upon a war footing. If such be the case, the country, will, therefore, have an army of about 1,200,000 men to support in times of peace—a prospect which is far from assuring to those who believe that the creation and maintenance of such huge forces is in itself a public danger, and a menace to international peace. Add to this the statement made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, a few nights ago, that the present unhappy war had cost up to the date on which he spoke, no less than £81,500,000, with a weekly expenditure of about a million and a quarter, and it is not difficult to see what an intolerable burden war is.

A correspondent reminds us that on the death of Lord Selborne, the Marquis of Salisbury condoled with the House of Lords on the loss they had sustained, and added that it was getting the fashion to say only timid, weak-minded men became Christians. But he took that opportunity of pointing out how such an idea was refuted by the fact that two of the most powerful intellects of the century were earnest Christians, namely, Lord Selborne and Lord Cairns. This may well encourage those who are seeking to be soul-winners. And to these names must supremely be added that of our late beloved Queen Victoria, who since her death has been so highly praised by all the world. Who can estimate how much this universal appreciation is due to her having received Jesus as her Saviour, her Lord, and her God, and to the dignified Christian character which resulted from her faith?

The article by Dr. Anderson upon the punishment of criminals, to which we referred a fortnight ago, has called forth in the Times a valuable letter from Mr. Justice Wills. He is one of our most careful judges in pronouncing sentences, and he makes the confession that often in passing sentences upon habitual criminals he has felt that the penalty does not in any way help to protect society against the depredations of such men. The learned judge supports Dr. Anderson's contention that some provision should be made for saving the community from the crimes of confirmed evil-doers. Punishment has obviously failed—what is wanted, he says, is discipline.

We have often affirmed the same doctrine, but we emphatically add to it the note of the Gospel, which is that of reformation by regeneration. It is to be feared that the majority of our criminals have not the remotest notion that there exists a Gospel which can save them from sin—supposing them ever to feel any conviction of sin. Recently, certain Church Army evangelists have held missions in gaols. It is a new departure, but it would be well if it became universal in such establishments, to supplement the ordinary chaplain's ministrations.

Next month an International Anti-Alcohol Congress upon a large scale will be held in Vienna. The committee points out that Austro-Hungary, as compared with many other countries, is in its infancy as regards temperance work; and appeals to those connected with societies in other countries to help them by furnishing accounts of the progress made in those lands. England, the birth-place of the total abstinence crusade, certainly should respond fully to this cry for help, and we trust that, in addition to the official representation, some of those who can take up the question in its bearing upon evangelical work will attend, so that the subject may be presented in one of its most important aspects.

The report of the Edinburgh Asylum for the Insane, submitted last week by Dr. Clouston, calls attention to a serious increase last year in the number of cases, especially among artisans and labourers. Any question as to the cause of this would, he said, be most difficult to answer.

No disease depends so much on obscure, far-reaching, and complicated causes as mental disease. Heredity, education, circumstances, environment, occupation, personal principles, social surroundings, luck in life, and, above all, personal habits, come in as factors to keep a man's mental balance sound, or to upset it. I cannot get over the conclusion that the excessive use of alcoholic stimulants during times of brisk trade and high wages has to a large extent been the cause of the undue amount of mental disease which we have been called on to treat last year. We had, as a matter of fact, 115 cases, or about a quarter of the whole number of admissions, in which drink was assigned as either the sole or a contributory cause of the disease attacks.

And, judging from experience, we think it may fairly be concluded that this reason was only assigned in many of the cases after an attempt had been made to find another.

The scheme promoted by the Bishop of Chester for providing people's refreshment houses seems to have met with considerable success. As a business speculation it has paid—a dividend of 5 per cent. having been declared for the year 1900. The idea, it will be remembered, is prominently to offer for sale temperance drinks, intoxicants being also kept in stock and supplied to those who ask for them, but not advertised. All profits are devoted to philanthropic purposes. One thing insisted upon is that these establishments shall be equal in brightness to the attractive drinking saloons which allure so many. We may be thankful for whatever good there is in the scheme, so far as it goes. It is obviously a transitional work, and while we are waiting for State legislation, all private enterprises which seek to minimize the curse of strong drink deserve encouragement.

We are pleased to notice the splendid tone which at present prevails amongst theological students in so many of the Colleges. Quite a wave of religious fervour is sweeping over them, and in the recent Mission they were amongst the most willing helpers. This augurs well for the future. In particular, we rejoice that the necessity of preaching sound doctrine has seized the minds of the students. At the annual meeting of New College last week, the entire evening was given up to a discussion upon the need of giving greater prominence to Christian doctrine in preaching. The vote at the close showed how deep was the feeling in the matter. One of the speakers cited the case of Chalmers, who commenced his ministry by preaching ethics without the slightest spiritual result, and afterwards, when he preached the Gospel and preached it doctrinally, conversions were numerous.

Attempts are being made to reduce our conception of the Holy Spirit to the level of a mere influence or "energy." We are told that as heat comes from the sun, or fragrance from the flower, so the Spirit comes from God. It is pointed out that the admonition "Quench not the Spirit" suggests the Holy Ghost as a fire. True enough, but we must distinguish between emblems of the Spirit and the Spirit Himself. This text should be read in connection with Eph. iv. 30, where we are exhorted to "Grieve not the Spirit." It is obviously as impossible to grieve an "energy" as it is to wound the feelings of a fire!

Again, this second text reveals the nature of the fire which the first exhorts us not to quench. The fire of the Spirit is the fire of Love—a person who does not love you will never grieve over you! John well prophesied of Jesus, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." The baptism of burning love is what we need. The "fleshly lusts that war against the soul" must be consumed as the fuel in order that love to God may rise up as the flame.

Workers at evangelistic meetings will find a useful leaflet in Texts for Anxious Inquirers, by D. L. Moody (2s. 6d. per 100. Morgan & Scott). Inquirers are divided into nine classes, and separately provided for, with the insight which was characteristic of the great evangelist. "Evidences of Conversion, for Young Christians," by Rev. A. B. Earle, which appeared in our issue of February 14, forms a fitting addition to the leaflet.

As a striking illustration of the world-wide esteem for our late beloved and honoured sovereign, a correspondent sends the following, dated San Francisco, Cal., U.S.A.:—

The great Mechanics' Hall in this city, holding from 8,000 to 10,000 people, was recently crowded to excess, the occasion being the memorial service held in connection with the death of the noble woman, England's Royal Sovereign, Queen Victoria. The desire to be present was so great that enormous crowds filled the streets and surrounded the well-known centre. Seldom has there been such an outburst of profound feeling and sympathy. The crush was tremendous, and thousands were unable to get either into or near the building. San Francisco has seldom seen such gatherings. From all parts of the State of California the people came to do high and sorrowful homage to the most illustrious woman that ever graced a throne.

There are indications that the "realistic" kind of literature with which we have been afflicted during the past few years is becoming increasingly offensive to literary men. The flood of sensational stories let loose by supposed competent writers is really a prostitution of the writer's art. Apart from the moral question, a writer urges that the literary tone has been terribly lowered of late years in modern realistic productions. This is undoubtedly true, but the literary offence is a bagatelle compared with the moral offence. Latterly we have had a wholesale diffusion of literary poison, the fatal effects of which are everywhere apparent. We are thankful for any outside attempt made to arrest this state of things.

Higher Criticism Run Mad.

THE Encyclopædia Biblica is a new Dictionary of the Bible, brought out under the chief editorship of Prof. T. K. Cheyne, who is an accomplished Old Testament scholar, and a dignitary of the Anglican Church, of High Church sympathies. These facts, combined with his known leanings towards a radical form of Biblical Criticism, give a pronounced tone to this monumental work of scholarship. It represents the Advanced School, as Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible, which is being simultaneously published, represents the "Moderate" School of "Criticism."

A comparison of these two works presents many striking parallels and contrasts, but the publication of the second volume of the Encyclopædia Biblica, recently, brings us face to face with some startling results. One of the chief articles, indeed far the longest of all, is that on the "Gospels." This was entrusted to Professor Schmiedel, of Zurich, a critic well known on the Continent for his bold and unflinching attitude on the questions at issue. The result is a treatment of the Gospels which not only leaves them torn to pieces, and scattered to the four winds of heaven as records of fact, but which would deprive Christendom (if this article were right) of every shred of faith in the history behind the Gospels. Professor Schmiedel, indeed, plumes himself on not absolutely rejecting the historical element in the Gospels, for he retains as undoubtedly authentic the following five characteristic sayings of Jesus: (1) Mark x. 18; (2) Matt. xii. 31; (3) Mark iii. 21; (4) Mark xiii. 32; and (5) Matt. xxvii. 46. If the reader will verify these references and compare them, he will realize with a shock the length to which rationalistic critics go in their summary treatment of Scripture, and of the historic background of fact of which the Scriptures are the inspired record. Of course it was well known that, among extreme German and French Rationalists, this attitude had been long ago taken up. The extraordinary feature about this book is that room is openly and calmly made for the same attitude towards the "origins" of Christianity, by a company of Biblical scholars, speaking from within the enclosure, and with the ecclesiastical prestige, of the English National Church. The place of honour is given here to an article which overtly teaches (in effect) that the stupendous fabric of Christian faith and doctrine has been built on a vacuum!

It is well, however, that we are brought thus rudely face to face with a situation in which the Christian Church will have to choose between incompatible alternatives, i.e., either to build its faith absolutely and confidently on the historical records of the Gospel, or throw up all pretence that it has any basis whatever to rest on. We now see whither we were being led by these advanced critics: the soul in search of an historic Saviour, who has entrusted Himself to their care, is left orphaned, crying, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." The motto of these scholars a brief decade ago was "Back to Christ." Now they boldly affirm that there is no Christ to get back to. He is a wreath of mist on the far horizon, a bodiless phantom lost in the gloom of time, whose face and form no man can see.

An examination of this article leaves us with the following reflections:—(1) The critic who goes into the question of Christian "origins" needs faith in the Living Christ to safeguard him on his voyage into the distant past, or he will lose his way; (2) The Christian who knows "Him whom he hath believed" by the power of faith, is possessed of a criterion of truth, an initial equipment of personal experience, that makes him strong and confident in the very heart of the critical storm; (3) the curious phenomenon of a High Church party, which combines ruthless criticism of the Bible with an exaggerated deference to ecclesiastical tradition, is simply due to the fact that they have shifted the ultimate bases of authority in religion from the Book to the Church, whose councils and traditions take the place of the written Word as the last court of appeal. Do not let us forget, as it has just been expressed in a striking article in the Academy, that if such an attitude towards the Gospels became general, "we are much mistaken if the publication of this volume does not prove to be the most serious blow yet struck at Protestant Christianity." It is a far cry from Luther to Schmiedel; but Luther will be remembered when Schmiedel and his confrerès of the same school will be forgotten. For Luther built on the Living Word as testimony to the Living Christ.

Africa and Native Races.—I.

THERE are many problems to be dealt with during the forthcoming settlement of the South African colonies; but there is not one that is so difficult in its character, or likely to have such wide-spread and far-reaching consequences, as the future position of the native races in their relation to the white population. The relation of the Dutch and English sections will be almost entirely a matter of sentiment; there are no permanent disabilities to be dreaded on either side; whether the Boers and Dutch be now classed among rebels, or loyalists, or "combatants," the time will come when the quarrel which has divided them from the English will be a matter of history, and they will be equal citizens, enjoying the same rights and privileges in the eyes of the law. We may thoroughly rely on the new Government doing full justice to all white people in the future settlement. The only real question at issue is, how soon the vexed and troubled population can be entrusted with the full rights of citizenship.

The case of the native races is altogether different. These dark-hued peoples, from whom the country has been taken at one time or another, are formidable in many ways. First, in point of numbers. At present the whites are outnumbered by them at the rate of from five or eight to one. Of white people there are only about 800,000 south of the Zambesi; the natives, on the other hand, are variously estimated at from five to eight millions, and

INCREASING FASTER THAN THE WHITES.

When we inquire into the natural qualities of these races, and their capacity for civilization, we have answers that vary widely, according to the standpoint of the person dealing with it. From the purely capitalist point of view, they are the natural feeders of the South African labour market. In the mines, in the manufacturing districts, or the veldt farms, they are the hewers of wood and the drawers of water. The white man, with his instinctive sense of superiority, inevitably thinks of himself as the master, and of the natives as his servants (or slaves).

From the purely civilized and humanitarian point of view, however, many of these natives are far from being hopeless. A well-known writer who was brought up as a child among a tribe of these natives (her father being a Dutch missionary among them) is full of hope for them, and says that "those who know the 'Bantus'"—which is a generic name for the various so-called Kaffir, Bechuana, and Fingo tribes—"hope great things of them. They show a keen desire and pronounced aptitude for education, and some thousands are now educated; many more speak English; a small number are already employed in the Post Office and in other minor branches of the Civil Service; some have shops of their own; some are school teachers and clergymen, and there is a Kaffir newspaper (Imvo, King William's Town) owned and edited by a pure Fingo. The editor," the writer continues, "Mr. Teugo-Jabavu, is one of our most balanced and useful South African journalists. The Bantus are further remarkable for a wise political instinct, coupled with a marked capacity for standing together." It is clear that such a race is capable with adequate training of undertaking all the responsibilities and co-operative duties of civilized life.

From the spiritual point of view, the natives of South Africa have not shown any great aptitude for religious training. With signal and splendid exceptions, such as marked the labours of Dr. Moffat (in the case of Africander) and of King Khama and his people more recently, these tribes have not given anything like the welcome to Christianity that has been accorded to it in many of the South Sea islands. But missionaries in South Africa have been handicapped in their work by the peculiar social conditions.

THE BASIS OF TRIBAL TENURE

gave the chiefs despotic power over the rank and file; their power depended almost entirely on personal military ascendancy; and they have been, on the whole, violent opponents to the Christian faith. At the same time, it has been clearly shown that not one of these tribes is beyond the reach of the Gospel appeal, and in everyone that has been evangelized there have been produced splendid instances of Christian living and character. More than this has been shown. It has been clearly proved that there is nothing on earth but Christianity that can save these natives from the poisonous, soul-desolating touch of the white man's vices, and the white man's drink. If these races are not Christianized, they are doomed to extinction, like many other races whose names have now been forgotten, but which once throve over large areas of the earth's surface. If they are Christianized and educated, and trained for civil life, they may yet take their place with

THE PROGRESSIVE RACES OF THE WORLD.

What to do with the native of South Africa is thus a burning problem, and it will not be settled without a death grip between the forces that distinguish the civilization of the "natural man" and the civilization of Christianity. Just now there are clear signs of a "set-back" in the attitude of South Africans on the question. If this war is to lead to a fresh oppression of the coloured population, if their system by land tenure is to be violently disturbed, as has been more than once attempted in the Cape Parliament, if the inhumanities of the Boer are to be replaced by the inhumanities of the capitalist system, if the native is to be taxed in a new way in order to help to meet the tremendous expenses of this recent conflict, we are preparing for ourselves in South Africa a legacy of race hatred, and social disturbance, to which the differences separating British and Boers are as nothing. This vital subject needs to be resolutely faced by the English people.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—IX.

REPENTANCE: Its Nature, Necessity, and Place.

By JOHN GRITTON, D.D.

In every man who needs renewal, restoration and salvation, there must be repentance. He has sinned, and must be sorry. He has wandered, and must change his course. He is wrong, and must find his way to right and truth. His whole being has failed, and needs to be converted and renewed. He has dishonoured God, and must be wholly changed in mind before he can do the things which are well pleasing in His sight.

Only in a being without failure can there be found no need of Repentance; and only by the way of Repentance can an erring being come back to rectitude.

Holy Scripture puts Repentance in a very prominent place, and oftentimes insists on its importance and necessity.

No one need feel surprise that Repentance is, at the head of this article, termed a Foundation Truth of the Gospel. It certainly is good tidings that a wanderer may return, that the right way may be found by one who has missed it, and that one who is out of harmony with God can be so changed in mind and heart as to love Him and enjoy the Divine blessing of Life Eternal.

Granted, then, that Repentance is a truth of the Gospel, it will not be denied that it is fundamental, for clearly there must be a complete change in the heart and mind of a sinner before he can come to any comfortable enjoyment of the good things proclaimed in the Good News. We must be at peace with God before we bask in the sunshine of His favour.

Running through the whole English Bible, both in the Old Covenant and New Covenant Scriptures, we find the words Repent and Repentance. Let us examine the word as it is interpreted for us by the Hebrew and Greek words of which it is the representative.

We shall limit this inquiry to words in the original which represent a state of mind and conduct which is termed in the English Bible, Repentance.

There are many words in Hebrew which have some connection—closer or more remote—with the only two words which are translated Repent or Repentance. We may presently deal with them, but just now will take only the words "Nācham" and "Shūb." The second, as translated Repent, is found in 1 Kings viii. 47 and in Ezekiel, and there twice only (ch. xiv. 6 and xviii. 30). It occurs many times from Genesis to Malachi—rendered turn, return, turn again, always relating to action. It should be so rendered in the three passages given above. Practically Repent, Repentance, in the Old Testament represents one Hebrew word "Nācham."

This word never deals with action or conduct, but always with feeling. It represents to us the effect on the mind and heart of conviction of sin and misery and danger.

On turning to the New Testament, we find that Repentance is the same thing. Two words are used. The one "metamelomai" is used seldom, as in Matt. xxi. 29, 32; 2 Cor. vii. 8. The other, "metanoeō" is used often—both as verb and noun. Neither refers to action or conduct. Both indicate mental affection. One is a change of mind, the other a change of concern, or of interest, or of purpose.

No word could, in an inclusive way, more accurately represent the essence of both the Hebrew and the Greek than Repentance. It is trouble of mind, pain, regret, remorse. It has regard to wrong or sin, as making the man obnoxious to penalty. These considerations place on one side the Romish idea of Repentance as "doing penance" (pœnitentiam agere) and they shut us up to sorrow for sin or change of mind as being the essential in Repentance.

Thus the Gospel begins with the heart and mind, the conscience and judgment. It touches the springs of life. It goes behind conduct to motive, behind reformation to renewal. In some way or other a sinner is led to consider his ways. He discovers a Law which he has broken, or a penalty which he has incurred. He regrets the broken Law, and he dreads the resulting consequences. There comes to his mind and heart some knowledge of the Holy God whose commands he has despised, whose love he has neglected, and whose judgments he has defied. His knowledge may be limited to the Law of Works, or he may be led by the Holy Spirit into some acquaintance with the higher Law of Faith. Some revelation of the Lord Jesus shines into his heart. He knows that while there are many sins, of some of which, at least, he is guilty, the root sin—the one condemning sin, the sin of sins, the acme of transgression, lies here, that he has "not believed on the Son of God." With more or less clearness he sees himself an ungrateful sinner, because the love of God in Christ Jesus, the shame-bearing and agony of the Son of God on his behalf, have won from him nothing but neglect: unless, indeed, he has felt actual opposition to all this tender love, and has trodden under foot the Son of God and his atoning blood.

In whatever way and by whatever means, or to whatever degree, the convinced sinner comes to a just estimate of his sin, folly, and ingratitude, he feels shame, sorrow, regret, fear. His estimate of facts is changed: his mind touching himself and his course is changed; his thoughts of reward and punishment are altered; his view of God is no longer the same. He has, till now, put darkness for light, and evil for good, and bitter for sweet. Now he renounces the darkness, the evil, the bitter, as being what they really are; and, with a changed mind and judgment, beholds in light and goodness and sweetness the very possession which the Lord designs for him.

This is Repentance. The marvellous thing now is that an analogous change is manifested in God towards the sinner, which is as real as if the very mind of the immutable Jehovah were changed towards him. The convinced sinner cries out, "I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes" (Job xlii. 6), and there comes a voice "My heart is changed, my repentings are kindled together" (Hos. xi. 8). The humbled soul replies, "Thou art a gracious God, and repentest Thee of the evil" (Jonah iv. 2). Again and again it is written, "The Lord repented of the evil He thought to do" (Ex. xxxii. 14).

Ah wondrous blessedness of Repentance! The thoughts of the sinner and the thoughts of God brought into conformity—or even unison: the human judgment as to sin, conformed to the Divine judgment: the sinner's estimate of himself fashioned after that of God: the sinner's estimate of God growing into the truth and culminating in the blessed conviction that the Lord is good and that all his thoughts and will and law are "Holy and Just and Benevolent" (Rom. vii. 12).

So much, then, as to the beginning of Repentance within the heart. It begins there, but it follows the rule of Divine operation. Beginning internally, it manifests itself according to its nature in all possible ways. THERE IS CONFESSION TO GOD. Think of the Book of Psalms. It is largely the cry of the convinced and repentant heart. "God who commandeth all men everywhere to repent" will have them "repent and turn to God" (Acts xvii. 30; xxvi. 20). Listen to convinced and repenting Ephraim: "Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke; turn Thou me and I shall be turned, for Thou art the Lord my God. Surely after that I was turned I repented. I smote upon my thigh: I was ashamed and even confounded because I did bear the sins of my youth" (Jer. xxxi. 18, 19). "I said, I will confess my transgression to the Lord." "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." "The multitudes came to John Baptist, and were baptized of him in Jordan confessing their sins."

It is now time to revert to words in the Old Testament which are used along with "Nācham," and appear in places to be almost the same thing, but with this one distinction, that while "Nācham" expresses an inward change of mind and heart, these other words indicate something which follows as a proper consequence. The INWARD CHANGE LEADS TO AN OUTWARD TURNING. These words and forms are numerous, and they deal with a change of course. It is a sad reflection that in scores of passages the turning is in the wrong direction, away from God and holiness; but I have to do now only with the actual turning to holiness and God, which is the result of an inward change of heart, a turning away from evil to the Living God.

It will suffice to quote some few passages. "Turn ye from your evil ways." "Turn us, O God of our Salvation." "Turn you at my reproof." "Turn Thou me, and I shall be turned." "Repent, and turn yourselves from your idols." "Turn thou to thy God." "Let them turn, every one from their evil way." "Let us try our way, and turn to the Lord." "Take with you words and turn to the Lord."

Sin felt, sin confessed, sin turned from! Here is Repentance in more than its philological meaning. It is Repentance in essence and in fulness. It is the beginning and the perfection of Repentance. It is repentance unto life, a repentance not needing to be repented of.

May we not say that REPENTANCE IS INDISPENSABLE to Salvation? Certainly an unrepentant soul is an unsaved soul. Repentance has a more prominent position in the proclamation of the Gospel than is often recognised. May not this in part account for the powerlessness of much evangelistic work? Human faculties are limited, and are satisfied with half truths. We need much humility, much gracious teaching by the Holy Spirit, much abiding at the feet of the Lord Jesus, and much quickening of all our mental and moral faculties, before we can see and reverence and proclaim all Divine truth, and so proclaim it that it shall be proportionate and harmonious.

John the Baptist was largely the prophet of Repentance when he came proclaiming the Kingdom of God, and making ready the way of the Lord. "John the Baptist preached, saying: Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." "John did preach the baptism of repentance, unto the remission of sins." He said, "I indeed baptize you in water unto repentance." His message to men was this, "Bring forth fruits meet for repentance." Certainly, Repentance was imperatively necessary for the coming and opening of the Kingdom. Nor did the testimony cease with John. The Lord Jesus preached and said, "Repent ye, and believe the Gospel." "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." He upbraided the cities in which His mighty works were wrought, "because they repented not," and He declared that over the repenting sinner there was joy in heaven. His disciples understood this, and, in imitation of their Master, "they went out, and preached that men should repent." Do not say that all this was before Pentecost, and that now the only message is, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." When, before His ascension, the risen Saviour opened the eyes of the disciples' understanding, and gave them commission, what said He? "Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."

What was the message at Pentecost? "Repent and be baptized every one of you." "Repent ye therefore and be converted that your sins may be blotted out." What was the post-pentecostal Gospel? Was not this prominent? "God commandeth all men everywhere to repent." Did not they tell men, "that they should repent and turn to God"? Did they not proclaim concerning the Lord Jesus, "Him hath God exalted to give repentance to Israel"? They went forth "testifying to the Jews and also to the Greeks repentance toward God." They declared "that men should turn to God, and do works meet for repentance." Is it not the very formula of the Gospel Commission: "REPENTANCE TOWARD GOD, and FAITH TOWARD OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST"? (Acts xx. 21.)

A low estimate of sin may lead to a low estimate of Repentance, and may sink into a low estimate of Faith, and this again into a low estimate of Salvation. On the contrary—when the Holy Ghost works deep conviction of sin, there will follow a high sense of the imperative value and necessity of Repentance; and from this misery of conviction and from these pangs of Repentance, how gladly will men turn to Faith, and to the Salvation which is received by faith.

When we understand the harmony of Divine teaching, and find men repenting of sin; we shall have fellowship with Apostolic joy and glorify God because He hath given to men "Repentance unto Life."

When we apprehend the Divine purpose in the Gospel of Salvation we shall understand the statement of Paul (2 Cor. vii. 9-11) to the Corinthians: "I rejoice that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage of us in nothing. For godly sorrow worketh repentance to Salvation not to be repented of."

So necessary and so blessed is Repentance both in the Coming of Sinners to Christ, and in the Restoration of Saints to Holiness!

Victoria and Albert.—II.

An Appreciation on Behalf of the Poor.

By G. HOLDEN PIKE.

THE solicitude for the poor on the part of the Queen and the Prince Consort was also shown in what they did for the tenants on their estates, and for the labourers who were engaged on the royal farms. In his book relating to what the Prince did in this latter department, Mr. Morton shows that while showing love for his workpeople, and even respecting their prejudices, the Prince advanced their interests. As regarded the labourers,

> His Royal Highness believed that, if they were ignorant, it was because the means of education were deficient; if they were indolent, it was because they had little field for encouragement to exert themselves; if sometimes slovenly in their habits, it was because from poverty they were compelled to live in comfortless mud houses.

Although it involved large pecuniary outlay, the aim of the Queen and the Prince was to raise those who served them to a higher social and moral level. The labourers were better housed; at Balmoral, schools were erected for the children, while, as the joint gift of the Queen and Prince, a good library was founded, not only for those living on the estate, but for all who were within reach of its advantages. Thus it came to pass that persons of various classes regarded the Prince as an all-round benefactor of those who came within his influence. When Lord John Russell was unable to prevent the Queen's husband from visiting the dwellings of the poor, and from presiding at a meeting convened to promote their benefit, the Premier was still ingenuous enough to confess that he had > long thought the Prince's character very extraordinary for abilities, judgment, information, and a sympathy for all the sorrows and joys of his fellow-creatures.

There is ample evidence to show that the Prince Consort—the Queen being in sympathy with him—saw eye to eye with Lord Shaftesbury in regard to the danger which was incurred by allowing to hold on their way unchecked in London and other great towns. He anticipated the advanced ideas of many practical men of enterprise, who have since become benefactors of the people, by insisting that better dwellings for working people might be erected at a profit.

In London and elsewhere, a great deal has been done on the lines laid down by the Prince Consort, and it has been proved that his judgment was in nowise at fault.

In the earlier years of the late reign, both the Queen and the Prince Consort showed sympathy with various movements for conferring benefit on various classes. Even maid-servants came in for a share of attention, their case at that time being the more pathetic, because a large proportion of those who were worn-out were found to end their days in the workhouse. An adequate provision of good

RECREATIONS FOR WORKING PEOPLE

also received encouragement from the palace; and in this department what are still called ragged-schools in all parts of London are doing much on the lines which the late Queen and the Prince Consort would have approved. The Royal pair encouraged the Council of the Ragged School Union by sending a handsome donation for the work in 1849. In 1887, the year of the great Jubilee celebration, her late Majesty became Patron of that Institution; and during the memorable visit to Ireland in the spring of 1900—only nine months before her death—Queen Victoria sent a gift of £50 to the London Ragged School Union on behalf of its work. On this occasion the secretary was commanded to say that the donation was sent, > in consideration of the fact of her being the Patron, and as a mark of the Queen's sympathy with the Society's great work amongst poor and crippled children.

At the time of the Jubilee celebration the late Queen showed her interest in and sympathy with poor children in various ways. She became (as already intimated) patron of the Ragged School Union; a large number of children were entertained at her expense; her Majesty sent her autograph to be lithographed on the cards of those who took prizes at the schools. When their endeavours were thus countenanced by their Sovereign, the teachers and working staff were not only encouraged but were stimulated in their work.

When such were the characteristics shown by the Queen and the Prince Consort, it seemed to be quite a natural outcome when other members of the Royal Family showed similar tendencies. At the time interested persons did not fail to note in connection with the late Duke of Clarence, that his first appearance at a public function was in Whitechapel, and that his maiden speech in public was at a shoe-blacks' club. On the evening of the day on which the Duke died in the opening of 1892, a great party of 2,000 poor children was entertained at the People's Palace, a Christmas tree sent by the Princess May was a chief attraction. Indeed, the Princess, who is now the wife of the Heir-Apparent to the Crown, received quite a training as at the hands of her Christian mother, the late Duchess of Teck. In past days both mother and daughter were well known by sight to many of the poor in East London, now opening an Industrial Exhibition at the King Edward Ragged School in Spitalfields, at another time visiting the station of the late George Holland in Whitechapel. The interest in the welfare of the poor, of the late representative of the Cambridge branch of the Royal Family, seemed to be without limit, and she enlisted the co-operation of her distinguished relatives. At a "Harvest thanksgiving" at the King Edward School, we have seen fruit and flowers from royal gardens, including those at Windsor Castle. At Spitalfields there are still to be seen direct descendants of the original Huguenot settlers of two hundred years ago; and orders for the silk of matchless quality woven by these people have repeatedly come from the royal palaces. The death of the Duchess came to many of them like the loss of a personal friend. Her sympathy was with them; she had many winning ways of showing it; and as opportunity offered she would give them help of a tangible kind.

When national disasters happened, such as the collapse of the Tay Bridge, colliery accidents, and shipwrecks, the sympathy, or if necessary the aid, of the late Queen was always forthcoming. In the case of mishaps, of which the public did not hear so much, this sympathy was even more touching. Thus, two little boys, sons of a poor tenant at Balmoral, were drowned together whilst at play; and, in her "Journal," the Queen herself describes what occurred after the recovery of the body of the first:—

> We went in, and on a table in the kitchen, covered with a sheet which they lifted up, lay the poor, sweet innocent bairnie, only three years old, a fine plump child, and looking just as though it slept, with quite a pink colour, and very little scratched, in its last clothes, and with its little hands joined, a most touching sight. I let Beatrice see it, and was glad she should see death for the first time in so touching and pleasing a form. Then the poor mother came in, calm and quiet, though she cried a little at first when I took her hand and said how much I felt for her, and how dreadful it was.

There was nothing surprising when a daughter of the Queen, with such a motherly heart as this, was found laying the memorial-stone of a Holiday Home for Cripple Children at Southend. The Princess Louise—the present Duchess of Argyll—did this on one of the most memorable days ever known in the history of the town, a floral fête in the Pier Pavilion taking place after this ceremony.

Another daughter of the late Queen—H.R.H. Princess Christian—has a Holiday Home at Windsor, at which a dozen boys are entertained at one time. On the occasion of the opening of the new house in 1896, the Princess thus explained the origin and progress of this enterprise :—

In 1890, in response to an appeal made by Mr. Kirk on behalf of the London Ragged School Union Holiday Scheme, a small house was taken on Bachelor's Acre, Windsor, and during that and the following summer about 200 boys were given a fortnight's holiday. On the expiration of the lease, as it was thought that a more complete country life would be better for the boys, a cottage was rented on this ground, and each summer between 120 and 130 boys have enjoyed the advantages of fresh air, recreation, and good food, combined with the softening influence of a happy home life. From the first the Queen became an annual subscriber of £10, and I supported the work; but since the removal to Bishopsgate I have been able to take a personal interest in the boys. Last autumn, on being informed that the old cottage was no longer fit for habitation, I felt it would be a disgrace for the work to come to an end in this neighbourhood. After ascertaining that no suitable house was obtainable, I determined to make myself responsible for the land, and to throw myself on the generosity of kind friends to supply funds for building and furnishing a cottage capable of containing twelve boys, with a man and his wife in charge. The beautiful little house, which I trust all present will inspect, testifies to the hearty response which met my appeal.

A crowning example of the way in which this sympathy of the Royal Family found expression occurred at the time of the late Queen's Diamond Jubilee. The present King and Queen then attended a great dinner given to a large number of cripple children at the People's Palace, when the former made a speech on behalf of the Princess who had collected the funds which were dispensed by the Ragged School Union.

These are something more than mere pleasant national memories. They seem to show, that in sympathy for the poor, and in acts of charity, the British Royal Family since the late Queen's accession have

OUTRIVALLED ALL WHO CAME BEFORE THEM.

According to common report, since Queen Victoria's death the personal estate, amounting to considerably over half-a-million sterling, is less than was expected, and for obvious reasons: "The amount given away by Queen Victoria in private charity, and of which the public never heard, amounted to a larger sum than the whole of the private fortune she leaves behind her." Then again: "During the war immense sums were drawn from this account. Women having four or five sons at the front were frequent recipients of the late Queen's generosity, but besides this class of recipient there were many others." Thus in actual open-handed generosity, as well as in that Christian sympathy which is worth more than money, both Victoria and Albert were exemplars to the people.

The Countess Schimmelmann.

In spite of the opposition offered to the Countess Schimmelmann by her own countrymen and others during her recent evangelistic tour in Germany, most encouraging results have been the outcome of her labours. At one centre where services were held, in addition to numbers of conversions, much good was done in other directions. A young man who had been imprisoned several times for robbery was reclaimed, and found employment in a Christian home. A husband and wife who had lived separate for many years were reunited. A Roman Catholic princess was deeply impressed by the devotion of the Countess, and longed for a similar experience of living union with Christ as that of his servant.

A body of Spiritualists gathered in full strength to hinder the progress of a Gospel meeting. Such was the power of the service that the leaders of the disturbance were overcome by the Spirit, and ultimately prayed for mercy. To use the Countess's own words—"Every fight brings victory if fought with Christ." Countess Schimmelmann hopes to spend a fortnight in England, arriving in this country about the 20th inst. Communications for her may be addressed to Mr. John McCall, Burgh Heath, Epsom.

The Jesuits in France.

In a recent issue of Le Siècle an important letter on this subject was reproduced. Originally written in 1898, it emanated from one who had been a pupil of the Jesuits for several years, and thoroughly understood their principles and practices :—

"By the rules of his Order, by its habits and special influences, the Jesuit is bound to bring up the children in such a way as to make them into soldiers. The Jesuit colleges are, above all, seminaries for officers, establishments from which young men issue, permeated with military ardour, and the conviction that there is nothing so fine and noble as to bear a sword. I saw all my school-fellows profess a genuine disdain for the peaceful occupations which support society—agricultural, industrial, mercantile, even of magistrates, lawyers, and deputies. All were considered of an inferior caste, in fact to be despised. There was nothing worth being except an officer or a large and idle proprietor. Every pupil on leaving college is thus given the impetus to enter the school of arms. . . .

"You see now the possibility of the Jesuits having command of the army, and through the army of France. That it is their design to make a conquest of France, and that they have the intention of obtaining definite by means of the military element, I am perfectly convinced. It is not necessary, in order to realize their object, that they should have the majority on their side, nor even a large number of officers. The head of the Army will be sufficient. The consent of a single individual, Bazaine, was sufficient to obtain the surrender of 180,000 men, and the constant and odious attacks of the military dictatorship against General Billot shows clearly the necessity of putting another in his place. It cannot be denied that the motive of these attacks was the partisanship of General Billot for the revision of the Dreyfus trial.

"Do the Jesuits desire the conquest of France for the triumph of religion? Not at all. The ruling passion of the Jesuit is desire for power and authority, wholly for the joy of feeling himself master, and to see his Order before all others. His whole soul is possessed with an insatiable appetite for domination, and the symbol which suits him best is not the Cross, nor even the censer, but the sword. And as the Jesuits are the only powerful organization of priests in France, they have become—and, I should say, certain Republicans have helped to make them so—the chiefs of the whole Catholic party, and of the Conservative party, which, under such chiefs, I assure you, make good progress."

A special correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, in an interview article on "Church and State in France," appearing on February 26, dealt with the subject at great length. He wrote:

"The most thoroughly representative man on the Government side is perhaps, M. Yves Guyot, whose name is favourably known in England. An ex-Cabinet Minister and a most influential journalist, M. Guyot has done more than most statesmen to bring this question within and his suggestions for its final solution seem to his friends and his opponents certain to be adopted in the end.

"'There is nothing very sudden about the movement,' M. Guyot remarked. 'The problem has been staring us in the face ever since the fall of the Empire, and has been either awaiting a settlement or receiving sham solutions ever since. The religious congregations are a State within a State. But they are not merely that. They also possess a terrible solvent force, and, like the strong vinegar that bursts granite rocks, are capable of undermining the most solid edifice raised by the most united people. In England you can hardly realise this, because you are a Protestant race, and in your country the confessional is as yet a very narrow channel, not a vast network of tubes for the distribution of poisonous forces. In France, on the contrary, we are which sweep away the ground from under our feet whithersoever we turn, in Parliament, in the Press, in the ranks of the army, in the general staff, on the bench, everywhere.'

"'But,' I objected, 'the Republic seems to have thriven very well in spite of it all, and is perfectly able to hold its own against the alleged machinations of the religious orders.'

"'There, now you have just touched the nerve centre of the present movement,' M. Guyot exclaimed. 'If the Republic has come unscathed out of the trying ordeals to which the congregations have subjected her, it is because our Republican statesmen, politicians, and journalists have been concentrating all their efforts on this one work of defence against the worst of all enemies, the domestic foe. Ever since the promulgation of the Third Republic, the congregations have been sedulously employed at their work of destruction, and we Republicans have been forced to expend all our time, thought, and toil in thwarting their schemes, instead of turning our hands to something really productive and beneficial to the country at large.'

"'But,' I interposed, 'if the conspiracies you allude to were real and formidable, surely the world would have heard something about them. They would have left visible traces in history. Can you point to any?'

"'Most assuredly I can. The country set to work to re-organize its military forces, whereupon the Jesuits, foreseeing the increasing force and popularity of the army, resolved to lay its grip upon the General Staff, and thus get the army in its clutches. And they went about it most cleverly.

THEY OPENED SCHOOLS

for the training of officers for the army and navy, and they managed to have their pupils received with open arms. All means that seemed to them effective were employed to further their schemes. The army chiefs were got hold of in the confessional, some directly, others through their pious wives. And whenever this underhand influence seemed insufficient, it was supplemented by measures which the most lax moralist would find it very hard to justify. For instance, in order to facilitate the passage of their pupils from the school to the mess-room, they had the secret examination papers of the State Commission surreptitiously revealed to their scholars before the examination took place, and the people then wondered at the proficiency of the pious young men and at the educational skill of their experienced teachers. No wonder that establishments of this kind flourished in consequence. No wonder that parents who wished to give their children a helping-hand at the outset sent them to be trained in the schools of the Jesuits, and other analogous orders and congregations. It was a short cut to success.'

"'But what,' I asked, 'was the aim and object of all this interference on the part of the congregations?'

"'At first it was purely and simply the overthrow of the Republic and the restoration of the Monarchy. That plan, however, was baulked by the merest of accidents. Then the Pope, for whom the congregations toil and moil, suddenly changed his tactics. Hoping nothing from Protestant Germany, and everything from a priest-ridden France in alliance with Russia, he suddenly veered round, recognised the Republic, and caused his followers here to do likewise. In this way he hoped to get the management of the Republic into his own hands through the all-powerful congregations.'"

Gospel Work on the Riviera.—Mr. E. C. Newbury (evangelist, Bel Respiro, Nice) has published in "'Thou Shalt Find It' at the Great Exhibition (Eccles. xi., 1)," an interesting record of sowing and reaping and answered prayers on the Riviera. With the help of a number of friends, work is now carried on around five mission halls—at Nice, Villefranche, and Monte Carlo, in France; and Pigna and Camporosso, in Italy; and the position of the work is that they "never were surrounded by more earnest hearers than at present."

Continental Work

UNDER COMMISSIONER AND MRS. BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

SIMPLE salvation work in Belgium and Holland has recently been brought into bold relief through the intense popular feeling pervading these countries on account of the war in South Africa. But the very difficulties which surround men and women (especially foreigners) labouring for the Kingdom of Christ, bring into unusual prominence the value at such testing times of the central principles of primitive Christianity.

The promise of "all things working together for good" has been fulfilled again and again in the most striking way; and especially has this been the case when the public mind has been violently and suddenly tossed from idle dreams of man-made peace to stern realities of war and race hatred. Amid such scenes we have been privileged to see to exceptional advantage how a simple unalloyed faith in God's Word and promises, and a corresponding unbelief in the false hopes and human remedies of the unregenerate, can keep Christians from the snares of worldly wisdom, and make such pitfalls turn even to the advantage of their salvation work.

The Spirit of God has been most remarkably poured out. Our officers' councils have been times of veritable baptism. Love and unity have reigned most blessedly. Race questions have been utterly lost sight of. The distant thunder of war, so productive of popular passion and excitement, has only helped to deepen spiritual life and peace in our ranks; and furnish, by its parallels, striking incentive to salvation war of the most desperate kind.

I write from the midst of special meetings in Brussels. The most beautiful hall of the city, the Grande Harmonie, has been crowded the last two evenings, my dear wife, the Marechale, being announced to speak.

More than a thousand people, mainly of the upper classes, were present each night, and the order and attention were perfect. "Never have I beheld anything like this," said one of the literati to me, as he gazed on that

SILENT CROWD OF UPTURNED FACES.

"I have known this city for a lifetime, and all about its public gatherings. This is unique: such attention, such respect, and yet public meetings are often so disturbed."

A gentleman writes:—"On returning home I cannot resist the desire to express my gratitude for this wonderful evening;" and after a page of astonished admiration at the new world which had opened to him, he adds, "Ah! if your ideal is after all but a dream, it is a beautiful one indeed. Our hearts tortured by doubt prevent us from accepting your faith. But we bless you, nevertheless." A young tutor writes: "I have come from the presence of something infinitely high and holy. Never in my life have I passed such hours, or felt the presence of God so wonderfully."

On the platform—facing that worldly audience—were Belgian witnesses to the power of the Christ of the resurrection, and not alone to the Christ of the crucifix, the only one these populations know.

Here is a fine-looking man, the chief shopkeeper of a provincial town, who when, out of curiosity, he gave me hospitality three years ago, was an infidel with a worldly wife and a bigoted Catholic mother-in-law. Prayer was answered as with a flash. The entire family were soundly converted. The shop was closed on Sunday, in spite of neighbourly forebodings of ruin. Fixed prices were adopted, bargaining was discarded, the protecting faithfulness of God was manifested, and ever since then our comrade takes part in uniform in meetings on Sundays on the street before his own closed shop door, and visits with us the cafés of the town as sergeant of the corps.

Brigadier Van Rossum, 79, rue Neuve, Brussels, will be glad to give any English visitors information about the work, or letters could be addressed to our home, 139, Weesperzyde, Amsterdam. A. S. B.-C.

Troops and Troopships.

SAD and sorrowful are the spectacles witnessed by the Misses Perks and their helpers from the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, in their troopship visitation, as one after the other of these great ships discharge their freight of invalids and wounded troops. These noble men deserve well of their country, for they have heroically fought, ungrudgingly bled, and uncomplainingly suffered hardships on the battlefield; and now they return from the war terrible wrecks—arms, legs, and eyes missing, some bearing shocking facial disfigurements, others emaciated through fever, and some even too far gone to take the nourishment provided by devoted friends. It is painfully evident that these poor fellows are just home to die. Those who talk of the glories of war, and delight in recitals of carnage and gore, should see these sad evidences, and remember that they are mothers' sons and wives' husbands.

On Saturday week two ships arrived, one in the morning and the other in the afternoon, with invalids and wounded

GLAD TO GET HOME.

Miss Perks said: "We are thankful to our Heavenly Father that we have the opportunity and privilege of telling these dying and distressed ones the story of his love." When lavender bags were given them, one patient said: "This is very refreshing—like the name of Jesus, as 'ointment poured forth,' fragrant to those who know Him." The same day two ships also embarked troops, so that it was a busy time. As the Gospel message was told clearly and earnestly, many eyes became moist, and many hearts tender. From the hearty handgrip and "God bless you," it was evident that work for eternity had commenced. Many gave their names and addresses, desiring to be kept in touch with the Winchester Soldiers' Home by letters and literature.

THIS IS A CHRIST-LIKE WORK, and should be heartily supported. Help is urgently needed, also for the soldiers' families, widows and orphans.

Another important branch of effort is that among soldiers on Salisbury Plain. Since the commencement of the manœuvres there, the Misses Perks have pitched their tents every year in the midst of the thousands of soldiers gathered for the summer training and autumn manœuvres; there is virtually a Soldiers' Home on the Plain. One tent is used as a reading and writing room, another for temperance refreshments, and one for Gospel services. Eternity alone will reveal what has been done there. Numbers saved in those tents have gone home to God by way of the battlefield in South Africa. The work does not cease when the troops leave; they are followed all through their military career, and many go back to civil life to do missionary work at home and abroad. The Misses Perks would be glad to have the fellowship of the readers of The Christian in their great work. Immediate help of £500 is needed for the general work, and £100 for purchasing and fitting a new tent for the Salisbury Plain work. Thos. M. Wintle.

China and the Opium Trade. — The Christian Union for the Severance of the Connection of the British Empire with the Opium Traffic has issued an important circular dealing with matters bearing on our present and future relations with China. It is argued "that this country has not yet, in any adequate degree, realized the gravity of our China difficulty, or the incalculable importance of the issues involved" in the present struggle. A quotation is given from a letter from Rev. T. G. Selby, in which he says that "whilst the opium trade is not one of the grievances prominently put forward in connection with the present rising, the rankling sense of it is always in the background." From a large acquaintance among British missionaries in China, the secretary (Mr. B. Broomhall) is able to say that their unanimous testimony is substantially the same. It is pointed out that "if at this juncture we resolved to abolish our Indian opium trade, it would be a pledge to China of our willingness to treat that country with fairness, and could not fail to be an influence for good in our negotiations."

Famine Sufferers in India.

BY REV. DENNIS OSBORNE, OF POONA.

I AM sorry to notice the subsidence of interest in the recent widespread, terrible famine in India, on the part of generous friends in Great Britain, as evidenced by the rapid and very serious fall of contributions in aid of the sufferers.

The impression seems to be that the famine is over and all its claims past. Neither of these assumptions is correct.

THE FAMINE IS NOT OVER.

It is greatly reduced in extent, but in the districts to the South of Poona, whence I write, it still rages most acutely. Thousands of persons are still on Government relief, and the number is daily increasing and threatens to multiply rapidly. In an interview graciously accorded to me in January last by the Viceroy, His Excellency affirmed this, and the Government returns have since abundantly confirmed it.

Nor is distress and suffering limited to these regions. To suppose such a thing would be unreasonable. That more than 5,000,000 of people should have been upon the edge of starvation barely six months ago, but that they are now hearty and settled in their old occupations so prosperously as to be beyond suffering or need, is a supposition which carries contradiction upon its face. The fact is that even in tracts where the famine is over, it will take the sufferers months to recover themselves, and until then they will urgently need help.

But the most urgent need is on behalf of the waifs of both sexes, who have been rescued in the famine.

UPWARDS OF TEN THOUSAND ORPHANS

gathered in by missionaries and other workers cry out for food, clothing, shelter, and Christian training. The claim on Christian charity on their behalf was never so pressing as now. Having gathered them in, can we now abandon them to perish? Having saved them from starvation, must we now, for lack of means, give them over to perils deadlier than death?

It is for the Christian people of Great Britain to ponder this question prayerfully, and to answer it by their prayers, godly sympathy, and holy benevolence. Through the generosity of The Christian, most timely and needed help, money, food and cloth-stuffs for clothing have already reached these sufferers with the warmest acknowledgments from the grateful workers. They have been the means of saving thousands. Will the Lord's kind stewards continue to fill the hands of the missionaries with the fruits of their sympathy and compassion, so as to enable them to carry forward their work of distribution with increased encouragement and effectiveness? Let not our friends at home stay their hands at this crisis under any mistaken apprehension of the situation; but let them pour out their offerings into the laps of the sufferers, with prayers for their complete bodily and spiritual deliverance.

In the above communication, Mr. Osborne expresses the views and desires of the missionaries (of many organizations) who labour in the affected areas. Appeals of a similar nature reach us week by week, and we trust that the generosity of our readers will enable us to forward such a measure of aid to the missionaries as will enable them to deal satisfactorily with the present serious condition of affairs.

Zambesi Industrial Mission.—The latest Occasional Paper quotes numerous notes of praise for prayer answered, accompanied by pleas for further intercession. Mr. Rowland (Ailsa Craig Station) writes: "The industrial work of the station brings together at roll-call every morning about 100 people. These have a hymn sung to them, a portion of Scripture read, and prayer offered: besides which, once, sometimes twice, each week a Gospel address is given. Then what numberless opportunities the work affords of inculcating truthfulness, honesty, temperance, love, cleanliness, order, the proper standing of woman and her rightful place, the Christian law of marriage (polygamy is so general here), and the duty of keeping the Lord's Day."

Death of Major Whittle.

ON Monday evening a cablegram reached us from East Northfield, in the following words: "Major Whittle peacefully entered rest to-day."

This news from Mr. Will R. Moody notifies us that another great blank has been made in the ranks of the world's evangelists. Mr. D. L. Moody's death, rather more than a year ago, has now been followed by that of his friend of long standing and fellow-labourer in the Gospel. America has received many benefits from Britain, but in some respects the debt has been richly paid. Once and again have messengers of the Cross come to us across the Atlantic with loud calls from God to the churches and to the community at large. Two such voices have been thus recently stilled, and with bowed heads we mourn the loss. The world is the poorer, but they have entered into their rest and reward, and their works do follow them.

Major Whittle had been laid aside from active work through illness for many months, but his thoughts dwelt much on the work he loved. Last Christmas from his invalid chamber he addressed the following touching message to his friends, accompanied by the poem which we also give below:—

A PERSONAL MESSAGE.

(Dictated.)

Dear Friend,—During the past two years of my illness many messages of kindness and sympathy have come to me directly or indirectly from you, which I have been unable suitably to acknowledge. It is a comfort and pleasure to me therefore, at this Christmastide, to be able to send you a message of greeting and love.

My heart is filled with gratitude to God for our fellowship here below, for all that your life has been to me, and for the hope of meeting you soon in the presence of our Lord.

Through my wakeful hours, my greatest comfort has been in praying for you and yours and for your work for Christ. May God comfort you in all your future experiences by the comfort wherewith I have been comforted.

O magnify the Lord with me,
And let us exalt his name for ever.

Yours in Christ,
D. W. Whittle.

To a large number of our readers we are assured that the news will bring a keen sense of personal loss. The Major's circle of friends in Britain was wide. To a large company he stood in the relation of a spiritual parent. Not a few of these preceded him, and were among the host who welcomed him within the veil.

Naturally grave in demeanour, his early experience of military life in the Seventy-Second Illinois regiment seemed to confirm and strengthen this trait in his character. Knowing the meaning and value of discipline as the civilian rarely does, the great fact of sin was ever present to his mind, as well as the position of the sinner in relation to the broken law of God. He was sent home severely wounded after the battle of Vicksburg in 1863; and has himself put on record that when a few days later he was asked to make a speech at a patriotic rally, a ringing cheer greeted him before he could open his mouth, and on looking round he found that the cheering was led by Mr. D. L. Moody.

Major Whittle had no faith in any preaching which did not find its roots in "clear views of God's remedy for sin." Substitution was the mainstay of his own preaching; and he was wont to say that he had never seen souls come into the light, nor had the evidence that a man or woman was born again and reconciled to God, by any other view of the truth. There was nothing that savoured of sensationalism. Nor did he hold out an easy way of being saved. To the sinner his word was, "Flee from the wrath to come," and all who would escape must pass under the blood, by the way of the Cross.

Whatever the nature of his audience, Major Whittle was clear and logical, proving alike the need and the sufficiency of the grace. To Christians he was an instructor deeply taught of God himself, and therefore qualified to communicate to others in all good things. He placed great importance on the accompanying of evangelistic effort by Bible readings and any other means available for the stirring up of older Christians, and the instruction of converts.

Yet his preaching was not severe in any ordinary sense of the term. Children understood him and loved him dearly. He could present to the little ones the Saviour who loved them and had gone to prepare for them a home in heaven, and his labours among them were richly blessed.

Major Whittle's connection with Mr. D. L. Moody was a very old one. He says himself, "I was present at the first Bible Reading he (Mr. Moody) ever gave, and shall never forget the intense interest with which the themes he presented opened up before his own mind, and this interest he imparted to his audience."

The two evangelists were closely allied in their work, and it was a matter of satisfaction to not a few of their friends when it was announced that Mr. Will R. Moody had found his future wife in Major Whittle's household, so that the children of this family have the two leaders in Christian work to look back to as their grandfathers.

To many Major Whittle is known as the biographer of Mr. P. P. Bliss. "The two faithful and consecrated men were as brothers" from the hour they met in Chicago. It was in Major Whittle's house, and at the time of their first meeting, that Mr. Bliss wrote "I am so glad that Jesus loves me" and "Hold the Fort." These workers had much fellowship in the Gospel, but on December 14, 1876, they held their last joint Gospel service. When the report came of the disaster by which his friend was called home, the Major hastened to the scene, but no traces of the loved one were ever found. Many stricken ones were there seeking friends, from among whom the man of God found trophies for his Master's crown.

Major Whittle possessed the poetic gift as well as that of a preacher in no ordinary degree. He did not obtrude his personality before the public, and so it may still be news to some of our readers that the pieces in "Sacred Songs and Solos," published over the signature of "El Nathan," were from his pen, including that universal favourite, "There shall be showers of blessing." For some years he worked in happy evangelistic partnership with Mr. James McGranahan, who composed the music to many of the Major's hymns.

He had, too, a message of consecration in song. The hymn "Moment by Moment," which immediately become popular wherever the English language was spoken, was one of his compositions, and the music was by his daughter, Mrs. W. R. Moody.

MIDNIGHT CHIMES.

Written by Major Whittle during a sleepless night, while listening to the chimes of a little bed-room clock.

Swift, with melodious feet,
The midnight hours pass by;
As with each chiming bell so sweet
I think, "My Lord draws nigh."

I see Heav'n's open door,
I hear God's gracious voice:
I see the blood-washed 'round the throne,
And with them I rejoice.

It may be that these sounds
Are the golden bells so sweet,
Which tell me of the near approach
Of the Heavenly High Priest's feet.

Not every night is thus:
Some nights with pain are drear.
Then I join my moan with creation's groan,
And the chimes I do not hear.

But the Lord remains the same,
Faithful He must abide;
And on his Word my soul I'll rest,
For He is by my side.

Some midnight, sleepless saints,
Made quick by pain to hear,
Shall join the glad and welcome cry,
"The Bridegroom draweth near!"

Then shall I see his face,
His beauteous image bear;
I'll know his love and wondrous grace,
And in his glory share.

So sing my soul in praise,
As bells chime o'er and o'er,
The coming of the Lord draws near,
When time shall be no more.

The Essence of Scripture.

PROFESSOR MARGOLIOUTH'S LECTURES.

PROFESSOR MARGOLIOUTH delivered, at Exeter Hall last Wednesday, the fourth lecture of his course—the subject for the day being "Biblical Poetry and other Poetry." Referring to the fact that in early ages writing was practised only by a few, and on cumbrous materials, the lecturer traced the use of various devices employed for aiding the memory. Many of these had an arithmetical basis, the words or syllables in a line being numbered, and the lines themselves counted; and this practice prevailed in India and other Eastern countries. Much effort was bestowed on "the packing" of as much instruction or information as possible into the sentences, and this style of writing is represented in Scripture by the Ten Commandments or Ten Words.

Examples of another method which was much used are to be found in the Alphabetical Psalms. "Rhyming letters" were in use in Arabia, the ordinary name for poetry being a word also meaning "stringing," and poetry was an accompaniment of the dance. Some pieces have an astronomical connection. At other times the dance seems to express the pleasure felt at a visit from a god, or the wish to serve him.

Dr. Margoliouth explained the great importance attached by the ancients to satirical utterances; and by quoting the punishments attaching to them, showed the fear of them which was widely felt. The belief in connection with Balaam, that whoever he should curse would be accursed, and that his blessing would be equally effectual, could be easily paralleled from the history of Arabian poetry. The "satire" and "encomium," which are technical terms in Arabic poetry, correspond to "blessing" and "cursing" as used in the book of Numbers in connection with

THE STORY OF BALAAM.

The theory of the power of words, apart from their meaning, led the loftiness and sublimity of verses to be regarded as providing a potent weapon against an enemy, and the satirist was often regarded as the champion of his tribe.

A well-informed writer of the third Mohammedan century gives a list of tribes that were ruined by the satire of poets, and gives specimens of the verses which produced this result. Eulogy was generally powerless to counteract a satire which had been previously uttered. So the powers accorded to Balaam were not altogether of a supernatural character, seeing that as a great poet and satirist the people probably believed it to be in his power to ruin the Israelites as a nation. The taking of him to the mountain reminds us that lampoons are thought of as shot at their victims.

The imprecations, combined with ridicule, which we have in the prophets regarding foreign nations, bear some resemblance to a foreign style of writing. Ezekiel, especially, seems to reproduce the harsh and painful style common in Arabic, which renders it almost impossible to reproduce some passages in a modern tongue. But the resemblance is never close.

After the confusion of enemies, the emotion of love is one which finds most expression in poetry. The effect of Pantheism on this literature was traced to show that as the position of woman changed, the warm language came to be applied to the objects of worship. On the mystical side it was shown that while a representative is found in the Song of Solomon, that book must not be put on a level with other poetry of the period. Those who interpret the Psalms as secular poems in praise of the kings and not of God, should remember that in no one of them is a king spoken of in the language of encomium, and close examination shows that the claimants for Messianic explanation have even a stronger case than at first sight appears.

In Biblical poetry the praises of God are true and worthy; among heathen those of their gods are untrue and unworthy. Whereas the Psalms lose little by translation, other hymns in the most scholarly translations are contemptible.

THE LATE PROFESSOR

F. Hermann Krüger:

PARIS EVANGELICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

WHEN the Franco-German War broke out, in 1870, a band of students of theology in the Protestant faculty at Strasburg, being exempt from the conscription as it existed in France at that time, volunteered for ambulance work. Among them was Friedrich Hermann Krüger, one of the many Alsatians bearing German names, who were nevertheless ardently French by attachment and education; and who, after the war, left their native land for ever, rather than forfeit their nationality. Exposure brought on lung disease, which made such rapid strides that it was with very little hope of saving his life that M. Krüger was sent to Pau, in the Pyrenees, where his half-brother, seventeen years his senior, was at that time pastor of the Eglise Libre. With God's blessing and the climate of Pau, and the careful nursing of his sister-in-law, he was restored to a fair degree of health. Here I met him in the spring of 1874, and was at once drawn to him by hearing how, during the previous winter, being unable to leave his sick room, he had invited a few Protestant young men to join him there for a weekly Bible-class, with the result that every one of them, five in all, had been converted. They are all still living, and bearing a faithful witness to Christ—so I was told when visiting Pau once more the year before last.

Having completed his studies, and passed brilliant examinations in the Protestant faculty of Montauban, M. Krüger was for a while engaged in ministering to the spiritual needs of the Evangelical Christians at Schiltigheim, near Strasburg, where a Liberal (Rationalist) pastor had been appointed. In the family which there entertained him, he ultimately found his devoted wife. A mission to Algeria, a visit to England, finally the establishment in Basutoland of a Theological College for the training of native evangelists and pastors in the French Protestant Mission there, were subsequently used as preparations for his true life-work. Failure of health compelled his return to Europe from South Africa within less than two years. Restoration to health was soon followed by his appointment to be Professor at the Mission House in Paris, where he remained for fourteen years, till the early summer of 1899, when the terrible malady, a species of cancer, which has deprived French Protestantism of one of its brightest ornaments, rendered work no longer possible. The complaint declared itself shortly after his return from a journey of inquiry to Madagascar, in company with Pastor Lauga, of Rheims, which led to the establishment of the French Protestant Mission in that island. After being for more than two years face to face with death, he passed away at Basle on July 21 last. He had loved his Saviour from childhood, the impressions made at his mother's knee (he lost his father in infancy) having been deepened by the instructions of a pious Strasburg pastor. In the last weeks of his life that Saviour drew so near to his chamber of suffering as to fill his whole soul with radiance, and compel him, who had usually been reserved as to his spiritual experience, to tell of the wonderful grace bestowed upon him.

Hermann Krüger was, first of all, a profound theologian. His early study of the great series of prophecies contained in Isaiah, chapters xl.—lxvi., his latest work on the first eight chapters of Romans, with various contributions to French and German theological magazines on other portions of Scripture, remain in attestation of this. He was an accomplished linguist, with a wide range of both ancient and modern languages. Indeed, with the one exception of natural science, there was hardly a department of human knowledge in which he did not excel.

But missions to the heathen constituted his life-interest, and to them he dedicated all his powers. First, by training the future missionaries of the Paris Society. Two years ago, I had the privilege of attending one of his Greek Testament classes. He was going through the life of the apostle Paul, and the subject for the day was the address to the elders of Ephesus. He pointed out to his pupils how the apostle began by reciting events which were familiar to his hearers, the incidents of his sojourn amongst them, and, having thus won their sympathy, proceeded to the exhortations that they needed. M. Krüger commended to his pupils this example, which he illustrated by that of a successful missionary of their own Society, who would sit down by the roadside with some heathen Basuto whom he met, begin by talking to him about the weather and the crops, and then de fil à aiguille ("from thread to needle," a familiar phrase in French) would lead them on to those higher truths of which they were so ignorant, and leave in their midst some germ of thought that might develop to life eternal. In connection with the apostle's picture of his ministry at Ephesus, M. Krüger quoted a passage in a letter of Pastor Harms, of Hermannsburg, addressed to a young village pastor, telling him that when all the other lights of the village are put out at night there should remain one light still burning to mark the room where the pastor was earnestly pleading with God on behalf of his flock. These and other lessons were enforced, notwithstanding that the two previous nights had been almost sleepless from pain, with a youthful vivacity, a bright play of quiet wit, and a profound earnestness, that could not fail to make him beloved by his pupils. And no teacher ever was better loved than he.

From Photograph by Mr. E. Schweitzer, Strasburg.

He also served the missionary cause by his study of missionary problems. Month by month, the Journal des Missions published sketches from his pen of missions all over the world, in the preparation of which he was conscientiously careful to study the original records and reports, whether in English, German, Dutch, or French. At the re-opening of the Mission House classes in Paris last autumn, his friend and successor in this department, Professor Raoul Allier, told how M. Krüger counted no labour too great to elucidate a question of missionary polity, and would remark that it might save a committee from some serious mistake in the future.

He has left to his pupils and friends a precious legacy in his last work, that on the Epistle to the Romans,* of which mention has already been made. He had hoped to treat the whole Epistle, but strength failed him. He had to stop short, not unfittingly, with the glorious doxology which tells that "in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us," and expresses the apostle's assurance, which has been the experience of his nineteenth century commentator, "that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

J. G. Alexander.

Our Lapsed.

How long, O Jesus, shall we keep
Our palsied from thy power away!
When shall our lame take freedom's leap,
Our darkened see thy day?

Have we been healed to stand so calm,
In all our dignity and doubt,
Between the bruisèd and the balm,
And never bring them out?

We dry no tear, no sickness cure—
Pull no infernal fortress down;
We bring no bounty to the poor,
No gem to Jesus' crown.

Thy Gospel tells of those who brought Their helpless, hopeless ones to Thee;
Oh, by those early Christians taught,
May we "believe to see."

They said, "Enough of vigils vain!
We'll call a halt to dead routine!
Our poor demoniac shall be sane,
Our leper shall be clean,

"Our cripple shall not need his crutch,
Our dumb shall sing, our deaf shall hear
For Christ can heal them by a touch,
And we will bring them near."

Lord, give us back the passion flame
That burned in thy disciples then,
For glory to thy precious name,
And life to dying men!

Until the scoffer be compelled
The bare right arm of God to see,
And slaves, in nameless bondage held,
Go forth for ever free.

Our lapsed have baffled all our skill,
No mortal aid the need can meet;
O Jesus Christ! All-powerful still!
We bring them to thy feet.

The Simultaneous Mission.

MEETING OF LONDON CONVERTS.

ANOTHER rally of converts took place at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Friday evening last. Invitation cards had been issued to those who had given in their names as having received blessing during Gipsy Smith's mission, and the number who responded filled the lower hall. Young people predominated, with a fair sprinkling of older men and women. One glance at the sea of happy faces was sufficient to convince any observer that all had one aim in view, a deeper consecration of life and service.

Rev. F. B. Meyer presided and heartily welcomed the converts. On his asking those to rise who had been led to Christ during the mission,

ALMOST THE ENTIRE AUDIENCE STOOD.

Those who had had "a happy time" since their conversion were next invited to stand, and a similar scene was witnessed. Any who had had "a rough time with Satan," or suffered persecution, were then asked to stand, and some twenty or thirty rose. Those to whom the Bible had become sweet comprised every convert. After a few words of encouragement from Mr. Meyer, Rev. J. Tolefree Parr followed with an address, full of earnest counsel for the maintenance of Christian zeal in the midst of prevailing ungodliness, in spite of religious disadvantages, and in the teeth of the fiercest persecution. He urged them to keep in close touch with Christ, and seek grace from God; to take the earliest opportunity of joining a church, and sharing the fellowship of Christians. Let none of them fear persecution, for proving their loyalty to Christ under trying circumstances would be the means of winning many to the faith and practice of the Gospel.

At this stage Mr. Meyer had to leave to fulfil other engagements, and his place was taken by Rev. C. B. Sawday. A few words of timely encouragement were spoken by Miss Street to the boys and girls, urging them to set aside a portion of every day for

WAITING UPON GOD.

Rev. P. A. Milne followed with some homely and practical remarks on the duties of young Christians in the Church. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon's address was singularly helpful and impressive. Reminding them that the time would come for the application of the counsel which had been given, when their ministers were not available, he asked them to remember that the ever-present helper and best counsellor is the Holy Spirit. Let them not be content with their own newly-found joy, but seek to bring others into the fold.

Provincial Meetings.

REV. JOHN McNEILL AT CARDIFF.

PROBABLY in no town or city has the Simultaneous Mission been signalized by more remarkable incidents than at Cardiff. The missioner was Rev. John McNeill. The boldest measures are often the most successful. Had the meetings been confined to the churches, numbers of the most prominent men would have been conspicuous by their absence. It was wisely proposed that Mr. McNeill should address the men on 'Change every day at the luncheon hour, on the floor of the Exchange itself. Evidently the plan came from God, and, by his good hand upon his people, it was most successfully carried out. There were some, however, who disliked the arrangement, and went to the first meeting to find occasion against it. But they were among the first to feel the power of God there.

Born and bred among the people, a strong man every way, his faculties developed on business lines in his earlier years, his intellect trained and not strained, his individuality directed and not deteriorated by his theological education, he was eminently fitted for speaking to the men on 'Change. Every sentence scored a point. His first text was Psa. cxix. 59, "I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies." "A man may think upon his ways and turn his head this way and that—by an effort he could even look behind him—and yet his feet remain in the same direction. Turning the head is of no use unless the feet are turned. Some of you disapprove of excitement. Plainly, I don't believe you. The floor of this Exchange witnesses against you. In the days of Ladysmith and Mafeking it was said that Cardiff merchants lost their heads. And I read in a paper the other day that pig iron was excited." It was evident from the first that the preacher was able to hold his own with his hearers on their own ground. The South Wales Daily News, which gave daily notices of the meetings, said as to the second day that "the magnetism of John McNeill to these men of freights and tonnage is such that they are constrained to draw close toward him, and the superficial space occupied is a distinctly congested area. The significant character of the audience he saw before him recalled to the missioner on Wednesday that his audiences on 'Change had been described by a local paper as being chiefly composed of 'clerks and labourers.' Well, rejoined Mr. McNeill, he had been a clerk himself, and he must say he had never set eyes on such prosperous-looking clerks and labourers before. The 'clerks and labourers,' as they have been dubbed in some quarters, included some of the best known coal merchants, agents, colliery owners, shipowners and brokers, lawyers, bankers, auctioneers, dry dock owners, and ship repairers, &c., &c., in the port, and they were among the most attentive and interested listeners."

Speaking of Daniel, Mr. McNeill said that he earned his certificate of character not from his near friends, but from his enemies; from those who envied him, and were his competitors, with whom he rubbed shoulders every day. He was a smart, keen, successful man of business, one that would succeed anywhere. He came from the stock of Jacob, and belonged to that race of people whose influence is felt all over the globe in commercial circles. Some say that it was not a shrewd thing, when he knew of the decree that no one was to make a petition for thirty days except of the king, under penalty of the lions' den, to open his window and pray three times a day. I tell you it was the shrewdest thing he could do. If you ever get into a tight corner, call upon God. "Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee."

A merchant, who had given up going to a place of worship, asked one of his travellers if he had been to hear John McNeill. Yes, he had been once. "I have been," said the merchant. "I mean to go every time, and I would like all my men to hear him. And, remember, in future this business must be done straight."

The reporter remarked that on the Friday night "the voice was not so good as on previous days, and the treatment of the subject somewhat less humorous. Nevertheless the impression made was as great, if not greater, than on any other day."

Mr. McNeill was the recipient of a little "surprise" present from the members of the Cardiff Exchange "as a memento of his visit," in association with the conspicuously successful united mission at Cardiff.

At the close of this meeting, when he had been speaking of the "Impotent Man" of John v., the preacher said in his prayer, "Lord, these men are in good health. They don't want money; they don't want business tact and ability; they don't want position. They have all these, but they want thy saving grace; they want salvation." It was the culminating moment of the meetings on 'Change, and many faces were wet with tears.

The children's meetings were held in Cory Hall, and the adult meetings afternoon and evening in the Park Hall, the largest in Cardiff.

Here the missioner was just as outspoken as at the Exchange. For example, he declared that to-day the "dear, decent, respectable, church-going crowd" would never be saved until they got rid of their self-righteousness and their selfishness. The ordinary church and chapel goer of to-day was covered with the enamel of conceit, comfort, respectability, and self-satisfaction. He trusted they would all live to see public opinion change regarding its attitude towards revival services, instead of treating them as mad dogs and all running away lest they should get bitten. He hoped they would all get bitten.

It will be observed that all the meetings were held in public halls, and not in churches, justifying the opinion repeatedly expressed during the mission in London and the provinces, that hundreds of people will come to neutral halls who cannot be induced to come into ecclesiastical buildings.

AWAKENING AT HULL.

In our last issue we gave some particulars of Mr. W. R. Lane's preaching at Albion Congregational Church. This, of course, should by no means overshadow the devoted labours of local and other ministers at the other nineteen centres. Rev. J. Quiggin Christian, secretary of the Hull Free Church Council, tells of many inquirers at Hessle Road Congregational Church. A magic lantern outside the church attracted the crowd in the neighbourhood. A large furniture van, with a sheet at one end and a magic lantern at the other, was taken through the streets. There was much blessing at George Street Church (Rev. J. E. Shepherd). Among other seekers were gaol birds and five girls from the streets. Revs. H. O. H. Richardson and John Elsworth had a grand work at St. George's Road Primitive Methodist Church. One hundred and fifty over fifteen years of age, and over 200 children had been registered. The services were marked by spiritual power and large congregations. The missioners led a band of about 150 workers through the district. Among other features of the Hull work were midnight meetings for various classes, and Mr. Lane was allowed to speak at the gaol to a congregation of three or four hundred prisoners. This service was arranged through the courtesy of the Magistrates and the Governor, on the initiative of a lady who takes a deep interest in this department of Christian work.

BLESSING AT NEWCASTLE.

Interest in the Mission at Newcastle-on-Tyne deepened and widened in the course of the week, and great blessing was realized in the closing days. The congregations at all the centres were large on the week days, whilst on Sunday the buildings in which the meetings were held were crowded. The number of inquirers is regarded as most encouraging. In most of the centres men's meetings were held on Sunday afternoon with very satisfactory results. The dinner-hour meetings in the great workshops and in warehouses proved most successful, and several cases of inquiry are reported as the outcome.

MR. C. INGLIS AT YARMOUTH.

The Simultaneous Mission at Yarmouth has been a great success. Mr. Charles Inglis has been the missioner, and from the opening of the Mission to the close immense interest has been taken in it. All the Free Churches have thrown themselves heartily into the effort, and night by night the various ministers of the town have joined in the service. The large Wesleyan Chapel, Dene Side, has been crowded each evening, and on Sunday the King Street Congregational Church was filled with an overflow meeting. Miss Inglis has won many hearts by her very effective song message.

The Bible readings each afternoon, by Mr. Inglis, have been very effective, the Park Baptist Church being crowded to its utmost capacity. Possibly Monday was the finest day. A large open-air service was held in the Market Square—when all the Free Churches were represented. The Salvation Army Band led the singing, and in fine style the huge procession marched on to the Wesleyan Church, which was quickly crowded. Over 200 have passed through the inquiry rooms, and have publicly avowed discipleship of Christ. Mr. Inglis' straight, plain, earnest evangelical addresses have been greatly enjoyed by the vast congregations, and have been marked by great spiritual power and unction. (Rev.) E. Hammond.

DAVENTRY, LONG BUCKBY, AND WEEDON.

Mr. T. Swanston Smith writes:—"The meetings held in the churches of Daventry, Long Buckby, and Weedon, have been rendered memorable by the felt presence and power of God, together with the stricken souls with whom it was our privilege and joy to converse and direct to the Saviour. When the mission terminated at Weedon it was with difficulty the meeting was closed. The spirit of enthusiasm was remarkable. The services at Long Buckby were impressive, and in closing the mission on Monday evening, when the meeting was held in the Congregational Chapel, nearly all present stood up by way of testifying to the spiritual revival experienced in their midst. A similar incident occurred at Daventry. To God be all the praise! The extension of these times of refreshing is eagerly looked for."

REV. JOHN WILSON AT SHEFFIELD.

Mr. R. Wright, Hon. Secretary of the Sheffield Central District, writes: "Sheffield has been divided into twenty-four groups of churches, and encouraging news is to hand from every district. I write for the central group, where we have had a blessed work of God. Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, was missioner. His noon-day addresses were marked by keen insight into Divine truth, powerfully applied. The evening services were well attended. Dinner-hour meetings were held in the works, and the police were addressed at the station. A meeting for men on the second Sunday was a time of heart-searching, and bore precious fruit, while the gathering for women only was an inspiration. One mothers' meeting addressed was specially blessed, a large majority of those present yielding to Christ. Nearly 200 have passed through the inquiry rooms, while many rose for prayer whose names were not secured. In some cases whole families have been blessed, and teachers have rejoiced in seeing all their scholars led to Christ. There is great rejoicing in this city; over 3,000 names have been registered.

MR. R. S. BRADBROOK AT ALFRETON.

Referring to the mission at Alfreton, conducted by Mr. R. S. Bradbrook, the executive of the local council in acknowledging the great blessing received, remarked upon the keen interest taken by the missioner in the young men, large numbers of whom confessed Christ. Some of the leading officers in the Free Churches, seeing, as never before, the importance of the temperance question, publicly led the way in taking the pledge, their example being immediately followed by more than fifty others. Such a step as this on the part of church officials must tend very largely to consolidate the good work accomplished, especially as the occasion was that of the "converts' meeting." Among the letters received by the missioner is one from a lady, who praises God for the conversion of her husband, for whom she prayed for four years, also for her parent and her only son. A young man, while thanking God for his own conversion, tells of four of his companions saved. A prominent mine-manager and Christian worker is rejoicing over nearly the whole of his class deciding for Christ.

REV. MALCOLM M. THOMSON AT LUDLOW.

The mission in Ludlow conducted by Rev. Malcolm M. Thomson, of Oswestry, has been blessed above expectation. The large Town Hall was taken, a room seating 600 or 700 people. The first Sunday of the Mission the building was well filled, and each night as the services continued the interest increased. The second Sunday there was not a vacant seat to be found, many extra forms having to be provided. The Gospel was preached clearly and pointedly, and the Word was listened to with close attention. When the missioner invited those who were desirous of knowing the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour to enter the inquiry room, there were many responses. The main feature of the Mission was the number of young men who decided for Christ.

AT OTHER CENTRES.

At Pontypridd, Glam., the mission proved very effective. Audiences, numbering upwards of 2,000, congregated at the large Town Hall. The special missioner was Rev. H. Elvet Lewis.

At Byrom Hall, Liverpool, Mr. Gerald Coultas gave impressive addresses to large audiences. One young man who left the hall on the Sunday night, in indignation, returned on the following evening and surrendered to Christ. Over 200 have passed through the inquiry rooms.

Mr. George Clarke had a remarkable mission at Wigan, a town in which a mission of the same evangelist, held three and a half years ago, created a widespread spirit of inquiry. On the present occasion, also, the services were deeply impressive, and 700 anxious persons gave in their names.

At Newport, I.W., the missioner was Miss Ada Ward, the converted actress. Very large attendances were maintained throughout, with a good percentage of non-church-going people, and a number professed conversion. A lecture on the wrong of theatre going was a powerful utterance. A. E. Johns, Baptist Minister.

Rev. D. B. Muir, of London Road U.F. Church, Glasgow, was the missioner at Gateshead-on-Tyne. His impressive preaching attracted large congregations, whilst remarkable results have been evident. The Mission proved so effective that Mr. Muir was requested to continue the work for some days longer.

Rev. D. M. Cameron was at Tewkesbury. Mr. R. Dodds writes:—"A spirit of deep earnestness was manifest at all the meetings. The afternoon Bible readings were very helpful. The children's services were made a blessing to the young people, and a number expressed their desire to take Jesus as their Saviour."

From Northampton, Rev. T. Napoleon Smith, Hon. Secretary, writes: "While we have not seen all that we desired, we are devoutly thankful for the mission, and we recognise that its best results are yet to come in connection with the regular work of the churches, which is likely to be more evangelical and evangelistic than it has been for many a day."

Speaking at the close of the mission at Blackburn on Saturday last, Rev. F. C. Spurr said: We have had a great number of decisions, but, while of course we are thankful for the good that has been done in this way, I think the chief effect of the Mission will be in its effect upon church life.

Meetings intended to reach every possible class were provided at Newton-in-Makerfield. There were encouraging attendances, and each succeeding day witnessed an increase in interest. The missioner, Rev. Hugh C. Wallace, of Burnley, gave earnest addresses. There were encouraging signs that the mission was used in leading many to accept the truth. H. L.

Mr. Edward Hurditch, of Brighton, conducted the mission at Winton, Bournemouth. About forty passed through the inquiry room, making profession of Christ. Nightly the Spirit was present in power, quickening and convincing, and abiding good has certainly begun. Mr. Hurditch's effectiveness lies in his simplicity and strict adherence to evangelical truth. (Rev.) Ben Evans.

Meetings at Fareham in the Foresters' Hall have been excellently attended. On Thursday, to hear the life story of the missioner, Mr. O. L. Heatley, the Hall was crowded. The power of God's Spirit has been present, God's people especially having been revived and enthused, whilst a number of persons have professed conversion. Hugh A. Ellis, Baptist Minister.

At Brighouse, great blessing attended the mission, 300 persons passing through the inquiry rooms, and the services being continued for several days. The missioner was Rev. A. C. Perriam. A feature of the work was that nearly all the publichouses were visited, invitation cards being left at fifty of them. Many open-air meetings were held. Meetings are also being conducted in the villages near by.

Mr. R. W. Brown, of Chertsey, conducted the mission at Alresford. The Sunday services were held in the Town Hall, which was well filled on both occasions, the week-day services being held in the churches. Instructive Bible readings and earnest Gospel addresses were given to attentive audiences. Children's services were also conducted. At the close of the Mission a united Communion service was held.

At Downton, Wilts, the meetings were conducted by Mr. J. Sprunt. In addition to the evangelistic addresses given in the Public Hall, Bible readings were given on four afternoons in the chapels. These readings were much appreciated. Mr. Sprunt also addressed a large gathering of children from the Sunday schools. Some of those who attended the Mission have professed change of heart.

At Cambridge the mission, so far as outward evidences of interest were concerned, more than fulfilled the expectations that had been formed of it. Every evening the Guildhall was crowded with a deeply interested and attentive audience; and the Gospel was earnestly preached by Rev. C. Sylvester Horne. The Westminster College students, who were actively engaged, are continuing the work in Girton, Grantchester, and Haslingfield.

The Reigate Free Church Council secured the services of Mr. Monro Collings as missioner. From the beginning the attendances and interest have been good, and culminated on the Sunday in crowded services. In the evening an overflow meeting well filled another church. Mr. Monro Collings' presentation of truth was reasonable and convincing. The services for young people were fruitful. (Rev.) G. Currie Martin.

Rev. H. C. Wagnell, of Blackpool, conducted the services at Newcastle, Staffs. The principal gatherings were held in the Methodist New Connexion Church. All the churches shared in the blessing, and the whole town was moved. Great interest was aroused by the missioner's visit to the Government clothing factory, where he addressed over 900 people. The Bible readings were very helpful. There were over 120 cases of decision among adults, while at the children's services, too, a large number of young people sought the Saviour.

At Penarth the services have grown in numbers and interest. They have now been transferred to the St. Andrew's Hall, the largest building in the town. On Sunday, hundreds failed to get in. The missioner, Rev. J. C. Carlile spoke with power, and many decided for Christ. One service on Saturday, after a canvass of the public-houses by ladies, resulted in forty temperance pledges and several inquirers. The services for men was a splendid assembly. All the ministers are actively assisting. H. J. Price, Hon. Sec.

Rev. W. B. Taylor, of Cambridge, and Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Collins, of Wendover, were the missioners for Berkhamsted and North-church. Mr. Taylor presented the Gospel with power and clearness, with the result that not a few persons were led to decision for Christ. Mr. and Mrs. Collins preached and sang the Gospel with much persuasiveness. The former showed remarkable skill in conducting the inquiry meeting, and in helping seekers. Mrs. Collins held meetings for women only, which were cordially appreciated. The churches rejoice in a quickened life, and the end is not yet. W. D.

At Tiverton, Devonshire, Rev. R. Mackay, of Golborne Road Church, North Kensington, W., was the missioner. The preparation for the services was thorough, and the expectation of the people of God great, and they were not disappointed. From the first meeting the power of the Holy Spirit was most manifest, and souls were brought to Christ each day. Altogether nearly 150 passed through the inquiry rooms. There were some striking cases of blessing. The meetings were largely attended. In addition to Bible readings and men's dinner hour services, there were meetings for men only and for children. Altogether there were twenty-nine services in the ten days. The union of the churches was hearty, and the ministers who were at home worked heartily and continuously with the missioner.

Willie's Pennies—or, God First.

By Rev. J. BURGESS.

IT is Saturday night, and little Willie and his sisters are just preparing to go to bed. Let us look into the dining room, where sit mother and children. Little Willie holds in his hand two pennies, one of which is intended for the missionary box on Sunday morning, and with the other he means to buy some bright blue beads. In the village, an old woman keeps a little shop where she sells sweeties and other things that children like; but Willie is to spend his penny in order to make a ring for his father and one for his mother, and one each for his sisters, and he hopes to have enough to make one for himself out of the thimbleful of beads which he is going to buy.

Presently he exclaims, "One of my pennies is gone," and all the children immediately begin to search for it. As no one heard it fall, they were quite at a loss in which direction to look. "It's under the piano by this time, I expect," says little Maggie—as if the penny were playing hide-and-seek with the children, and moving about from place to place; but however well they looked, they did not find it. On the arrival of nurse, they had to give their good-night kiss to mother, and go off to bed. Just as she was wishing Willie good-night, the mother said, "Whose penny is it that is lost, Willie?" He opened his little hand, looked very hard at the coin, and said, "I think this is my penny, mother." "Well, good-night, Willie," adding to herself, "God is teaching my little boy a lesson, because he is not sure about it."

Willie's sturdy little legs generally carried him to bed quickly, but to-night the staircase seemed very long, and he moved very slowly, and although, as a rule he was the first to drop off to sleep, he did not succeed this time, because he was thinking about the penny under his pillow, and what he ought to do with it. He remembered what his mother had said—"Whose penny was it?"—and outside the window the little owls crying for their supper, were saying "Tu-whitt," "Tu-whoo," "Tu-whitt," "Tu-whoo," until Willie, half asleep and half awake, fancied that the owls were asking him, "'Whoo'?s penny was it, Willie?" He thought to himself that he could do without his beads more easily than the little black boys could do without their penny, and he resolved that it was his penny that was lost, and that the missionary penny was safe in his keeping, and, clasping it tightly, he soon fell asleep.

In the morning, almost as soon as it was light, little feet might be heard going down the nursery stairs, straight to mother's room, before mother was awake. "Please, mother," said little Willie, "I know now whose penny it was that was lost; it was my penny, mother, and I have the missionary penny safe upstairs." "I am so glad you have found out, Willie," said his mother, and kissing him fondly, sent him back again.

When the family were all assembled at breakfast time, and the missionary box was placed upon the table, according to the usual custom, little Willie was the first to drop in his penny, and received from his father and mother a very hearty commendation. Just then, cook appeared, with the coffee and the toast, and on the tray was Willie's lost penny, which she had picked up under the curtain when sweeping out the room. So Willie got his penny after all; but if he had not determined that it was not God's penny that had been lost, he would have missed the joy of giving, and his father and mother's approbation.

Little Willie was at this time five years old, and the sequel can soon be told. He grew into a bonny boy, then into a broad-shouldered young man, and left this country when still a young man for America, was accepted by the Mission Board there, and sent as a missionary to Central Africa, where he laboured earnestly for the Master. At length he fell a victim to the climate, and died lamented by all who knew him.

A Scripture Union Resolve.

To take God's precious Word as my Chart; God's Holy Son as my Pilot; to anchor my soul by faith to God's sweet promises; and never to be ashamed to show His colours or to own myself His servant

I am sailing on the waters
Of Life's deep and mighty sea;
I am young, and needing guidance,
I will take God's chart with me.
It will show the wily current,
Sunken rock, and dang'rous sand;
And the one clear line of safety,
Leading straight to heaven's fair land.

But its words of wisest counsel
I must study constantly,
And the clear directions given
Follow out obediently;
Always thankfully rememb'ring
That this precious Chart of mine,
To insure my soul from wreckage,
Has been planned by Love Divine.

I am sailing on the waters,
Of life's deep and mighty sea;
And beside the Chart, 'tis needful,
That God's Pilot go with me.
Ah, I know his name! 'Tis Jesus,
And his love will never fail;
And I'm sure to land in Heaven,
If with Him I always sail!

O Lord Jesus, Friend the dearest,
From all others, unto Thee
Turns my heart, in hope and pleading,
Be my Pilot o'er life's sea!
And when stormy waves surround me,
May God's anchor always hold
(Faith, that anchor), firmly gripping
All the promises of old!

Help me lift the "Royal Ensign,"
So that every one may see
That I'm sailing under orders
Of the King who died for me.
Teach me how to be a "fisher,"
Give an earnest, constant aim,
Other souls to gather for Thee,
By the power of thy Name!

Lessons.

Have faith in God though all may seem contrary. Listen to good advice. Beware of appearances. Beware of carelessness and indifference. Beware of temptations. Beware of bad habits. Beware of besetting sins. There is no safety for those who neglect God's counsel. Except we abide in Jesus we cannot be saved.

Personal.

Grace Goldsmith, Joseph Willatt, Daisy Mutton, Theodore Adams, Mabel Bartlett, Wilfred Short, Birdie Calow.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers," and hope you will enjoy the study.

Mai Davidson, Louie Jeffery.—I hope you will soon be better.

John Maxwell, Winnie Gardner.—You will find your names in the "second list."

Beatrice Brouard.—Please be careful. Your letter was closed, and only bore a halfpenny stamp. I had to pay 1d.

Alan and Charlie Banks.—I hope you will like your new school. Perhaps when you have settled down you will find time for the "Searcher" again.

Stanley Hoyte.—I am sorry to hear about your thumb, and trust it will soon be healed again.

I am sure you will all be sorry to hear that Margaret Merry, whose name you may have missed for a week or two, passed away on February 28 last. She only joined the "Searchers" a short time ago, but was very diligent, and won a second prize in the last competition. Her mother writes:—"We saw by last issue of The Christian you hoped she would soon be better; and so she is. We asked her, 'Dear Maggie, are you trusting Jesus?' and she said 'I am;' and her last words were, 'Open the door wide, I have wings.'"

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, MARCH 10.

A Castaway (1 Cor. ix. 24-27).

IT does not seem likely when the Apostle used this terrible word, a castaway, that he ever really expected the time to come when he would be cast aside from the love of God, and consigned to the nethermost pit. Surely he who had written these triumphant words, "Nothing shall separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus the Lord," could not have literally feared that he would ever cease to be God's child or to know the fulness of his saving grace. We must interpret this phrase by the whole context. Looking back to verses 19-22 we see how eager he was to save men; it was his one thought. You could not have met him on the road, or travelled with him in one of the great Alexandrian corn ships, without his speaking to you about the concerns of your soul. When he worked with Aquilla and Priscilla he won them for Jesus; when he was a stranger in Philippi he led Lydia to Christ within a week of his arrival. There never has been a greater soul-winner than the Apostle; never was man more full of the passionate desire to win others for Jesus. He was prepared to make any sacrifice if only he might save some. But it seems as though he were haunted by a constant fear lest the time might come when he would no longer be employed in his much-loved work, but when the Master might say: Others are prepared to do my work better; of late thy bodily propensities have so mastered thy soul, dulling thy spiritual perceptions, and lessening thy power, that I must needs call in another to do what thou couldst do once, but art no longer fitted to effect. And he says in this remark: "I am prepared to make any sacrifice, pass through any ordeal, to do any violence to my natural desire, if only my Master may never be compelled to cast me aside from his service, or to lessen the confidence which He placed in me."

I have a stylographic pen which lies disused in my desk because it so often deceived me, and failed when I needed it most. The pen is still mine, but it is cast away from my service. Esau was a castaway because he allowed his appetite to master him; Saul, the first King of Israel, was a castaway because he kept back the best of the Amalekites' spoils, when God had distinctly told him to destroy all; Demas was a castaway because he was overcome by the love of this present world. The shores of time are strewn with those who have missed the greatest opportunities of benefitting the world because they could not control passion.

The Apostle compares himself to an athlete in the arena, now engaged in wrestling with another, and again in running for the prize, and he says in effect that just the discipline which the gladiator experiences if he is to win the laurel crown, must be undergone by the servant of God who would win the chaplet of saved souls to place at his Master's feet. Nay, more, in the expressive words of the revised version, the Apostle says that he bruises his body, or, to use the literal rendering of the Greek, he makes black and blue with his blows, that its appetites may not master the strenuous temper of his soul.

There is no relaxation in this war. We must do violence to our lower nature, and possibly one of the easiest steps in this self-mastery in the grace of Christ is to abstain from intoxicating drink, not only for the sake of others but for our own. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The next Welsh National Convention will be held at Bridgend, Glamorgan, on June 18, 19, 20. Several well-known speakers are taking part, and the Welsh friends anticipate a good time.

International S.S. Lesson.

March 17, 1901.

Jesus and Pilate (Luke 23/13-26).

Golden Text: "I find no fault in this Man" (Luke 23/4).

Introduction.

NOT only a King (John 18/37), but the King of kings stands before Pilate (Rev. 19/16; 17/14) in our lesson to-day.

Key to Blackboard Plan.—We spell the word KING, and learn from it the different points in which Jesus was King.

1.—A Weak Man—Pilate.

Swayed to and fro, by his own opinion, then by his wife's, then by the mob, he wavers (James 1/6) and hesitates, and at last tries to throw all the responsibility on to the people themselves. Five times he tries to defend Jesus (4, 14). Three times (John gives three) he says he can "find no fault," and twice (15, 22) he says Jesus has done "nothing worthy of death"; he calls Jesus "a just person" (Matt. 27/24); and he "washes his hands" to show he believes in his innocency, and yet he delivers the Christ up to be crucified (John 19/8); he was afraid, he was weak, he yielded, he delivered Jesus "to their will" (25).

2.—A Perfect Man—Christ.

Judas said He was innocent (Matt. 27/4):
Pilate's wife said He was just (Matt. 27/19):
Pilate himself could find no fault in Him (4):
The Thief said He had done nothing amiss (41):
The Centurion said He was a righteous man (47):
Paul said He knew no sin (2 Cor. 5/2).
Peter said He did no sin (1 Pet. 2/22).
He was indeed a Perfect Man.

3.—A Wild Choice—The People.

The Question: Jesus or Barabbas? (Matt. 27/17).
The Answer: Barabbas.

Acts 3/14-15 gives this wild answer and wild choice very plainly. They saved the murderer, and slew the Saviour. Barabbas was a notable prisoner (Matt. 27/16); he was a murderer (Mk. 15/7), and a robber (John 18/40), and yet they chose him instead of the Christ.

4.—God's Plan.

Throughout our lessons this quarter we have seen how God's wonderful plan for the salvation of men has been working out. Over and over have we had prophecy fulfilled, and to-day is only another link in his chain before the final one is added.

All the types in the Old Testament: The Passover Lamb; the Burnt Offering, &c., were being realised in every step the Saviour took.

5.—What Can We Learn?

First take a warning from Pilate, and be decided in what you do, and then "do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor. 10/31).

Secondly, trust in the Perfect Man, the Man Christ Jesus; take his character and copy it, for "He left us an example that we should follow in his steps" (1 Peter 2/21).

Thirdly, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve" (Jos. 24/15). Jesus or Barabbas? (Matt. 27/17).

What shall I do then with Jesus? (22).

An Orphan Emigrant.

THE following cheering communication was recently received by Miss Macpherson, of the Homes of Industry, Bethnal Green Road, E., from a young emigrant in Ontario:—

Dear Miss Macpherson,—You may be surprised to get a letter direct from me, but I felt it my duty to write and thank you for what you did for me. Some eight years ago I might have been seen in the city of London, a ragged urchin, a motherless boy, who had no one to look after him but an overworked father (who worked night and day to earn a livelihood for his children). This boy, possessed with a fair intellect and vivid imagination, heard of the work you and your staff were doing in furnishing homes for orphan children in Canada, and he at once begged his father to allow him to go to Canada and start in life for himself. After some discussion, he gained assent to come and see you. You took that boy, clothed, fed, taught, and trained him in your home, and also instilled the lessons of the Bible, and afterwards brought him along with a party of fifty-eight others, and furnished them with comfortable homes in this beautiful Canada. That boy is the writer of that letter—W.H. Now, for the many good acts you have done to me and my brothers and sisters I thank you most heartily. But I am still more grateful for the lessons of Christ's love which were taught me, and which led me to the Saviour to be one of his followers. I have a splendid home, with good Christian people; they love me nearly as their own child. They educated me until I am able to be a school teacher.

Rev. F. B. Meyer.

I AM sailing for New York by the Majestic on Wednesday, March 6. I earnestly ask the prayers of God's people on behalf of the Mission tour, which I am undertaking at the invitation and in the company of Mr. W. R. Moody, through the Southern States. He writes: "The work is opening up magnificently throughout the South. We have far more invitations than we can accept, and they are coming in rapidly now. The cities to be visited are Richmond, Atlanta, Chattanooga, Louisville, Cincinnati, Omaha, Allegheny; there are others to be announced. They are all large centres, and in every place the invitation has come from the Ministerial association of the town, and is very hearty. The work is progressing as well as in our former trip, if not better."

Mrs. Meyer accompanies me, and I am quite hoping that the voyage will recruit me after the somewhat exhausting labours of the Mission in London and Leeds. I hope to be back on April 24.—Yours, &c., F. B. Meyer.

Mrs. Isa. Bishop.—We recently quoted a paragraph, which had been communicated to the Press, concerning this gifted lady traveller. She writes, however, to disclaim the assertion that she proposes to take up work in India as a missionary. Writing from Tangier, on February 21, Mrs. Bishop says: "I am here for three or four months' rest in very bad health. Otherwise I had arranged to go to India for three months to work in connection with the Bishop of Calcutta's Famine Relief Fund." Our readers will unite with us in earnestly hoping that Mrs. Bishop may be soon restored to health and strength.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, March 10. Hosea vi.

WE must couple the last verse of the previous chapter with the first three verses of this. God's absence consists in the withdrawal of his smile, and lasts only till we acknowledge our offences and seek his face. If you are conscious that there has been of late a withdrawal of the sense of his Presence, do not rest until you have ascertained the reason, and returned by the way your truant feet have trod. There is no doubt that He who hath torn will heal, and he who hath smitten will bind up. The third verse may be rendered, "We shall know; we shall follow on to know Jehovah; for, like the dawn, his coming forth is fixed." In other words, it is as certain as to-morrow morning's dawn, or as the spring rains, that God's presence will be sealed to the soul that waits for Him in penitent faith.

Too often our promises of amendment have melted away as morning clouds and the vanishing dew. We have been content to give God sacrifice and burnt-offerings, while our love has failed. Love gives meaning to sacrifice, as the spirit lends expression to the countenance. Of what value are the external rites of a well-ordered liturgy, if the lips that pray are not touched with the live coal, and the songs which arise are not winged with reverence, love, and faith? Our Lord quoted this passage (Matt. ix. 13).

Gilead is mentioned (v. 8), and Shechem (R.V. v. 9), because the proximity of these cities of refuge to the violence and crime which were being perpetrated so greatly aggravated the offence. It makes a great difference where our sin is committed, and in spite of what advantages!

MONDAY, March 11. Hosea vii.

The last clause of the previous chapter belongs to this. God desired to return the captivity of his people, and to heal Israel, but all his loving intentions were frustrated by the discovery of their inveterate sin. Their evil doings stood up as witnesses against them to condemn them (v. 2). The passion that burnt in their hearts was so hot that it did not need incitement, as an oven already heated retains its heat without the baker's incessant attention. The king's birthday was celebrated with drunken orgies, and the religion of the people had become a confused mixture of Gentile superstitions with the outward form of true worship; in this they resembled a cake which has not been turned in baking—one side is crisp, while the other is unsavoury, and spoils the whole.

What a touching sentence that is in v. 9! Can it be that strangers have been stealing away our strength without our realizing the deterioration which is stealing steadily upon us? Can it be that grey hairs, indicative of old age, are already upon our heads, though we know it not?

Such unconscious deterioration arises from the lack of self-examination; or from our habit of comparing ourselves with ourselves, or with those beneath us, instead of with the heavenly beauty and stature of the Man Christ Jesus. Silently the frosty air steals away the warmth from the boiling water; silently the fungus pitches its tents in the autumn woods, symptomatic of the fall of the year; silently old age creeps on the most stalwart frame; and so our spiritual strength declines unless we watch and pray. And when we get away from God, the silliness of the dove who flies straight into the snare betakes us; and we cease to perform our destined work in the world, turning aside from God's purpose as a deceitful bow.

TUESDAY, March 12. Hosea viii.

An invader is close at hand who shall punish Israel for their self-will, in setting up their own kings and idols (4-8), in seeking foreign alliances which would only bring oppression (9, 10); and for multiplying altars and fortresses which were destined to be destroyed. The circumstances of this chapter evidently point to the reigns of Menahem and Uzziah (2 Kings xv. 19; 2 Chron. xxvi. 6-15).

The fifth verse is very striking. Israel had sacrificed Jehovah for the likeness of a calf, but how had the country fared? They had rejected God, and now in the misfortunes that overtook them their calf had rejected them. They had sown to the wind, and must reap the whirlwind. This verse always reminds me of the story of Cardinal Wolsey. His calf was wealth and power, but he confessed as an old man that he had not served his God as well as he had served his king; and finally the king withdrew his favour from his former favourite, so that the old man was glad to lay his bones in Leicester Abbey, confessing that he had ventured beyond his depth. What is it that you are putting in the place of God? Power, wealth, success? Sooner or later you will be cast off. How different to Him who perpetually whispers in the ear of his servants the assurance, "I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee;" and who promises to carry us to hoar hairs.

The R.V. gives a striking alternative rendering, "I wrote for him the ten thousand precepts of my law." If the olden law contained so many, what shall we not say of the new covenant?

WEDNESDAY, March 13. Hosea ix.

When we are away from God we have no right to be glad. The worldling may take pleasure in his amusement, but the child of God, from whom the light of his face has passed, may not rejoice for joy as others do. How many Christians may read these lines whose lives are grey and cold, devoid of the blessedness they knew when first they found the Lord! There is nothing for such but to return, pleading that promise: "I will heal their backslidings."

The earlier verses consist of contrasts. If we attribute the prosperity of our life, the abundance of corn or wine, to our own wisdom and strength, they will soon fail, and disappoint our expectations. If we prefer unclean things, where we have the choice between them and clean, we shall presently reach a position in which only unclean things will be furnished (v. 3). If we withhold God's offerings, when we have abundance, we shall soon be reduced to such straits as to have nothing to give, and not even enough to sustain life (4, 5). If we go down to Egypt for help, in Egypt we shall die (6, 7). In other words, every sin we commit carries within it the seed of its own avenging. If sin is allowed to work itself out, it will bring the bitter harvest of unutterable and irretrievable loss.

Israel was at first as acceptable to God as grapes are to a traveller in the desert, or as the earliest figs. But they gave themselves up to the idols of the heathen, and soon became as abominable as the impure gods they loved (10 R.V.). The loss of children was the greatest disaster that could happen to the Eastern; hence the threats with which this chapter concludes. Shall we not learn the lesson, lest the loss of spiritual children should betoken the prevalence within us of similar sins!

THURSDAY, March 14. Hosea x.

"Israel is a luxuriant vine," is the opening note of this chapter in R.V. The nation brought forth fruit in exact proportion to the luxuriance of its outward prosperity, but the fruit was not such as God could take delight in. It was corrupt and evil. How great a disappointment! There was everything in the circumstances of the Hebrews to make them bear fruit unto God, but lo! they perverted his gifts to sourness.

Notice in the following paragraph how carefully Beth-aven is substituted for Bethel, as though the sacred name might no longer be employed for those who had so absolutely forsaken the spirit with which Jacob consecrated it to be the House of God. The spirit of revolt against God had led to revolutionary outbursts against the king. "What, then, should a king do for us?" Moreover, want of faith in God had induced the violation of covenant between man and man, which would be punished as quickly as weeds punish the careless farmer.

The judgment pronounced upon the faithless people would be so terrible, that they would call to the mountains and to the hills to hide them (v. 8)—a cry which is to be roused again some day among the inhabitants of the earth, when they behold the Lord coming in power and great glory (Rev. vi. 16). Instead of the early comfort and liberty of their national life, which were comparable to the heifer's easy work in treading corn, Israel was to be exposed to severer experiences, like that of ploughing and harrowing. Let us be warned by these words. Let us prepare the neglected soil of our hearts to receive the Divine seed which shall produce a harvest of holiness and piety. God waits to rain righteousness upon us, which shall take root and spring up to his glory.

FRIDAY, March 15. Hosea xi.

God remembers our childhood; our response to his early call; the joy of those blessed days. The first verse is quoted in Matt. ii. 15, as applied to the childhood of our Saviour, which was spent partly in Egypt. Still God calls his people out of Egypt by his prophets; but, alas! the record of that second verse is only too true of many—"they went from them, and sacrificed unto the Baalim." Always Baal stands for the principle of our own energy to which we turn so often, to the neglect of the Divine power, which would fain work all our works in us and for us. He worketh to will and to do.

The next verse is very touching. In spite of the sins of his people, God taught them to go, that is to walk. This is especially the mother's office. She puts the child against the wall, stretches out her hands, and as the little thing runs, she sees it does not fall (v. 3). Is not God always doing this for us?

The next image is very beautiful. God does not use violence with his little children, but bands of love. He is like the driver who, instead of urging his cattle to the utmost by the scourge and spear, lifts the yoke from their necks lest it should hurt and chafe, whilst they eat. Admah and Zeboim were allies of Sodom, and involved in its destruction (Deut. xxix. 23). God longs to get us to ways of righteousness by the tenderest, gentlest method. Only when his people are bent on backsliding does he threaten to give them up.

SATURDAY, March 16. Hosea xii.

The closing chapters of this book contain a series of contrasts between Israel's unfaithfulness and many sins, and God's long-enduring love. Join xi. 12 to the first verse, and the indictment stands more clear. How faithless our life has been! What a contrast to God's invariable fidelity to Himself and his promise. When we believe not, He remaineth faithful, He cannot deny Himself. It is often good to turn from our own fickle and variable temperament to reckon on the trustworthiness of God. Reckon on God, dear heart!

Jacob's record had been full of perversity. His strength had been used to supplant his brother from his birth, and to resist the love of God. The fourth verse must refer to Gen. xxxii. 9-11, and not to 30, because in the latter the angel of God's love wrestled with Jacob, and that scene must not be taken as an illustration of prevailing prayer, but of the exercise of our fatal power to resist the love of God. In the earlier verses, however (9-11), we have an instance of prevailing prayer. Have you found God in Bethel? (Gen. xxviii. 10-12; xxxv. 9-14). Has He spoken to you? Do you know Him by his memorable name of Jehovah? If so, be sure and turn to Him, and wait on Him continually, and be not like Israel, who, instead of becoming the successful wrestler with God, deteriorated into a deceitful trafficker like those he was commissioned to expel from the land (7, 8).

In spite of all their sin, God was prepared to give his people again the joy of the Feast of Tabernacles (9). But his kindest intentions were perpetually frustrated by the inveterate rebellion of his people (10, 11). Forgetful of the lowliness of his origin, Ephraim had most bitterly provoked the Divine anger. When tempted to sin, let us remember the greatness of God's redemption, in bringing us out of a horrible pit: the reason for never-failing obedience and compliance with his least wish.

Feeding the Flock of God.

A LETTER has just been placed in our hands in which several valuable suggestions are made regarding the conduct of weekly congregational prayer meetings. The writer has in his mind the following up of the Simultaneous Mission, and believes that more earnestness might be imparted to such gatherings, if those were encouraged to take part who might be able only to stammer a few words, rather than by relying entirely upon two or three leaders. Among other points brought forward are the affording at every meeting of opportunity for those so led to speak a few words; the giving of a part of the time to the interests of the unconverted, that seekers after the truth may have a place to which they can turn with expectancy; and the interchange of visits, by arrangement or otherwise, between members of neighbouring congregations.

Few things are more required in church life than the lifting to a higher plane of the prayer meeting or week-night service. When converts join the ranks, through special effort or the regular ministry of the Word, there is generally need for instruction in addition to that afforded at the Sabbath services; and as none can tell who may stand most in need of such help, the meeting should be one without membership roll or other restrictions. We rejoice to know that many congregations already enjoy this privilege, but believe that to others there might come by these means a blessing so great that there would not be room enough to receive it. Young Christians might be built up in the faith, more experienced members nourished and strengthened, and seekers after truth led into the light.

Regarding the last-named class, we think with our correspondent that there is still something to be said. We know how largely the subject bulks in the minds of ministers, and how generally a specific opportunity is afforded for any who desire conversation on spiritual matters. But workers of experience are well aware that those really in a state of concern shrink from seeking an interview at an hour publicly announced, on account of the likelihood of meeting other visitors. Pastors gladly welcome inquirers at any hour, but their time is largely taken up with meetings when others are free from work or business; and the suggestion seems good to make it known that such difficulties will be dealt with at a particular gathering.

The Opium Traffic.

THE annual meeting of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade was held on Tuesday of last week in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall. The chair was taken by Sir J. W. Pease, M.P.

The report of the Executive Committee, after reviewing the work of the year, says that in consequence of recent confirmation of the views for which the Society has contended for nearly a quarter of a century, the joint board of the anti-opium organizations has thought it right to bring before Parliament the desirabilty of taking advantage of the present negotiations with China to restore to the Government of that country complete freedom for the suppression of the traffic. The Government are to be urged to communicate to China the assurance given by Sir James Fergusson in the House of Commons in 1891, that "China is perfectly free to prohibit the opium trade," and to diminish the cultivation of the poppy in India, in accordance with the promise given by Mr. W. H. Smith in 1891, and confirmed by the House of Commons in 1893.

Among the first speakers were Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., and Rev. A. Elwin (C.M.S.). The latter contended that the Chinese should be allowed to know that if they propose to put a prohibitive duty on opium we should not send gunboats and soldiers to prevent them. We certainly ought to pay attention to the testimony of Sir Robert Hart in his recent articles in the Fortnightly Review. Rev. F. Brown and others followed, advocating the claims of the Society, and advancing reasons for immediate action on the part of the authorities.

The King of Italy has sent a donation of £40 to the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, and in doing so strongly commended the work of the association, and expressed his most ardent wishes for its success.

Scottish Notes.

THE usual half-yearly meetings of Christians have been arranged to take place in Glasgow, from Saturday, 6, to Tuesday, April 9.

The Moderator-elect of the Church of Scotland (Rev. Dr. Mitchell, of South Leith) presided last week over a meeting of the Anti-Gambling League, when Dr. Monro Gibson—speaking as a life-long abstainer—declared his belief that, terrible as is the curse of drink, the curse of gambling is much worse.

A Leith magistrate says, that while Glasgow has one licensed house to 437 inhabitants, Edinburgh one to 390, and Paisley one to 444, his own town has one to 250.

At the annual meeting of the West Coast Mission, held in Glasgow last week, Rev. Dr. Black (chairman) explained the need for such work arises from the fact that many people in the West Highlands live so far away from churches as to be seldom or never able to attend. The duty of the missionaries was to attend to the spiritual needs of those, old and young alike, not otherwise reached. He was happy to say that the efficiency of the Mission was well maintained, and its funds kept up. The other speakers were Rev. James Muir, Rev. Evan Grant, Rev. John Urquhart, Rev. Dr. Adamson, Rev. J. D. McCulloch, and Rev. James McEwan.

An important meeting of ministers and office-bearers of the different churches was held in Dundee last week, for the purpose of explaining the object and scope of the special services which it is proposed to hold throughout the city during the first week of April. The speakers were unanimous as to the great need for more aggressive work, and special emphasis was placed on the prevalence of irreverence among the younger men and women. One speaker said what was really wanted was a demonstration of the unity among Christian people—they could not hope to deal in one week with the housing problem, or that of drink, but they could show in one week that they were united in loyalty to Christ.

At a meeting last week, Chief Constable Dewar, of Dundee, gave a résumé of the history of the industrial school movement in Scotland, and stated that during the year ending June 15, 1853, there were no fewer than 1,953 persons under sixteen years of age committed to prison in Scotland. Within five years thereafter, during which time a number of industrial schools had been established, the number of annual committals fell to a little over 1,000; while, during 1899, the number of committals on conviction was only 311. These results he attributed to the operation of industrial schools, the provision of which holds a foremost place in the beneficent legislation of the Victorian era, but sufficient advantage was not taken of them on account of the nature of these statutes not being sufficiently known and understood.

Last Thursday, at the annual meeting of the Scottish Licensed Trade Protection Association, attention was called with satisfaction to the fact that at last general election nine Scottish seats were lost to the local veto party; and that now thirty-four Scottish members are opposed to the measure, five abstain from expressing themselves on the subject, leaving only thirty-three to vote for the Bill. It is the intention of the Association to oppose the Child Messenger Bill "through thick and thin, so long as the punishment for infraction of it is made to fall on the licensee and not on the parent or guardian who sends the child to the public-house." It is very hard for an outsider to understand how members can believe it to be "a well-known fact that you could go on reducing licences to such an extent that you did not decrease but increased drunkenness."

At the last meeting of the Edinburgh Sabbath Society, Rev. John Dickson delivered a lecture on "The Adaptation of the Sabbath to the Temporal Welfare of the Working Classes." "Sabbath desecration was," he said, "demoralizing from physical and spiritual points of view, and he was persuaded that the opening of museums, picture galleries, and botanic garders, secular music and other entertainments, even sacred concerts, so-called, would not further the ends the promoters had in view, however well intentioned they might be, but would only lead to looser views on Sabbath observance, and to the detriment of much that was healthful for the present good and future happiness of mankind." It is disappointing that the same week should see the issue of a notice that, among other changes in the Institution, the Edinburgh Museum of Science and Art will, after the present month, be open on Sabbath afternoons.

The Bible Reading and Prayer Union is anxious that Christian workers should use the present opportunity of drawing the attention of young Christians to the advantages afforded by the card, issued annually, of guidance in daily Bible readings, as well as direction and help in prayer. The British secretary (Rev. Dr. J. B. Paton, 22, Forest Road West, Nottingham) offers to send copies to missioners or secretaries wishing to use the card.

Welsh Notes.

REV. W. CUFF, President of the Baptist Union, and Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A., are to visit South Wales shortly on behalf of the Baptist Twentieth Century Fund. They will hold meetings in the chief populous centres.

Two Welsh ministers have just been sent out by the Colonial Missionary Society to undertake work in the Colonies. One, the Rev. H. Lloyd, of Conway, goes to South Africa, where he will have the pastoral charge of a coloured church, numbering about 1,000 members.

Previous to his return to China, Rev. Hopkyn Rees was made the recipient of a sum of nearly £200. This sum was collected by Rev. T. Johns, of Llanelly, last year's president of the Welsh Congregational Union, with a view to enabling the distinguished missionary to make good the loss sustained by him during the recent rebellion in China, when the whole of his library was destroyed.

Irish Notes.

THE annual meeting on behalf of Irish Church Missions has just been held in the Palace, Stephen's Green, Dublin. The Archbishop presided, and encouraging addresses were delivered by Revs. Phillip Johnson, Canon Leet, and others. In his Lenten Pastoral the Roman Catholic Bishop of Limerick bitterly attacked these missions, an almost certain evidence that they are doing good work.

In connection with Presbyterian Home Missions, Rev. Dr. Woodside, of Ballinasloe, has been addressing meetings in various centres in the North of Ireland, and has been giving an encouraging account of his work in the South and West. For one thing he stated that in 1850 they had only about six members in Ballinasloe, and that now they have over eighty.

The work of the Dublin City Mission has been carried on in three centres during the year with much vigour, and the attendance at the various meetings has been well maintained. Free breakfasts have been continued, and arrangements have been made to give tea on certain evenings to poor children. The death of Mr. William Howat, J.P., however, has been a great loss to the mission as he always took a deep interest in its efforts.

An interesting reunion of Methodist ministers and their families resident in Belfast and the neighbourhood was held last week in Carlisle Memorial Hall, Belfast. There were about 250 persons present, and after tea family worship was conducted by Revs. Wesley Guard and Dr. Nicholas. A brief address of welcome was also delivered by Mr. Guard as Chairman of the District. The meeting was the second of the kind ever held in Belfast, the first having been held about seven years ago, and it was very pleasant and enjoyable.

Under the new County Councils in the greater part of Ireland, there is scarcely a position of any kind which is not being filled at present by a Roman Catholic and for which a Protestant need not apply. Indeed nearly everywhere Protestant employees are being dismissed without cause in order to make room for Roman Catholics. The idea seems to be to either starve Protestants out of the country or coerce them to become Roman Catholics. The effort, however, will not succeed. Persecution always recoils on the persecutors.

A valedictory service, in which representatives of all the Churches united, was held last Thursday evening in Wellington Hall, Belfast, to bid farewell to Rev. Dr. John G. Paton, of the New Hebrides Mission, who is returning to his work in the South Seas after visiting various parts of this country. Mr. Robert Anderson, J.P., presided, and sympathetic addresses were delivered by Revs. Henry Montgomery, Dr. Robertson, Usher Greer, and Mr. D. A. Black. Dr. Paton stated that when he went to the New Hebrides infanticide and murder were prevalent there, but now there are in the islands 18,000 professed Christians, with 3,000 church members and 300 Gospel teachers. Besides, family worship is carried on in nearly every home.

The Blackgang Mission.—Patient continuance in well-doing characterizes the labours of the workers of the Blackgang Mission. In no department are the numbers large, but each worker toils with heartiness and sincerity. From time to time series of evangelistic services are conducted, in addition to the usual meetings in the Mission Hall. At these seasons numbers have been gathered into the fold. Among the children an encouraging work is being done, and the Sunday school and Christian Endeavour Society give promise of growing usefulness. A workers' house is much needed, and a piece of land adjoining the mission hall is reserved for its erection when circumstances permit. The secretary is Miss Edith M. S. Smith, 4, Cliff Terrace, Blackgang, I.W.

Church Missionary Society.

WHILE political questions in China are so generally occupying public attention, it is well that efforts should be put forth to emphasize the high importance of missionary work in the country.

The services and meetings to this end held on Thursday last in connection with the Church Missionary Society were both opportune and stimulating. The day began with a Communion service at St. Bride's, Fleet Street, Rev. H. E. Fox officiating, asissted by Rev. G. Tonge (secretary of the C.E.Z.M.S.). Archdeacon Moule, for so many years intimately connected with missionary work in China, preached an appealing sermon from 2 Cor. v. 14, "For the love of Christ constraineth us."

In the afternoon a women's meeting was held at the Mission House, the large Committee-room being crowded. A devotional address was given by Miss Bradshaw, of Dublin. Following this came the usual weekly prayer meeting of the C.M.S., and in the evening there was a public meeting in Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W. Colonel Robert Williams, treasurer of the Society, speaking from the chair, said that they met on behalf of a great dumb mass of 350,000,000 people. Proceeding, he replied to some Press comments, saying that it has been shown conclusively that unmarried ladies can and do work with advantage in China. There can be no objection to their going if they use that which should be part of the equipment of any missionary—sanctified common-sense. Col. Williams said they were confident that what has happened in China will ultimately lead to an increase in the number of openings for missionary effort.

Addresses were given by Miss Vaughan, Mrs. O. M. Jackson, and other lady missionaries.

Bible Society of Scotland.

THE annual meeting of the National Bible Society of Scotland was held in Edinburgh on Wednesday of last week, Lord Overtoun presiding. The report, presented by Rev. James S. Nisbet, showed that the issues for the year 1900 had been 116,886 Bibles, 164,613 Testaments, and 660,036 portions, in all 941,535. These figures were only 13,857 short of the circulation of the record year of the Society, 1899; and but for famine and plague in India, and the outbreak in China, which brought nearly all mission work in that country to a standstill, the million of circulation towards which the society has been advancing would in all probability have been reached.

The Chairman, in his address, said it was interesting to note that during last century, which was notable as the century of foreign missions and of Bible circulation, the Bible societies of the land had been able to send forth 280,000,000 copies of the sacred volume, in 400 different languages. Mr. James Murray, agent for Western China, explained how the large reading population in that country had led the Bible Societies to devote a large amount of attention to it. He believed the proportion of readers was greater than in such European countries as Spain and Portugal. Giving a brief résumé of the great upheaval which took place last year, he drew special attention to two facts—(1) that the Emperor is known to be very much influenced in favour of reform, being (in the opinion of many) almost, if not altogether, a Christian; and that the large numbers of native Christians who might have escaped death by renouncing their faith had remained true to Christ at the expense of life itself.

Rev. Dr. Alex. Mair, Rev. Dr. Ross Taylor, and Mr. William Nairn were appointed vice-presidents of the Society; and the Earl of Moray chairman of the Board. The other speakers were Rev. Robert H. Fisher (Edinburgh), Rev. Dr. John Ross (Manchuria), and Sir Archibald S. L. Campbell, Bart., of Succoth.

British College Christian Union.—The Summer Conference of the B.C.C.U. is to be held at Matlock, beginning on July 23, and closing on August 1. The Student Movement says:—"It is the earnest wish of the Executive that all Christian Unions shall do their utmost to secure the attendance of each secretary, president, and as many of the committee as possible at the Conference. After observation we do not hesitate to say that more Unions have been strengthened by having had their officers present at the Summer Conference than from any other single cause during the present year."

Letters to the Editor.

Prayer for Peace.

SIR,—It has been much on the hearts of many that we are not seeking after God in prayer as we should do for the termination of this sad war in South Africa, between us and those who are our kindred in blood and faith. When we humbled ourselves before God, at the instance of the Evangelical Alliance and other Christians, God delivered our beleaguered ones in the various parts which the Boers had invaded; yet, since, we seem greatly to have ceased praying! It seems to me that, however our opinions may differ on this war, there should be full agreement between Christians as to the desirability of its being ended, and God says we shall receive if we "ask in faith." This we may well do, for we know assuredly God can end it at any time. X. A.

Prayer for the "Upper" Classes.

SIR,—About twenty-five years ago, when prayer was continuously being made for what were termed the lapsed masses, at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting (then held at the Albion Chapel, corner of London Wall), at one noon meeting prayer was offered specially for the upper classes, that the Lord would incline some of his children, having the entry into those circles of society, to declare the truths of the Gospel to them. The answer came, and gracious and blessed results followed through the instrumentality of Lord Radstock, Reginald Radcliffe, and other spiritually-minded brethren, in royal and aristocratic circles both on the Continent and in this country.

At the present time, when the hearts of many are gladdened by the success given in the open-air missions and tent campaigns among the working classes during the past season, should not earnest supplication again ascend to the Throne of Grace for the socially exalted of our fellow-creatures? Surely the calamities of war and death have riven many hearts, blighted many homes, and bereft many of the ruling families in our land of fathers, sons, and brothers, and widows and orphans have been greatly multiplied. Nothing can truly and fully comfort and heal but the personal knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the teaching and consolation of his Holy Spirit. Then let believing, earnest petitions arise from the hearts and voices of the Lord's children on their behalf, that they may know Him, whom to know is life eternal.

And soon our loving God and Father, who is "no respecter of persons," will graciously respond to such appeals, and rich and poor alike will praise and glorify Him for his mercy and comforting love. This is the earnest desire of a believer in Unity in Prayer.

The Y.M.C.A. in Japan.

DEAR SIR,—I was much interested some years ago in visiting the Y.M.C.A. in Vienna, Berlin, Dresden, and other German cities, and observing the enormous power for good these unions were doing. Japan, too, has its Y.M.C.A. The Tokio branch has a magnificent hall, built at a cost of 15,000dols., and mostly by American help. This hall is the centre of religious work in the Japanese capital. The Osaka Association has also a commodious building, the gift largely of foreign Christians. A third branch was formed some years ago at Kobe—thirty years back a meagre fishing village, now a city of 230,000 inhabitants. It flourished for a time and did good work, but it had to be discontinued, owing largely to the lack of a suitable room. About two years ago this branch was revived by the young men of the eight Protestant churches in Kobe, and at the opening service the United States Consul, Mr. S. S. Lyon, and other prominent gentlemen were present and took part, warmly urging the need of such an association in Kobe. Lieut. Hobson (of Santiago fame) also gave an able and encouraging address. The great need of the Association is a suitable hall for its public meetings, which at present are held at various churches. It was proposed at the meeting in question to 10,000 yen (5,000dols.) to secure a site in the centre of the city, and to build on it. For this purpose 1,000 yen have been promised, chiefly by the officers of the Association.

Rev. T. Harada, pastor of the Congregational Church in Kobe (who attended the Christian Endeavour Convention in England last summer), was commissioned to call en route on Mr. R. C. Morse in New York, and on Sir George Williams in London. Both these gentlemen have warmly endorsed and supported the Kobe Y.M.C.A. undertaking. But the scheme is yet far from complete. Mr. Harada has returned to Japan, but he has entrusted me with the matter, so far as this country is concerned. Japan needs our help greatly. The Tokio University registers show that an overwhelming majority of the students matriculating are agnostics. Yours heartily,

Avary H. Forbes, Hon. Treasurer,

About Books.

ANOTHER BOOK ON CHINA.

IN his book China from Within, or the Story of the Chinese Crisis, Mr. Stanley P. Smith does much to assist a more general understanding of recent events in China. (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.). Of the fifteen chapters, the first ten have been compiled from different sources; so, in closing, Mr. Stanley Smith modestly calls his book a compilation. As the preface explains, from the nature of the case the work had to take such a form; the events spoken of are most truthfully and graphically described in the language of eye-witnesses. The compilation has been thoroughly well done; if the pages show little literary cohesion, they nevertheless make a powerful impression by the stirring story they unfold.

This book is precisely what it professes to be—a story of the Chinese crisis. Beginning with the Emperor Kuang-Hsü and the Reform Movement, it describes the reactionaries and their policy, and sets forth the terms of the famous inflammatory edicts. What follows is well known, but it could not have been outlined better than here, largely in the words of missionary and newspaper correspondents. The chapter entitled "The Punishment of Peking," is an article reproduced from the North China Herald, and written by Rev. Dr. Arthur H. Smith, the author of that remarkable book, "Chinese Characteristics." The sad story will often be rehearsed; here it is told with much animation and striking effect.

Discussing "The Causes of the Uprising," Mr. Stanley Smith holds that the pride, ignorance, and superstition, both of the Empress Dowager and of high-placed officials, nearly all of them Manchus, is responsible for much—indeed, constitutes the chief cause of the uprising. Dealing with "China's Need of True Religion," he strikes a note that is emphatically evangelical; and, in conclusion, expresses the hope that, as an outcome of the perusal of his book, "some who have not yet decided how they shall lay out the one life they have at their disposal, may be led to consider the claims of this great nation on their services." He adds: "Great Britain would not be the loser, but only a gainer, if many of her most gifted, most learned, and most holy, went out into the great heathen fields." These words have all the more force as coming from one who has acted out the conviction which they so tersely express.

THE LATE DR. LANDELS.

A VOLUME of varied interest is William Landels, D.D.: A Memoir. By his Son, Thomas D. Landels, M.A. (6s. Cassell & Co.). The pages tell the story of a remarkable man, and are characterized by religious sympathy and literary grace. Dr. Landels was devoted as a pastor, great as a preacher and lecturer, and singularly able as a denominational leader and administrator. Not that these lines of work among the Baptists of the United Kingdom cover the range of his Christian service; whether at Cupar or Birmingham, in London or in Edinburgh, Dr. Landels was a large-hearted man, disposed, wherever possible, to co-operate with others in Gospel interests and for human well-being.

Dr. Landels exercised a powerful influence by his writings on the highest of themes. He was an enthusiast on the subject of foreign missions, in behalf of which cause he was a veritable "prince of beggars." His part, along with Dr. Brock and Mr. Spurgeon, in founding the London Baptist Association, and other organizations that are still with us, forms a specially interesting section of the book. Bold in controversy, Dr. Landels was often in hot water, and sometimes the criticism of his brethren was justified by his incautious language and broadness of statement.

From first to last this is a good book, and there is a beautiful portrait. In a brief introduction Dr. John Clifford bears testimony to the esteem in which the memory of his predecessor in the Presidential Chair of the Baptist Union is held, and contributions from Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington, and Mr. A. H. Baynes, secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, speak of his work for his brethren and his generation.

Flowers of the Cave is the title of a volume of thoughts on Death and the Future Life, compiled and edited by Laurie Magnus, M.A., and Cecil Headlam, B.A. (5s. Blackwood & Sons). The excerpts are in prose and poetry, from Divine Revelation and from heathen writers. Many beautiful things are here, and much that is of deep interest. The pages will minister comfort to thoughtful readers; as the last section is devoted to selections from the New Testament, we would fain hope that those who begin will finish, and be impressed for good with the concluding and most inspiring message of the book.

Notes & Comments

In response to the inquiries of many readers we give early intimation of the intention to issue in volume form the papers now appearing in our pages on "Foundation Truths of the Gospel." From all quarters we are receiving testimonies of the usefulness of these papers, and we are convinced that when collected they will fulfil an extended ministry in the interest of Gospel truth. Meantime, in compliance with a widely-expressed desire, Rev. William Crosbie's very timely article on The Atonement has been issued as a neat booklet. (6d. per doz.; 3s. 6d. per 100. Morgan & Scott.)

One of the incidental but important results of the Simultaneous Mission of the Free churches will be a fresh emphasis on the order of evangelist or missioner in the churches. This great effort has conclusively shown that the gifts required for this work are largely distinct (as suggested in more than one passage in the Epistles) from those that make for success in the "regular" ministry. Dr. Horton has summarized the lesson in the following pregnant paragraph, which may be commended to the attention of the churches in view of the experiences of the last few weeks:

> The prophet, the pastor, the teacher may quite conceivably not be a missioner. On the other hand, a man without theological training, with little or no education, and without graces of style and diction, may be gifted with that most glorious spiritual power of drawing souls to Christ. The Free Churches should recognize the order of evangelist—should seek out, equip, and send forth such evangelists as the Spirit endows. Along with the steady work of the pastors and teachers, the work of the evangelists should be carried on in every town and village.

A ministerial correspondent of a contemporary touches a note which is needed at the present moment. Referring to the converts of the late evangelistic effort, he says:

> I wish to draw attention to the need of very earnest work among the inquirers after the Mission has closed. One of the greatest possible mistakes is to think that when people have "passed through the inquiry-room" they are all right. The simple fact is that every grade of religious intelligence, and almost all degrees of religious sincerity, are found among so-called "inquirers." And no case can be considered in the least satisfactory in which there is not a whole-hearted surrender to Christ, an intelligent comprehension of the way of salvation by faith, and a definite assurance of personal acceptance. But earnest workers are too often in undue haste to see inquirers "made happy."

This word should be very welcome. The most jealous care needs to be exercised in dealing with recent inquirers. Many so-called "backsliders" are simply persons who have taken an initial step towards the Saviour, and who have gone no further.

There are tens of thousands in London who are never touched by church or mission hall. The hooligan districts are practically without Christian influence of any sort. How are these to be reached? Only by personal work done in their very midst—in the wretched dens they call their homes. It is comparatively easy to become enthusiastic over picturesque heathen in distant parts of the world, but when shall we see the same enthusiasm for the heathen who swarm in London? God be thanked for the splendid work which is already being done by numerous agencies, but there is very much land yet to be possessed, and many who might possess it are at present doing nothing.

It is well we should occasionally be reminded that the work of God is not limited to special arrangements. There were congregations here and there which were more or less excluded from the scope of the Simultaneous Mission, but this did not necessarily prevent them from sharing in the blessing. At Elmgrove Free Church, Hayling Island, it was felt that "a stir up" was required, but no special missioner was available.

> Some of our own members were chosen for the purpose, and the mission was continued for eight days. The church has never had such times before. Members who had never spoken in prayer, never engaged openly in the Lord's work, were moved by the Spirit; others were saved. My reason for writing is that our experience may encourage smaller Churches, like ourselves, not to be so dependent upon outside efforts, but to utilize their own workers.

We commend the message to those for whom the help of man may have failed: the message of God may come to one church through the organization; to another the very failure of plans may be the channel of grace.

A pertinent letter on the attempts being made by Romanists to secure an alteration of the Coronation Oath appears on page 19. The Roman Catholic Peers and other agitators might perhaps endeavour also to obtain an amendment of the Papal Bull, Exurge Domine, in which Luther's assertion "that heretics should be burned is contrary to the will of the Spirit," is designated as being "heretical, scandalous, false, and offensive to pious ears, suited to lead astray simple minds, and contrary to Catholic truth." But to repeal this startling declaration of faith would upset the Romish doctrine of Papal Infallibility.

The appointment to the bishopric of London will not satisfy the desires of the out-and-out Evangelicals. Dr. Winnington-Ingram is a High Churchman, but one of the more generous type, and willing to act with Nonconformists in social work. Intellectually he is of a mould that differs greatly from the one in which Dr. Temple and Dr. Creighton were shaped; but this may not be against him as a working bishop. He has moved about among the people more than most ecclesiastics, and while he sympathizes with human needs, he enjoys popular confidence and respect in a large degree. As Bishop of Stepney he has come to know his duty; as an open-air preacher for many years he has shown a willingness to employ unconventional methods in parochial and other work. He has undertaken a great and difficult task, and all should wish him Divine help and guidance.

The question of Church Reform occupies a foremost place in some of the leading magazines this month. Most people will be somewhat astonished at the drastic measure proposed by Lord Hugh Cecil, and he evidently speaks for others besides himself. The Bishop of Hereford, writing in the Nineteenth Century, strongly advocates the establishment of parochial Church Councils, through which laymen may exercise a measure of congregational government. He suggests that by this means unwelcome practices could be prevented from being imposed upon congregations.

The weakness of the proposal must be apparent to everybody. Romanizers would speedily see to it that their councils were composed of persons favourable to their views. A Ritualistic congregation would not be likely to appoint Evangelical overseers. Where, then, would be the gain of having these councils? Of all the proposals we have seen, not one really touches the heart of the whole question, viz., whether the Church of England is Romish or Protestant, and where is the authority that can firmly decide this fundamental question? Until this is done, no scheme of reform can possibly work. Are there no leading men who can address themselves to this important matter?

The Church of England is one of the richest Churches in the world. But owing to the depreciation in the value of tithes, and other causes, the growing poverty of the rank and file of the clergy is pitiful and pathetic. Preaching for the Queen Victoria Clergy Fund at St. Paul's, the Bishop of Peterborough stated, that of 581 benefices in his diocese, there were sixty-one averaging £45 a year; while in all England there are 1,341 under £100, and £4,566 under £200 per annum. A considerable proportion of the clergy are not altogether dependent on their ecclesiastical income, but making allowance for these, the distress which affects large numbers of noble and self-sacrificing men in the Anglican ministry, and the privations forced on them and their families, is appalling, none the less that so little complaint is made by most of them. But can nothing be done for these tried servants of God by the mass of Church people?

The fourth of a series of exceptionally well informed articles upon "The Outbreak and the Outlook in China" appears in the current number of the Church Missionary Intelligencer. The writer, who hides his identity behind initials, seems to have grasped the entire situation, and he presents it in a striking and luminous manner. His conclusions with regard to the Chinese hatred of foreigners are thus expressed:—

> We think we have made it reasonably clear that hatred of foreigners does exist in the breasts of the Manchu Government of China and of their Manchu subordinates, while evidence is wanting that such hatred exists amongst the Chinese people until it is created by officials.

This is an important distinction to make, and one which has been frequently overlooked, even where it has been comprehended. It certainly opens a wide door of hope for the future, since it presents the common people in a better light than that in which for some time they have been regarded. The Committee of the C.M.S. would render especial service by reprinting this series of articles in a cheap form for wide distribution.

Mr. Brodrick's proposals on behalf of the Government for army reform will be received with dismay by all true lovers of peace. They involve a permanent increase in the standing army of 125,000 men, bringing it up to over a million; a large annual addition to the military Budget; and a veiled suggestion that if they are not accepted and acted upon the spectre of conscription looms large in the background. While these proposals seem for the moment to have been received with general applause in the secular journals, the better sense of the nation will not be long before it insists on qualitative rather than quantitative reforms in the organization of the army. The disasters of the South African campaign have been occasioned, not by the paucity of men, but by the inefficiency of the leadership, and the unpreparedness of the Government in meeting contingencies—evils which do not seem to have sufficiently impressed the Cabinet in making these proposals.

It is to be devoutly hoped that the country will awake to the great and pressing danger of being carried away by the sense of military failures in the past and of diplomatic troubles in the future, into considering for a moment the feasibility of the principle of conscription, as applied to our army. To follow the lead of Continental nations in this matter would be to turn back the clock of progress, and indefinitely delay the happy hour when the iron system, which is just now strangling the life and freedom of Europe, will be cast aside. The present evil is that the humiliations that have lately come upon us may foster a tendency to acquiesce in "reforms" which will only land us in a remedy that is worse than the disease.

Lord Roberts, speaking at the War Office last week at a Council of the Army Temperance Association, made a gratifying reference to the behaviour of the men in South Africa during the present campaign in regard to sobriety and self-restraint in an enemy's country. It had been remarked to him on many occasions how very different the men were to almost all former campaigns. He cheerfully gave a large part of the credit for this to the good work on behalf of temperance done in the Army of late years. It is also gratifying to note that Lord Roberts' appeal to the public not to put temptation to drink and licentiousness before our returned soldiers in welcoming them home has borne very general fruit.

A placard issued by the Sporting League, in connection with the London County Council election, and which received the approval, in some constituencies at least, of the "Moderate" candidates, describes the members who have laboured for purity and righteousness as "the Puritanical party" and "faddists," who "inherit the worst traits of their predecessors of the dark days of the Commonwealth." It is worth noting that the men so singled out are charged with seeking, among other things,

(1) To suppress the sport of horse-racing whenever the opportunity presents itself.
(2) To suppress the sale of beer, wines, and spirits on racecourses and at places of amusement.
(3) To encourage factious and unjustifiable opposition to the renewal of theatrical and music-hall licences.

Such an attack upon public and individual liberty is without parallel in either our Parliamentary or municipal history, and unless strong measures are taken at the polls to put down the conspiracy, grave results must ensue in the immediate future.

It will be a source of satisfaction to Christian people to learn that the attack on some of the most flagrant evils of our time is regarded by the supporters of them as so serious, and that substantially the outcome of the contests was unfavourable to the publishers of the placard, though some workers have realized as never before the boldness of the enemy.

Principal Lang, of Aberdeen, has just completed his Baird Lectures in Glasgow, the general subject being, "The Present Day Social Work of the Church." To the oft-repeated foolish charge that the Church of Christ neglects the present in favour of a future life, the professor has offered a brilliant and convincing reply, in which he makes history speak, and shows that in very deed the people of God have been the salt of the earth, saving society from corruption. At the same time he is candid enough to point out the great weakness which still exists in many quarters which are nominally Christian. Thus:—

There is frequently, too, a frigid climate in Churches which makes them unattractive to multitudes. In the house of God there is neither the capitalist nor the labourer, neither the bourgeoisie nor the proletariat.

This is old enough; but it needs perpetually saying, for people are apt to forget it. In the suburbs especially there is a tendency towards preserving the exclusiveness of congregations. This is simply fatal to true Christian work. No Church can successfully approach all sorts and conditions of men, unless it is prepared to open its doors to all, and to write over them legibly, "The rich and the poor meet together. The Lord is the Maker of them all."

Rev. J. H. Jowett, in one of his charming "Week-night Meditations," now appearing in The Examiner, on the text "Make no provision for the flesh," deals with the great principle of conquering our besetting sins by starvation, by refusing to provide the mental nourishment on which they thrive. There is no method more absolutely efficient and assured in its working than the method of "destruction by neglect."

"Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out." Deny the fuel, you exhaust the flame. If the enemy in thy spirit hunger, starve him. If we surround him with plentiful food, if he finds rich provision for his maintenance, he will speedily become full-grown and tyrannical; but if we starve him, he will never be "fulfilled," he will pass away of sheer exhaustion.

The practical teaching here is real, and the method accessible to all. It is because men brood over sins in imagination beforehand that they become actual facts afterwards. Sin cannot, any more than goodness, thrive in a vacuum.

It has been pointed out that the recently published second volume of the Encyclopedia Biblica, which has been referred to as one of the most important books of the month, has no article upon Jesus Christ, the article under the heading, Jesus, being simply a bibliographical one of a few pages. The omission is all the more remarkable in view of the inclusion of an article upon Faith. The latter is, however, mere "theological dissection;" for the very essence of faith, the apprehension of a living Christ, does not appear in it. And such dry bones the exponents of the so-called Higher Criticism would have us substitute for the ever-springing life to be found in the Saviour, and for that personal communion which each believer has with the Christ who lived, and died, and is alive for evermore.

A striking illustration of the tendency of some modern scientists to make startling generalizations, and to run in advance of their leaders, was afforded the other day by the Hunterian Orator at the Royal College of Surgeons, Mr. N. C. Macnamara, who stated:

From an analysis of the maximum number of anatomical characters common to man and to anthropoid apes, it was proved that they were descended from the same stock.

As a matter of fact the point in question is just the one that has not been proved, but the unjustifiable assertion will reach many who are not in a position to question its accuracy.

It is useful to remember that, as the best scientific literature of the day amply shows, the leading men in science are far from agreed that Evolution is an established truth. Darwin himself acknowledged that the older and honoured chiefs did not accept it, and in quite recent times, amongst other eminent naturalists, Buckland, Gwynn, Agassiz, Giebel, and the greatest of Paleozoic paleontologists have rejected the theory, the latter having in fact termed it "a figment of the imagination." There is indeed a strong feeling against Evolution. Sir William Dawson, too, one of the greatest geologists, characterized the doctrine as "in itself one of the strangest phenomena of humanity, . . . A system destitute of any shadow of truth."

It is not unusual for those who raise objections against the inspiration of the Bible to fasten upon some small points which are stated not to be in accord with science. Such cavillers carefully abstain from drawing attention to the many instances in which the statements of God's Word were in advance of modern discovery. Recent scientific investigation has placed man in a position to write in majestic strains of the wonders of creation; but take such a passage as Isa. xi. 12-18, with its magnificent summary of the power and knowledge of the Creator, and reflect that the reverent testimony to the glory and greatness of God was that of a man who had no knowledge of the velocity of light, the immeasurable distances of the planets and stars, and who had not the faintest idea that there were any worlds larger than our own. Then try to account for the exalted strains upon any other theory than that of the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. In comparison with such a passage, how weak and feeble does even so noble a work as Dr. Chalmers' Astronomical Discourses seem, despite its scholarship and devout feeling!

Our aged friend, Mr. Martin Hope Sutton, has conferred a benefit upon this generation of young men engaged in business by the republication of two addresses delivered by him in 1858 and 1869 respectively. The title is Practical Hints to Young Men Engaged in Business. (Simpkin, Marshall, & Co. 1s.) The book is doubly valuable because the principles enunciated forty years ago have been vindicated by a long, honourable, honoured, and successful business life. The adoption of them will lead to the like results. We therefore commend these words of wisdom to men of business, employers, and employed.

We hail with unqualified satisfaction the most thorough examination of "the grave issues raised about the Son of God, and the sources of our Christian faith, by much modern criticism of the Word of God." Rev. Hugh M'Intosh has spent his leisure time during several years in the study of these vital issues, and has published his discussions and conclusions in a volume entitled "Is Christ Infallible and the Bible True?" (T. & T. Clark, 700 pp., 9s.) His well-sustained contention is that these critics must abandon their theories or their Christianity. They cannot run with the hare and hunt with the hounds. The book is divided into sections, so as to make the reading easy. It ought to be in the hands of all teachers and preachers.

Getting, Saving, Giving.

By Rev. EDWARD STORROW.

IT is cause for serious thought that whilst no country was ever so wealthy as our own, or so free from great calamities, the anxieties of life are not seriously diminished. This anxiety leads to—(a) Too high an estimate of the value of money; (b) Eager and inordinate saving; (c) Worry and discontent; (d) The neglect of Christian giving.

The relief from humiliation and care that money brings; the pleasure of its possession; the enjoyments to which it allures, and the estimation in which it is held, blind us to its deceitful and dangerous influence, and lead to a false estimate of the ends and aims of life, to envy and to discontent. How often, for instance, as men grow richer, they become less spiritual and holy, acquire a false estimate of men and things, a contempt for those who do not succeed in life as they have done, and a habit of judging all persons, not by a moral standard, but the ability to get and keep money. It is irrational to speak contemptuously of money, seeing that it gives so much pleasure and confers so much power, and is so eagerly seized and so unwillingly parted with! but it is important to keep in mind its subordinate value, its limitations, its dangers and responsibilities, its corrupting influence; for how seldom with the increase of wealth is there "growth in grace," and of all dangers to the soul the Bible speaks more frequently and solemnly of this than of almost any other.

The love of money often lies concealed under the plausible guise of providing for old age, or the necessities of a family. It is right to make such provision whenever practicable, but how often under this plausible idea does there lurk a craving to hoard, or it grows to be a ruling passion after the original intention has been accomplished. The worry and solicitude of living are apt to make us discontented with our lot, envious of others, and distrustful of the care of God. When it is so, it is good for us to read some of those sweet and saintly hymns which sorely tried men have composed, or to meditate on the grand, strong words of God scattered through the Scriptures.
